It is advisable to add a dash of salt to cake mixtures. As salt helps to make egg whites beat well, the salt may be added to whites before beating. Or the salt may be put with the baking powder into the flour and be sifted into the cake with the flour. Sifting flour three times before measuring tends to increase the lightness of the cake. This is because the sifting process lightens the flour, which decreases the amount just a trifle.

Now Science Explains Why So Many People Past 40

Feel That They're Slipping Losing Their "Grip" on Things

Many people 'round 40 think they're "growing old." They feel tired a lot . . . "weak." Have headaches, dizziness, stomach upsets.

Well, scientists say the cause of all this, in a great many cases, is simply an acid condition of the stomach. Nothing more.

All you have to do is to neutralize the excess stomach acidity.

When you have one of these acid stomach upsets, take Phillips' Milk of Magnesia after meals and before going to bed. That's all!

Try this. Soon you'll feel like another person! Take either the familiar liquid "PHILLIPS'" or the convenient new Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets.

ALSO IN TABLET FORM: Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets are now on sale at all drug stores everywhere. Each tiny tablet is the equivalent of a teaspoonful of Genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

Bankers and President Roosevelt Move Toward an Accord; War Clouds Still Hover Over Balkans; Legion for Bonus Cash Payment.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© by Western Newspaper Union.

FOUR thousand or so financiers gathered in Washington for the annual convention of the American Bankers' association, and it became apparent at once that they were far from unanimous in their opinions concerning the economic policies of the New Deal. Francis Marion Law of Houston, Texas, retiring president of the association, gave out an interview in which he said he believed that economic recovery had arrived at a point where bankers of the United States could honestly advise business men to go into debt again in order to put idle bank reserves to work. Further, he stated that bankers feel that the securities of the United States government are the best investment "on the face of the earth" and that there need be no concern over the condition of government credit.

What made this expression especially noteworthy was the fact that only recently the federal advisory council, composed of leading bankers, issued a warning that government credit was being menaced by the unbalanced condition of the federal budget and the unstabilized dollar.

Then appeared before the bankers in Constitution hall President Roosevelt himself and made an appeal for "an alliance of all forces intent upon the business of recovery." He called on the banks to lend more money to finance the New Deal program.

"Government should assert its leadership in encouraging not only confidence of the people in banks but the confidence of the banks in the people," he said.

"In March, 1933, I asked the people of this country to renew their confidence in banks. They took me at my word. Tonight I ask the bankers of this country to renew their confidence in the people of this country. I think you will take me at my word."

He said that the administration stood squarely back of continuance of the profit system and that emergency activities would be curtailed as fast as private business could pick up the load.

It was noted that the President made no promise to balance the budget or to stabilize the currency; also that he did not comment on the proposal to create a central bank. His talk was heartily applauded, but many of his hearers were far from satisfied.

Before Mr. Roosevelt spoke, the bankers were addressed by Jackson Reynolds, president of the First National bank of New York and a stanch sound money advocate. He appealed for co-operation with the President, highly praising his efforts at rehabilitation and saying:

"If the government and the banks continue in the role of antagonists it will invoke the gravest consequences to our country, perhaps even the destruction of many institutions and principles we have long held dear.

"The poor, whom we have always with us, will not be much worse off. The rich will survive in comfort at least, as they always have, but the great stratum of our people between these two groups will be irretrievably ruined.

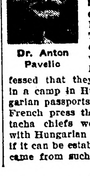
"If, on the other hand, we abandon our antagonism for friendly, understanding, sympathetic co-operation, I believe we can make a great contribution toward the perpetuation of our cherished institutions, the encouragement of our fellow citizens, and the gradual and sound rebuilding of the shattered economic and financial structure of our country."

Further overtures to the bankers were made by Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance corporation, and J. F. T. O'Connor, comptroller of the currency. Both of them gave assurance that the economic condition of the country is sound, and Mr. Jones urged the bankers to expand their loans to business.

To all this the bankers responded by unanimously adopting resolutions promising to co-operate with the government but demanding a balanced budget.

Rudolf S. Hecht of New Orleans was elected president of the association to succeed Mr. Law.

WAR clouds over central Europe are not dissipated by the partial solution of the plot that resulted in the assassination of King Alexander of Jugoslavia. It is established that the murder was the work of the Croatian group of terrorists called the Oustacha, and the head of the gang, Dr. Anton Pavelic, has been arrested, together with his assistant, Eugene Kvaternik. The three companions of the assassin, who were captured in France, have confessed that they trained for the job in a camp in Hungary and held Hungarian passports. It is charged in the French press that they or their Oustacha chiefs were in secret contact with Hungarian or Italian officials, and if it can be established that their funds came from such sources, most serious complications may result.



Dr. Anton Pavelic

The permanent councils of both the little entente and the Balkan entente, which include Rumania, Jugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Greece and Turkey, have issued identical communiques asserting their solidarity with Jugoslavia and laying responsibility for King Alexander's assassination upon terrorists urged on by the foreign policies of nations which were not named but which clearly are indicated to be Hungary and Italy.

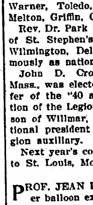
The communiques gave warning of a probable war unless "international measures are loyally adopted" to stop political assassination and conspiracy. Both the ententes decided to adopt common measures against all political conspirators.

So far, Hungary is bearing the brunt of the blame for the Marseilles assassination, but Premier Goemboes asserts his country is "entirely guiltless of any connection with the foul crime."

BREAKING records all along the route, M-10001, the new streamlined train of the Union Pacific, made an extraordinary run from Los Angeles to New York in 56 hours 55 minutes. The best previous time for a transcontinental train crossing was established in 1906, when the late E. H. Harriman, then chairman of the Union Pacific, traveled from San Francisco to New York in 71 hours 27 minutes.

The new tube-shaped train also established a world's speed record of 120 miles an hour as it sped from Buffalo to New York. The train passed over the 30-mile stretch of straight-away between Buffalo and Batavia, on which the Empire State Express of the New York Central achieved a speed of 112½ miles an hour on May 10, 1893.

IMMEDIATE cash payment of the veterans' bonus certificates was demanded by the American Legion in convention at Miami, Fla., despite the knowledge that it is opposed by President Roosevelt and the belief that he would veto any legislation providing for such payment. The vote was 987 to 183.



Frank Belgrano, Jr.

The Legion's new national commander is Frank Belgrano, Jr., of San Francisco, now a banker. All other candidates withdrew and Mr. Belgrano was elected unanimously. In his speech of acceptance he said he would conduct his office with vigor and determination and would give it his undivided attention.

"Our country is filled today with too much talk about isms," he said. "Everywhere we hear about Communism, Socialism, Fascism, Hitlerism, and others too numerous to mention.

"There is room in this country for only one ism. That is Americanism. Without equivocation or reservation, I say to you that under my administration this American Legion is a sworn enemy of every other ism. That is a declaration of war."

The following were elected as national vice commanders:

Daniel J. Doherty, Woburn, Mass.; Harold J. Warner, Pendleton, Ore.; John Kenelly, Mandan, N. D.; Milo J. Warner, Toledo, Ohio; and Quimby Melton, Griffin, Ga.

Rev. Dr. Park W. Huntington, pastor of St. Stephen's Lutheran church in Wilmington, Del., was chosen unanimously as national chaplain.

John D. Crowley of Cambridge, Mass., was elected chef du chemin de fer of the "40 and 8," play organization of the Legion, and Mrs. A. C. Carlson of Willmar, Minn., was elected national president of the American Legion auxiliary.

Next year's convention was awarded to St. Louis, Mo.

PROF. JEAN PICCARD made another balloon excursion into the stratosphere, and accompanying him was his plucky wife, Jeanette, the only licensed woman balloon pilot in the United States. They ascended from Detroit with their 600,000 cubic-foot bag, passed over Lake Erie, rose to a height of about ten miles, and then came down on a farm four miles west of Cadiz, Ohio. The gondola landed in a tree but the two occupants were only slightly bruised and scratched, and it was believed the delicate scientific instruments they carried were uninjured.

EIGHT federal officers led by Melvin Purvis, head of the Justice department's bureau of investigation in Chicago, caught up with Charles A. Floyd, known as "Pretty Boy," on a farm near East Liverpool, Ohio, and a few minutes later the desperado of the Ozarks was dead with fifteen bullets in his body. He had two automatic pistols but did not fire a shot as he sought to escape across a field. Floyd, accused of at least seven murders and lately of complicity in the Kansas City depot massacre, was hunted for years. He was Oklahoma's most notorious outlaw since the days of Al Jennings and the Dalton

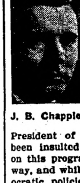
SILK and rayon dyers did not join in the recent general strike of textile workers because of their contract, but 30,000 of them in the Passaic valley and the New York metropolitan area have now quit their jobs and the dye houses were closed perforce.

When negotiations for a new contract began two months ago the union asked for a 30-hour week at $1 an hour and a closed shop. The closed shop was the sore point of issue. Neither side would change its attitude.

George Baldanzi, president of the Federation of Silk and Rayon Dyers, then waived the demand for a 30-hour week at $30 a week and said the union would accept a minimum guarantee of $20. This proposal was rejected by the employers.

P. W. Chappell, conciliator of the Department of Labor, was on the ground trying to effect a compromise.

JOHN B. CHAPPLE, Republican candidate for United States senator from Wisconsin, proved himself to be a gentleman at Waukesha. He was listed as principal speaker at a rally there. John Gay, candidate for congress, preceded him on the program and alluded to President Roosevelt as "a man who can't stand on his own feet without crutches." Mr. Chapple arose and said:



J. B. Chapple

"Men and women of Waukesha, the President of the United States has been insulted by a previous speaker on this program in a serious personal way, and while I may differ with Democratic policies, I will not stand for that kind of an attack on the President's physical infirmity, and I therefore refuse to speak on this program and will return to Waukesha at some later time."

CONVERSATIONS preliminary to the 1935 naval conference opened in London, and the Japanese did what was expected of them. Ambassador Matsudaira and Admiral Yamamoto told the British and the Americans in turn that Japan was not satisfied with the existing treaties—everyone knew that—and set forth these main points:

1. The powers should agree that Japan may have equality, "in principle," in defensive armaments.

2. The ratio system should be abolished, and "defensive" ships limited on a total tonnage basis, instead of by categories.

3. Each nation would drastically reduce "offensive" armaments, thus cutting down the chances of any war of aggression, while building whatever "defensive" ships within the tonnage limit agreed it feels it needs for security.

LIEUT. FRANCESCO AGELLO of Italy, known as "Crazy Boy" because of his daring aerial performances, set a new record for speed in flight when he drove his seaplane over a course at Desenzano, four times at an average of 440.29 miles an hour. It was his own record that he broke by about 16 miles an hour. He used his old plane but it had a new Fiat AS 6-V type motor developing 3,500 horse power.

MAHATMA GANDHI has quit as leader of the All-India Nationalist congress. He insisted on the importance of the spinning wheel in the home of every congress voter and on the wearing of homespun, and asked various changes in the constitution of the congress. Other leaders did not agree with him, so he refused to act longer as their chief.

THREE American physicians have been awarded the Nobel prize in medicine for 1934. They are Dr. George Minot and Dr. William P. Murphy of the Harvard medical school and Dr. George H. Whipple of the University of Rochester. The prize of $41,000 is divided among them for their development of liver therapy in anemia.

C. W. A. SCOTT and Campbell Black of England, flying their Red Comet plane, won the great London to Melbourne air derby, reducing the record by many hours. The second plane to arrive in Melbourne was that of K. D. Parmentier and J. J. Moll of Holland. They gave the winners a close race though flying a longer route. Col. Roscoe Turner and Clyde Pangborn, Americans, lost time when they wandered from the course near Allahabad, India, but came in third. James and Amy Mollison, the famous flying couple from England, led at the start, but were forced to quit in India by damaged motors.

Tragedy marked the race when Harold Gilman and James Baines of England crashed in flames in Italy and were burned to death.

BRUNO HAUPTMANN'S effort to avoid extradition from New York failed, so he was taken to jail at Flemington, N. J., to await trial for the murder of Colonel Lindbergh's baby boy. Attorney General Wilentz and his staff of assistants were completing their arrangements for presenting the case against the carpenter.

Hauptmann was arraigned before Justice Thomas E. Trenchard and pleaded not guilty. The trial was set for January 2 at the request of Mr. Wilentz, who said: "I don't think this trial should go through the holidays. I think it would be distasteful to the people. Then, too, this is a capital case and the defense should have ample time to prepare its case."

To Keep Jars Airtight

If you wish to keep food in jars airtight and have no paraffin or rings and covers, try this method. Dip tissue paper into milk. Place the paper over your jars while very wet. Tie it in place and allow it to dry. It will dry like parchment and the jars will be airtight as long as it is left on.

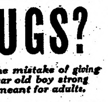
With Due Respect

He was a Chinese, and had been invited to dine at little Cuthbert's home.

His mother was anxious that their guest should not be made uncomfortable by the boy's curiosity, so she took him aside and explained all about the yellow skin and almond eyes of the Mongolians; she even showed him pictures of Chinese. More than anything else she impressed upon Cuthbert that the visitor was his father's friend, and to be treated with every respect.

When the celestial arrived, Cuthbert tried hard not to stare or look curious, but at last he cried: "I say, mummy, if he wasn't our friend, wouldn't he be a funny looking man?"



DRUGS?

Don't make the mistake of giving even a 14-year old boy strong medicines meant for adults.

Boys and girls who have reached their "teens" are not ready to be given powerful drugs!

It is not wise to give laxatives of adult strength to a child, just because you give them less frequently or in less amounts. Many stomach upsets and bowel troubles of growing children can be traced to this single mistake.

Use a liquid laxative containing senna (a natural laxative). California Syrup of Figs has the right amount for children's use, and this rich, fruity syrup does not harm or upset a child's system.

Give that headachy, bilious child a little of this gentle laxative when constipated, and a little less, if dose is repeated until bowels seem to be moving regularly and thoroughly without need of help.

Get the true California Syrup of Figs containing senna and cascara, which will not weaken the bowels or irritate the kidneys. You'll soon have full evidence that it safely relieves constipation in children.

THE "LIQUID TEST." First: select a liquid laxative of the proper strength for children. Second: give the dose suited to the child's age. Third: reduce the dose, if repeated, until the bowels are moving without any help at all.

An ideal laxative for this purpose is the pure California Syrup of Figs, but be sure the word "California" is on the bottle.

The Injustice of It

All through dinner Percy sat so silent that his parents at last began to wonder what was troubling him. "Pa," he said at last, "do school teachers get paid?"

"Of course they do, sonny," replied father.

"Then it's not fair," burst out the small boy, indignantly. "Why should the teachers get paid when us kids do all the work?"

"How will it end?"

"Oh, I suppose it will be a tie."

Useless Discussion

"Which do you prefer, money or brains?"

"There's no use to bother about making a choice," answered Miss Cayenne. "A person is uncommonly lucky not to find himself without either."

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a faculty position in Lostland Academy, Janet Mercer meets Prof. Arthur Fleming, also on his way to the Academy. At the school they are struck by an air of mystery pervading the place. Gordon Haskell, proprietor, welcomes them. Wilton Payne completes the Academy faculty. In a schoolroom Janet finds a group which the teachers had supposed were scholars, are wax figures. Haskell explains unusual circumstances connected with the conduct of the Academy. Among the pupils is Berenice Bracebridge, daughter of the late owner of the school. The story of the tragedy of Lostland Academy is that of two sisters and two brothers of Berenice, who lost their lives in the water, at the same moment, some years ago. The wax figures were modeled in the likenesses of the four children, and Doctor Bracebridge's will provided that they must be preserved. Payne learns from Berenice that the uncouth giant whom Janet had seen with Haskell is named Balder, and is a valuable servant. From an old farmer, Jerry Moore, the only witness of the drowning of the children, Payne learns particulars of the tragedy. He begins to take an increasing interest in Berenice, as Fleming does in Janet. Reading diaries kept by the late Dr. Jethro Bracebridge, Payne senses something sinister in the drowning of the children.

It was nearly dawn when he concluded his examinations of the diaries, which, on the whole, had yielded little meat for his theories to feed on. Doctor Bracebridge evidently had been a gentle, affectionate father, not too forcible in his management of a quartette of high-spirited young people resentful of a newcomer, who had, doubtless, assumed too easily that they were under his authority.

When he knew Berenice better he might some day ask her about the will. But he shrank from an undue and perhaps to her mind an unjustifiable curiosity. And he did not wish to fasten in her mind any suspicion of which her guardian was the object.

Berenice was as beautiful as an angel, he thought, tired with the approach of dawn, too tired to think of rare similes and new terms.

"Oh, I am too tired to sleep. I think I'll steal a march on Arthur and go down to that old church."

It was glorious, faring down on this last day of September, with the red maples coming up like grenadiers from the valley under vast volleys of sunrise; and the academy a black-purple cloud on the hill behind him. The country roads were firm and cold under his feet. The red bright sunlight was on the walls of the deserted village as he reached it, and he noticed white chrysanthemums in what had once been a garden lying fresh and cool along the matted, sparkling grass.

He entered the church, and was soon on the belfry stairs, which creaked and groaned beneath his weight. When he reached the landing he looked along all the exposed rafters for a key. But no key could he find.

Descending the church again, he found a key sticking in the keyhole of an old closet in the vestry, and went up the belfry stairs again to try it on the locked door. It fitted snugly, and though it turned the lock with difficulty, it served the purpose. He found himself in a room with four windows facing to the four points of the compass; and absolutely nothing in the place but an old Christmas tree still nailed to its square base of green painted wood. Nearly all its branches had been stripped or torn from it; but enough were left to indicate its character with the aid of a few bits of tinsel, of festive silver and gold. A Christmas tag was still dangling from one of the branches, with a name written on it. He examined it more closely. The name was "Althea Bracebridge." He mused over this poor little memorial some moments—a pathetic signpost pointing back to some long-ago Christmas celebration in this church. But why had the tree been carried up and stored away in the belfry room—instead of thrown out of doors? "Perhaps the boys got hold of it and carried it up here to form a part of their endless ingenuities; I think I'll take the card. Berenice might be glad to have it."

He untied it carefully. He was about to put it in his pocket when he saw that on the back of it was the date of the celebration of which this was perhaps the old memorial. Calculating back, he made it precisely the Christmas before the accident.

"But this church must have been deserted then," he thought. "Maybe they reopened it for a Christmas celebration. To what had this little card been attached? A book? A bottle of perfume? A box of candy? And had Althea liked her present?"

He tried to picture the scene—the old church with the pale winter sunshine streaming in and some one in the choir singing, "Hark, the Herald Angels"; and the youngsters excited over their gifts and impatient for the exercises to end. And had Berenice been there? As usual when he thought of her, horizons began to open and the sky to clear. "Mrs. Denver—bless her!—told her to marry. But what of poor me; with so little yet laid up for a wife?"

He relocked the door and replaced the key in the vestry.

Janet was strolling in the grounds of the academy when he re-entered them, and waved to him in her usual friendly way, making no comment when he joined her on his early excursions.

"I think we did very well last night," she observed; "we really took Berenice's mind from the anniversary."

"The trouble is—there's a perpetual anniversary in that old academy as long as those wax figures are there."

"They're haunting—queer, uncanny things—like something living on long after its time. Sometimes this place seems like a dream to me. Yet it has an odd charm, too—those wakings in the quiet morning light—that solemn hall with the pictures of the old presidents; a principal so fond of flowers that he keeps his hyacinth bulbs always blooming. Wasn't that a gorgeous purple hyacinth on the breakfast table yesterday?"

"Yes. You're right, it has charm—how glowing red the old bricks are!"

"Everything glitters today. See Berenice's hair in the sun—it's like flame."

They both looked towards her as she came lightly down the path, calling to them, pulling her fluffy white wrap around her.

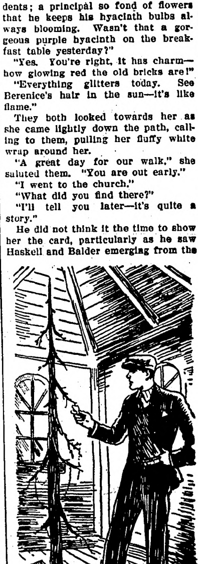
"A great day for our walk," she saluted them. "You are out early."

"I went to the church."

"What did you find there?"

"I'll tell you later—it's quite a story."

He did not think it the time to show her the card, particularly as he saw Haskell and Balder emerging from the greenish shadow of the basement. Both looked towards the group; then, exchanging some words, separated. Haskell approached Berenice with self-consciousness always in his manner; as if he must be perpetually on guard —warding away even friendliness and pleasant words.



But Why Had the Tree Been Carried Up and Stored Away in the Belfry Room?

"You are walking again today?"

"Yes! Will you join us?"

"Why should I walk over these hills?"

"Will you go up the ravine with us?"

"You know I never go up the ravine. It is too exhausting. However, it must be beautiful up there now, with the scarlet maples."

"Yes, they're blood red," Wilton said. "I've never seen such intensity of red."

Haskell put his hands over his eyes. "This sun fills my eyes with red."

That afternoon the four were stepping together over the hills; their happiness singularly like that of creatures let out of cages. The sun was striking out wonders of blue vapor of dazzling color from rough heights and greener lowlands. Wilton told her of reading the diary.

"How long did your stepmother live after the deaths of your brothers and sisters?"

"Fully eight years, I think; I'm not sure. She was a blessed woman; always kind to me. Even my brothers and sisters liked her, though they didn't like—" She broke off. "Oh, well, it's all past and gone."

"May I ask you if you can remember when the old church down there was last used?"

"Long before I was born—about 1880, I think."

"And was it ever opened for Christmas celebrations—after that?"

"Oh, no!"

"Are you sure?"

"Quite sure! But father used to have celebrations for the neighbors' children in the old academy, and they all received presents from the tree. I only faintly remember the last one ever held—the Christmas before the accident. It was very gay. We had a beautiful tree."

"That tree is still in existence."

She looked at him incredulously, her eyes half fearful. "How do you know that?"

"I went to the belfry room this morning; found a key that fitted the door. The room was absolutely bare except for an ancient tree on its wooden base, painted green, as usual. Bits of tinsel still clung to the dry branches, and this little card was tied to one of them with a red ribbon. Can you read the writing? The ink is very pale."

"Althea! How strange. Why, I have a card just like it, saved all these years. How on earth did that tree get up there?"

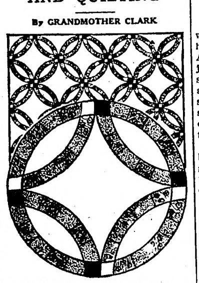
PATCHWORK QUILTS AND QUILTING

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



The "Double Wedding Ring" shown below is the most popular quilt known. Its name is attributed to the following story:

Following the Civil war quilt making was very popular. Grandma had in her collection a quilt she was saving for her grandchild's wedding. Jane's fiance, who had been wounded in the battle of Antietam in 1862, spent many years in the hospital, but finally returned home and the wedding was planned. "Grandma," said Jane, "we will not have our wedding rings until later." Grandma, however, solved the problem, "My child, I'll furnish the rings. You shall have my favorite quilt and we will call it the Double Wedding Ring."

In those days making of quilts depended on materials that could be found in the home, and also the artistic ability of the maker. Cutting patches accurately and drawing neat designs for quilting were important steps in making a good-looking quilt. Today, with the many helps for quilt makers, thousands of quilts are made in much shorter time than in Colonial days. Here are some modern ways that will make work easy and produce quilts that you will be proud of.

Books of instruction illustrated with instructions and cutting diagrams. Book No. 20 with 30 quilts. Book No. 21 with 37 quilts and book No. 23 with 33 quilts. These are 15c each, two for 25c, or three for 35c. Package No. 30 contains 20 fiber cutouts for cutting patches accurately—25c. Package No. 50—assorted cuttings for quilt patches, approximately sufficient for small quilt—35c. Package No. 32 with 21 perforated patterns for quilting with powder — 35c. Any of these wonderful helps will be mailed to you upon receipt of your order with cash enclosed.

SCHOOL BOOKS POORLY WRITTEN, WRITERS ASSERT

Very few of the school books that we have examined have been written by persons who know how to write. Anyone can mess about with a subject and put in colloquial expressions, but it takes supreme learning and ability so to grasp and order a subject as to be able to explain it in simple, clear words to a child. Indeed, that requires the highest of all forms of writing.

We have found, looking over the books, especially the histories, the geographies and the supplementary readers, that they make a great deal of inconsequent matters under the impression that they are interesting while the really important matters, which a more facile knowledge of the subject could render interesting, are passed over.

Here are some prize questions put to our ten-year-old daughter in a school examination:

"(1) Which is more useful to the United States—Alaska or the Philippine Islands? (2) Name the tropical possessions of the United States, and what are our prospects of keeping them?.

No human being born to date can answer either of those questions. Sir Oliver Lodge and Moses working together could not answer them! Yet the writer of the textbook and the teacher who took the questions out of the book knew so little of the subjects involved as to believe that they could be answered by a child of ten.—Samuel and Mary Owens Crowther in Cosmopolitan.

Why Liquid Laxatives Do You No Harm

The dose of a liquid laxative can be measured. The action can thus be regulated to suit individual need. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will a mild liquid laxative irritate the kidneys.

The right liquid laxative will bring a more natural movement, and with no discomfort at the time, or afterward.

The wrong cathartic may often do more harm than good.

An approved liquid laxative (one which is most widely used for both adults and children) is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a prescription. It is perfectly safe. Its laxative action is based on senna—a natural laxative. The bowels will not become dependent on this form of help, as they may do in the case of cathartics containing mineral drugs. Ask your druggist for Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

I have yet to see the first automobile leave the curb or go through a traffic sign of its own accord. Automobiles are dead objects. The only time you find them moving is when a human being starts them and operates them.

We cannot blame the automobile for these accidents. There is only one person to blame and that is the operator of the vehicle. The dead automoble standing beside the curb becomes a living, moving, speeding mass of steel depending entirely upon the attitude of the driver.

Most men and women do their work or drive an automobile as they have been taught to do it. Most of them have ordinary intelligence.

Therefore, the conscientious endeavor of spirited men will bring us all closer together in a fellowship of common interest. That interest is to prevent automobile accidents on highways. We can do it by exerting ourselves ane using common ordinary sense.

Garter Snake Habits

Although garter snakes are viviparous, giving birth to their young, the parent snakes are not concerned with caring for their young after they are born. They may be found near a crevice where their mother is sunning, but this is only a coincidence. Newly born garter snakes shift for themselves from their earliest existence.

Quarter Million Payments

About $250,000 in benefit payments will be distributed among sugar beet growers in 22 Minnesota counties by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration for holding their 1934 production at about the same level as in other recent years.

Facts about the government's proposed sugar beet program were announced last week by Andrew Boss, University Farm, St. Paul, state director of production control campaigns, following his return from Madison, Wis., where he conferred with J. A. Dickey of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. County agents and representatives of the beet growing and processing industries in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois and Michigan also were represented at this conference.

Minnesota will be divided into factory districts for administrative purposes. One district, with Chaska as a center, will include Kandiyohi, Meeker, Renville, McLeod, Carver, Hennepin, Sibley, Scott, Nicollet, Ramsey, LeSueur, Dakota and Blue Earth counties. A second district tributary to a beet sugar factory at Mason City, Iowa, will include Waseca, Steele, Faribault, and Freeborn counties in Minnesota. A third district, with East Grand Forks as a center will include Clay, Norman, Polk, Kittson and Marshall counties in this state.

Polk and Faribault counties are the state's leading beet growing counties, their combined acreages for 1932 amounting to almost half of the state's total sugar beet acreage.

Growers will have the opportunity soon to sign contracts setting rather liberal upper limits on their 1935 and 1936 acreages, Mr. Boss says. For compliance with these contracts they will receive benefits in addition to those to be paid this year. Details of the program will be explained by county agents in a series of community meetings or in one county-wide meeting in each county.

Don't miss the Sewing Circle Auction Sale at the Mission Church tonight.

I want to thank the Voters of Marshall County for again electing me as their Representative in the Legislature. It is very gratifying to me to know that a majority of the Voters of Marshall County appreciated the part I took in their behalf at the last Regular and Special Sessions. May I so conduct my actions in the future that I will merit your confidence. Again thanking you I remain

Advice of Inspectors

Quality is a very important factor in the production of cream, with inspectors inspecting all butter that comes on the market, for foreign matter such as flies and other things that may get into the cream, which may result in a total loss of some churnings. Let's all work hand in hand to prevent such happenings.

The Deer Hunt

Yesterday morning the big game hunting season for the taking of one deer and one bear, opened for a eleven day run in this part of the state. Big game hunting has a calling that all sportsmen like to follow and we believe that all employers should let their hired help have a week end or few days to go out in the great outdoors and enjoy the grandeur of nature.

A real sportsmen never goes out with just the idea of killing a deer but, rather for the sport of studying their habits and to ease his mind from the daily hum-drum of business. Don't let your business tie yourself or your help so much that you can not find time to go out for a little fresh air and a trek in the woods.

Big game hunters in northern Minnesota are urged by Erling Swenson, director of division of Game and Fish to exercise added caution because of the thousands of young men engaged in Emergency Conservation Work in sections of the state that are open to deer hunting this fall. Carelessness in the use of high-powered firearms may mean the death of some Civilian Conservation Corps worker, Director Swenson warned.

Minnesota's forest service will cooperate in the campaign to decrease the number of big game hunting fatalities, according to Grover Conzet, state forester. Forest workers will be stationed at entrences and exits to forest areas where work is going on and hunters will be asked to exercise extreme care to avoid injury to the men at work, he said.

"Work areas will be posted and all roads leading to camp sites will carry cautions signs", Mr. Conzet said. Men in the various camps are being informed of the dangers during the big game hunting season and will be kept in groups as much as possible until the season closes.

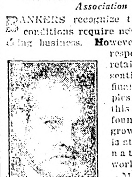
ADJUSTING BANKING TO CHANGING NEEDS

By ROBERT V. FLEMING

Vice President American Bankers Association



R. V. FLEMING

BANKERS recognize that changing conditions require new methods of doing business. However it is their responsibility to retain those essential and sound financial principles upon which this country was founded and has grown to be what is still the richest nation in the world.

Many of our difficulties have arisen from lack of confidence and from misunderstanding. Therefore it behooves the banker to bend every effort to create a better public understanding of sound banking and thereby bring about that united effort and cooperative spirit which will hasten the day of national recovery and restore to the banker the confidence of the public to which he is entitled.

As an approach to the realization of this ideal, bankers should carefully scrutinize every application for a loan to see if it is bankable and, if it is not in bankable form, then make further examination to see if the loan can be made so, in order that the uses of credit may be stimulated.

Explaining Loan Factors to Customers

We must not expect our customers to be bankers and understand all the factors which we must consider before granting a loan. If we find that a loan is not, and cannot be made, bankable, then I think we should take pains to explain to the applicant the reason why it cannot be granted.

There are other measures which I think it important for the banker to undertake in order to eliminate the misunderstandings which have arisen and overcome the sentiment which exists. Under present conditions we have to operate under many laws and regulations, and also watch what further legislation is being proposed which affects our methods of operation and may not be in the best interest of the communities we serve. Nowadays it seems at times we must sit with a law book in one hand and a book of regulations in the other in order to make certain we are discharging our daily duties and functioning strictly in accordance with the law. All of this is very trying, yet I think in the end we shall become better bankers.

I believe it is the duty of every banker today to endeavor to understand the public he serves. In addition to his daily duties, trying as they are, he should participate in the activities of his community, so that, with the fund of information available to him, he may be as helpful as possible in all public and civic matters.

Had A Little Collision

Ludvig Monson had his chev sedan smashed up a little on Friday when a truck driven by Emil Golnick of Crookston hit him head on a few feet north of the main intersection in the village as Mr. Monson was making a left turn to come onto main street from the higway. It appeared that some other truckers had left their trucks parked on the hihway in such a way that the view was obstructed for both the drivers, who, were both coming into town from opposite directions. After a few kinks were kicked out of a fender or two and other minor bruises were patched up on the two machines the drivers were on their way as busy as ever.

Mother Of Local Pastor Called

Rev. L. M. Redal returned home from Philadelphia on Saturday after a short visit at the home of his parents, Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Redal, where he had been called due to the serious illnes of his mother His mother was getting better and as Rev. Redal was anxious to get back to his work here he left there with the hope that she would recover but, upon his arrival home on the noon train Saturday he was greeted with the sad news that she had passed away that morning at 3 o'clock.

Quarter Million Payments

About $250,000 in benefit payments will be distributed among sugar beet growers in 22 Minnesota counties by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration for holding their 1934 production at about the same level as in other recent years.

Facts about the government's proposed sugar beet program were announced last week by Andrew Boss, University Farm, St. Paul, state director of production control campaigns, following his return from Madison, Wis., where he conferred with J. A. Dickey of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. County agents and representatives of the beet growing and processing industries in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois and Michigan also were represented at this conference.

Minnesota will be divided into factory districts for administrative purposes. One district, with Chaska as a center, will include Kandiyohi, Meeker, Renville, McLeod, Carver, Hennepin, Sibley, Scott, Nicollet, Ramsey, LeSueur, Dakota and Blue Earth counties. A second district tributary to a beet sugar factory at Mason City, Iowa, will include Waseca, Steele, Faribault, and Freeborn counties in Minnesota. A third district, with East Grand Forks as a center will include Clay, Norman, Polk, Kittson and Marshall counties in this state.

Polk and Faribault counties are the state's leading beet growing counties, their combined acreages for 1933 amounting to almost half of the state's total sugar beet acreage.

Growers will have the opportunity soon to sign contracts setting rather liberal upper limits on their 1935 and 1936 acreages, Mr. Boss says. For compliance with these contracts they will receive benefits in addition to those to be paid this year. Details of the program will be explained by county agents in a series of community meetings or in one county-wide meeting in each county.

Don't miss the Sewing Circle Auction Sale at the Mission Church tonight.

I want to thank the Voters of Marshall County for again electing me as their Representative in the Legislature. It is very gratifying to me to know that a majority of the Voters of Marshall County appreciated the part I took in their behalf at the last Regular and Special Sessions. Advice of Inspectors

Quality is a very important factor in the production of cream, with inspectors inspecting all butter that comes on the market, for foreign matter such as flies and other things that may get into the cream, which may result in a total loss of some churnings. Let's all work hand in hand to prevent such happenings.

The Deer Hunt

Yesterday morning the big game hunting season for the taking of one deer and one bear, opened for a eleven day run in this part of the state. Big game hunting has a calling that all sportsmen like to follow and we believe that all employers should let their hired help have a week end or few days to go out in the great outdoors and enjoy the granduer of nature.

A real sportsmen never goes out with just the idea of killing a deer but, rather for the sport of studying their habits and to ease his mind from the daily hum-drum of business. Don't let your business tie yourself or your help so much that you can not find time to go out for a little fresh air and a trek in the woods.

Big game hunters in northern Minnesota are urged by Erling Swenson, director of division of Game and Fish to exercise added caution because of the thousands of young men engaged in Emergency Conservation Work in sections of the state that are open to deer hunting this fall. Carelessness in the use of high-powered firearms may mean the deat of some Civilian Conservation Corps worker, Director Swenson warned.

Minnesota's forest service will cooperate in the campaign to decrease the number of big game hunting fatilities, according to Grover Conzet, state forester. Forest workers will be stationed at entrences and exits to forest areas where work is going on and hunters will be asked to exercise extreme care to avoid injury to the men at work, he said.

"Work areas will be posted and all roads leading to camp sites will carry cautions signs", Mr. Conzet said. Men in the various camps are being informed of the dangers during the big game hunting season and will be kept in groups, as much as possible until the season closes.

ADJUSTING BANKING TO CHANGING NEEDS

By ROBERT V. FLEMING
Vice President American Bankers Association

R. V. FLEMING

BANKERS recognize that changing conditions require new methods of doing business. However it is their responsibility to retain those essential and sound financial principles upon which this country was founded and has grown to be what is still the richest nation in the world.

Many of our difficulties have arisen from lack of confidence and from misunderstanding. Therefore it behooves the banker to bend every effort to create a better public understanding of sound banking and thereby bring about that united effort and cooperative spirit which will hasten the day of national recovery and restore to the banker the confidence of the public to which he is entitled.

As an approach to the realization of this ideal, bankers should carefully scrutinize every application for a loan to see if it is bankable and, if it is not in bankable form, then make further examination to see if the loan can be made so, in order that the uses of credit may be stimulated.

Explaining Loan Factors to Customers

We must not expect our customers to be bankers and understand all the factors which we must consider before granting a loan. If we find that a loan is not, and cannot be made, bankable, then I think we should take pains to explain to the applicant the reasons why it cannot be granted.

There are other measures which I think it important for the banker to undertake in order to eliminate the misunderstandings which have arisen and overcome the sentiment which exists. Under present conditions we have to operate under many laws and regulations, and also watch what further legislation is being proposed which affects our methods of operation and may not be in the best interest of the communities we serve. Nowadays it seems at times we must sit with a law book in one hand and a book of regulations in the other in order to make certain we are discharging our daily duties and functioning strictly in accordance with the law. All of this is very trying, yet I think in the end we shall become better bankers.

I believe it is the duty of every banker today to endeavor to understand the public he serves. In addition to his daily duties, trying as they are, he should participate in the activities of his community, so that, with the fund of information available to him, he may be as helpful as possible in all public and civic matters.

Had A Little Collision

Ludvig Monson had his chev sedan smashed up a little on Friday when a truck driven by Emil Golnick of Crookston hit him head on a few feet north of the main intersection in the village as Mr. Monson was making a left turn to come onto main street from the higway. It appeared that some other truckers had left their trucks parked on the hihway in such a way that the view was obstructed for both the drivers, who, were both coming into town from opposite directions. After a few kinks were kicked out of a fender or two and other minor bruises were patched up on the two machines the drivers were on their way as busy as ever.

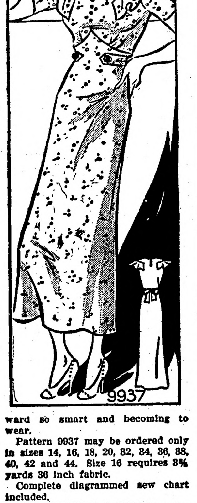
PATTERN 9937

Here is a design that was born to make laundresses happy. One can see them with the mind's eye smiling "friendly-like" at it every time it is tubbed. The little sash will be untied, and first they will iron the ruffles. After that it will be plain sailing—or should we say ironing? In our concentration upon laundresses, we have forgotten to mention the proud possessors of the frock who will one and all adore it because, in the first place, it was so easy to make—and ever afterward so smart and becoming to wear.



Pattern 9937 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 16 requires 3⅝ yards 36 inch fabric.

Complete diagrammed sew chart included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York, N. Y.

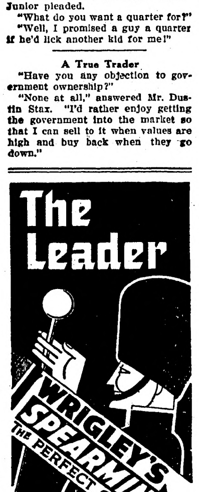
"None at all," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "I'd rather enjoy getting the government into the market so that I can sell to it when values are high and buy back when they go down."



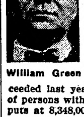
News Review of Current Events the World Over

William Green Gloomy About Unemployment—Henry Ford Cheerful—Serious Charges Concerning Government of the Virgin Islands.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© by Western Newspaper Union.

WITH another winter at hand and millions of Americans still unemployed, organized labor, through President William Green of the American Federation of Labor, has asked the administration to appeal to all industries to increase production 30 per cent. Mr. Green in a public statement asserted that for the first time since President Roosevelt's re-employment program got under way in July, 1933, unemployment has exceeded last year's level. The number of persons without any employment he puts at 8,348,000. Those without jobs in industry in September numbered 10,951,000. Jobs for 2,220,000 were provided by conservation camps and emergency relief projects, "but these emergency jobs," he said, "are not creating incomes to pay the costs."



William Green

Mr. Green continued: "Could not the administration invite all industries to co-operate in a general program to increase production and put men to work?

"If the nation-wide level of all production were lifted 30 per cent in a balanced program, adjusting production to consumption needs, each industry would then be assured that all other industries would increase their production, and the wealth produced by putting labor to work would create income to buy the product of all.

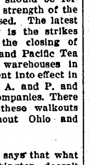
"The total number at work in the United States was 39,764,000 in September, 1933; by September, 1934, it had declined to 39,367,000. During these 12 months the normal increase in population has added close to 450,000 to the army of job seekers for whom industry provides no work. Thus the number without work in industry has risen from 10,108,000 in September, 1933, to 10,951,000 in September, 1934."

Quite as gloomy as Mr. Green's report was a statement of the National Industrial Conference board. This agency noted that the general improvement in manufacturing activity usually occurring in September failed to materialize. Instead, declines of 5.7 per cent in the number of wage earners employed, of 6.1 per cent in total man hours worked and of 5.8 per cent in payrolls disbursed, were reported. In addition, it was stated, the rise in the cost of living from August to September depressed real weekly earnings of wage earners 2.1 per cent.

On the other hand, the United States Chamber of Commerce in its summary of conditions throughout the nation reports continued improvement of business sentiment although it has not as yet been reflected definitely in the volume of transactions.

MANY thoughtful persons comment on the apparent discrepancy between the pleas of William Green for more employment and the policy pursued by organized labor in fostering great strikes seemingly for the sole purpose of enforcing unionization and the closed shop. Many thousands of persons are thrown out of employment by these strikes, industries are hampered or shut down and often serious disorders result. To the bystander it does not seem fair that, in a time of distress, such methods should be followed in order that the strength of the unions might be increased. The latest example of this policy is the strikes which brought about the closing of all the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea company's shops and warehouses in Cleveland and which went into effect in Milwaukee against the A. and P. and two other chain store companies. There was a prospect that these walkouts would spread throughout Ohio and Wisconsin.

HENRY FORD, who says that what is done in Washington doesn't matter much so far as recovery is concerned, came out with a statement that should be encouraging to the American business man. He told the Ford managers gathered in Detroit that his company was out of the depression, and they in turn told him of generally improved business conditions in all parts of the country.



Henry Ford

"The depression," Ford set forth in a statement, "would be over for the whole country very soon if American industrialists would just forget the alphabet schemes and take hold of their industries and run them with good, sound American business sense.

"They should take hold of their country, too, in the same way, and run it with good sound American common sense."

SPEEDY ruling by the United States Supreme court on constitutionality of the NRA act and the code of fair competition for the lumber and timber products industry may be expected. Judge W. I. Grubb of the Federal District court at Birmingham, Ala., has ruled them unconstitutional and dismissed an indictment against an operator of several sawmills. The action was taken by agreement of both sides so as to expedite an appeal to the Supreme court.

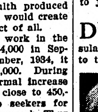
PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT announced that, beginning July 1, 1935, he will eliminate the 5 per cent pay cut that is now taken out of the salaries of all federal employees. The pay restoration, he explained, is being planned on the assumption that increases in the cost of living will necessitate it.

The Treasury department thereupon admitted frankly that this means the taxpayers will be called on to pay an additional fifty million dollars a year for the benefit of the 700,000 federal employees who will benefit by the restoration in salaries.

Mr. Roosevelt predicted flatly that the cost of living will advance substantially within the next eight months. When he made this statement at his regular press conference he also cautioned reporters to remember that an increase in the cost of living meant an increase in commodity and property values, thereby lessening the difficulty in paying debts. This is one of the avowed aims of the Roosevelt program.

He said he expected the rise of food, clothing, fuel, housing, and other living costs to be large enough by next July 1 to justify the 5 per cent restoration.

DR. ERNEST GRUENING, chief of the bureau of territories and insular affairs, has gone rather hurriedly to the Virgin Islands to make a personal investigation into a state of affairs that has led to the filing of serious charges before committees of both houses of congress. In a petition for a congressional inquiry, Paul C. Yates, who recently resigned as executive assistant to Gov. Paul M. Pearson, charges that the present administration of the islands is "wasteful, extravagant, inefficient, and tainted with corruption."



Gov. Pearson

Yates was recently suspended and ordered to Washington for an inquiry by Secretary Ickes, who accused him of "disloyalty, insubordination, and gross inefficiency," and in general of being a trouble maker. Yates resigned immediately and came to Washington, but chose to ignore Secretary Ickes' office, carrying his plaints instead directly to congress.

He charges that Mr. Ickes has been "outrageously deceived" by Governor Pearson and subordinate officials of the Interior department, has ignored "complaints, petitions, and specific charges" presented by the citizens of the islands, and has dealt with officials "in a peculiarly harsh, cruel, and dictatorial manner."

The petition further charges that minor officials in the Interior department aided and abetted Governor Pearson to "whitewash a major public works scandal and deceived the secretary of the interior regarding public works and the general situation, and were criminally negligent in the performance of their duty."

Secretary Ickes is accused of making prejudicial and injurious remarks about T. Webber Wilson, judge of the Federal District court in the islands, remarks which "reflect unjustly upon the federal judiciary and which are unbefitting the dignity of a cabinet officer." Ickes also is accused of "unjustly and at the instance of Governor Pearson," having removed from office Charles H. Gibson and Eli Baer, government attorneys, and Capt. Michael J. Nolan, director of police of St. Thomas and St. John, with a record of 14 years' "loyal and efficient service."

CONVERSATIONS in London preparatory to the scheduled naval conference have been quite unsatisfactory so far, for neither the United States nor Great Britain shows any disposition to accord to Japan the equality that nation demands, even though it be merely in principle with the Japanese agreeing not to build up to parity with them. Well-posted observers do not believe the conference will accomplish anything valuable, and Secretary of the Navy Claude A. Swanson says that, regardless of its outcome, his department plans to bring the American fleet up to full treaty strength and will ask congress for the necessary appropriations.

Additional maritime strength was urged before the federal aviation commission. Lieut. Com. C. E. Rosendahl, former commander of the airships Los Angeles and Akron, advised the construction of two military dirigibles to protect aerial trade routes. Secretary Swanson said this proposal is under consideration in the Navy department.

The United States is now 136,975 tons of war craft behind treaty strength. This represents one aircraft carrier, two class B cruisers, 51 destroyers, and 24 submarines, the department disclosed.

CHICAGO'S magnificent World's fair is no more. It closed formally and forever at midnight, October 31, amid a riot of gayety and with a final burst of fireworks, and the vast throng of last-day visitors left the grounds with a feeling of sadness. Mayor Kelly had proclaimed a half-holiday and thousands upon thousands of Chicagoans joined with the crowds that had come from elsewhere to celebrate the windup of this most notable exposition. After artillery salutes and parades, the final ceremonies were staged in the Court of States with Governor Horner, Mayor Kelly and President Rufus Dawes of the exposition as speakers. Exactly at midnight Mr. Dawes threw a switch that shut off all lights on the grounds and set off a gigantic fireworks display. This was not quite the end, however, for the lights were turned on again and, though no one was admitted after midnight, the Halloween carnival continued until three o'clock in the morning. Then the lights went out forever.

KING PRAJADHIPOK of Siam is not satisfied with his present status as a limited monarch and has threatened to abdicate unless the government withdraws a measure proposed in the national assembly which deprives him of his traditional right to decide whether persons sentenced to death for crimes shall live or die. This, of course, is but one of the distasteful limitations prescribed by the national assembly since the revolution of 1932 which forced the king to give the country a new constitution. There is no revolution in this case, for the people of Siam generally know nothing about the dispute between the king and the government.

King Prajadhipok

Prajadhipok is at present in England with his queen, and the negotiations are carried on by cable. His majesty's secretary there said the king's fight was really a fight for the principles of democratic government and that he would not give in. The secretary explained that half the members of the Siamese legislative assembly are elected directly by the people, and the other half nominated by the government, with his majesty placing "great importance upon the attitude of the elected members," who Prajadhipok claims opposed the measure relating to life and death prerogatives.

MEXICAN governments, both federal and state, are carrying on a determined campaign against the Roman Catholic church, charging that the latter has been fostering a revolutionary movement. On the other hand, a vigorous denial that the Catholic church had advocated armed resistance to the Mexican government or intervention by the United States in the religious conflict in Mexico was issued by Archbishop Ruiz, the Apostolic delegate to Mexico, in San Antonio, Texas.

Bishops and priests are being expelled from various states, and the state of Mexico issued an order limiting the number of churches in the region in which services may be held to 34, the same as the number of priests permitted to officiate in the state. All churches above this number, the decree provided, will be used as schools and public libraries. The action was believed to have been taken to prevent priests ousted from other states from coming to the state of Mexico to officiate.

The Supreme court ruled that all buildings used for Catholic ceremonies shall become the property of the nation.

Acting President Rodriguez in a letter to Attorney General Portes Gil said the clergy, on pretext of opposing the initiation of compulsory socialistic education in Mexico's schools, has "initiated a frank campaign of sedition which reveals clearly its intention to bring about a revolution.

CHANCELLOR HITLER has realized the danger to his regime in the revolt of the Evangelical Protestant pastors against the tyrannical rule of Reichsbishop Mueller, and has decided to separate church and state. The government of the reich, he said, would not interfere in the quarrel. Some observers in Berlin expressed the fear that this policy would lead to unrestrained growth of German paganism and also to further acts against the Jews, under the leadership of Dr. Alfred Rosenberg, philosopher, and Julius Streicher, publisher of the Stormer, heads respectively of the pagan faith and the anti-Semitic movements.

Acceptance of Chancellor Hitler's new constitution for the German Labor Front, which gives the Labor Front money and property which once belonged to trade unions and employers' associations, was celebrated in 16,000 demonstrations throughout Germany. The biggest was in Lustgarten, Berlin, where over 850,000 were assembled. The Labor Front includes all laborers and office workers.

BOTH France and Germany are worried over prospects of trouble in the Saar, where a plebiscite is to be held January 13, 1935, to determine whether the region shall revert to Germany, be attached to France or remain under the control of the League of Nations. The Nazi campaign in the Saar has been active and large numbers of Storm Troopers are said to have entered the region in disguise. Geoffrey K. Knox, president of the governing commission for the league, has warned that in case of difficulties during the plebiscite he will call for the help of French troops. Foreign Minister Pierre Laval says the French will be ready to respond. The German Nazis are correspondingly irate. There is reason for anxiety.

Fosston—Awakened by a commotion in his home, Joseph Lenes, a farmer, found two sheep in his kitchen. Chased by dogs, they had found refuge there by jumping in through a window.

Willmar—After spending hours listening to plans for the proposed municipal auditorium, members of the city council voted to submit to the voters of Willmar the question of whether they favor construction of the building.

Heron Lake—Ted Just, living near here, tells this story for the prize hunting yarn of the season. As a flock of geese flying low passed over his head in a cornfield, he hurled an ear of corn into the flock winging one that dropped at his feet.

Minneapolis—Minneapolis already has spent more than $700,000 in the improvement of homes, one-third of the quota set for the city in the Better Housing campaign of the federal housing administration. Of this total, $242,000 has been lent by Minneapolis banks for modernization and repair of buildings.

St. Paul—The Minnesota state emergency administration now has more than 60,000 persons earning relief and non-relief wages, L. P. Zimmerman, administrator, announced. This does not include about 10,000 farmers who are working out drouth relief received during the summer, he said. The projects approved now total 3,190.

Virginia — The delegate assembly of the Minnesota Education association in Minneapolis wound up its business with the election of Floyd B. Moe, dean of the junior college of the Virginia public school system, as president for the coming year. He succeeds Miss Daisy Brown of Stillwater. P. M. Atwood, superintendent of schools at Staples, was named vice-president. An emergency fund of $5,000,000 is essential to maintain the school system of Minnesota at a standard approximating normal, Dr. Roy G. Blakey of the University of Minnesota, tax adviser to the Minnesota Eduaction Association, told the assembly.

St. Paul—The state treasury is low, with the overdraft reaching the top limitation set by statutes of $3,000,000. State Treasurer Julius A. Schmahl and Mat Desmond, deputy state auditor, called a meeting of the state executive council to act on a plan of financing under which the state can operate until the legislature convenes in January. With the overdraft reaching the $3,000,000 mark the general revenue fund is now $9,000,000 in the red, including $6,000,000 in outstanding certificates of indebtedness. Between now and next January, approximately $6,000,000 will be needed to operate on. Of this amount the October tax settlement will supply about half or $3,000,000.

Preston—Using a sneak play such as the gridiron boys execute, a flat car loaded with cinders eluded a set of section crew tacklers, broke into the clear and scooted 15 miles unmolested on the Milwaukee railway line. There was no damage.

Bemidji—Peter Larkin, 70-year-old Turtle River storekeper, adopted football tactics to frustrate an attempted holdup of his store by a lone bandit. In the scuffle that followed the tackle, the bandit fired three shots, one striking Larkin in the arm. The bandit escaped without any loot

ELIZA'S GIFT

Eliza Tibbetts is the person who first introduced oranges into the United States from Brazil. She lived in California and planted a few pips that had been sent her by a friend in Brazil. From this small beginning sprang the United States orange industry. A monument has been erected on the spot where the pips were first planted, but Eliza Tibbetts' grave cannot be found, and the whole of the United States is at present being combed by enthusiastic orange growers who wish to commemorate the lady.—Montreal Herald.

Why Children Need a Liquid Laxative

The temporary relief children get from unwise dosing with harsh cathartics may cause bowel strain, and even set-up irritation in the kidneys. A properly prepared liquid laxative brings a more natural movement. There is no discomfort at the time and no weakness after. You don't have to give the child "a double dose" a day or two later.

Can constipation be safely relieved in children? "Yes!" say medical men. "Yes!" say many mothers who have followed this sensible medical advice: 1. Select a good liquid laxative. 2. Give the dose you find suited to the system. 3. Gradually reduce the dose, if repeated, until the bowels are moving naturally without aid.

An approved liquid laxative (one that is widely used for children) is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. The mild laxative action of this excellent preparation is the best form of help for children — and grown-ups, too. The dose can be regulated for any age or need.

Your druggist sells Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Depression Appears to Have Stirred Inventors

America's inventive genius has been stimulated by the depression, according to the investigation of the Inventors Foundation of New York, says the United Press. An intensive study carried on by the foundation in connection with its courses at Stevens Institute and New York university indicates that the American inventor is more active than ever, but lacks practical guidance and the ability to make the most of his ideas.

Hundreds of inventors are being enrolled in special courses now being given at these institutions and by mail in association with correspondence schools to study scientific methods in developing new ideas worthy of patenting. The courses offer expert instruction in all details of inventing and patenting methods. The foundation is carried out on broad philanthropic principles.

The investigations show that most inventors are surprisingly ignorant of the patent laws and the best plan for protecting their ideas and assuring profits. The inventor is instructed concerning correct protective methods of original ideas and the practical application of these rules through each stage of the development of an invention. The course includes a study of the inventor's market for his product and culminates with a study of the business steps involved.

Food for Thought

The question is, do the Joneses enjoy being kept up with?

ASK THE MOTHER who has made this change

The average mother gives any laxative the family may be using, while family doctors give children a liquid laxative of suitable ingredients, suitable strength, and in suitable amount.

If you want to know just what a tremendous difference this means to any youngster, just inquire of any mother who has tried it!

She knows that a bilious boy or girl needs a gentle liquid laxative when constipated, and a little less if dose is repeated until bowels seem to be moving regularly and thoroughly without need of help.

Use a liquid laxative containing senna (a natural laxative). California Syrup of Figs has the right amount for children's use, and this rich, fruity syrup does not harm or upset a child's system.

Get a bottle of the real California Syrup of Figs at any druggist's. All children like its agreeable taste, and it agrees with them. No need to give a child anything stronger. This fruity syrup is laxative enough; indeed, many adults use it in preference to pills and tablets.

THE "LIQUID TEST." First: select a liquid laxative of the proper strength for children. Second: give the dose suited to the child's age. Third: reduce the dose, until the bowels are moving without any help.

An ideal laxative for this purpose is the pure California Syrup of Figs, but be sure the word "California" is on the bottle.

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a faculty position in Lostland Academy, Janet Mercer meets Prof. Arthur Fleming, also on his way to the Academy. At the school they are struck by an air of mystery pervading the place. Gordon Haskell, proprietor, welcomes them. Wilton Payne completes the Academy faculty. In a schoolroom Janet finds a group which the teachers had supposed were scholars, are wax figures. Haskell explains unusual circumstances connected with the conduct of the Academy. Among the pupils is Berenice Bracebridge, daughter of the late owner of the school. The story of the tragedy of Lostland Academy is that of two sisters and two brothers of Berenice, who lost their lives in the water, at the same moment, some years ago. The wax figures were modeled in the likenesses of the four children, and Doctor Bracebridge's will provided that they must be preserved. Payne learns from Berenice that the uncouth giant whom Janet had seen with Haskell is named Balder, and is a valuable servant. From an old farmer, Jerry Moore, the only witness of the drowning of the children, Payne learns particulars of the tragedy. He begins to take an increasing interest in Berenice, as Fleming does in Janet. Reading diaries kept by the late Dr. Jethro Bracebridge, Payne senses something sinister in the drowning of the children. In the belfry of the old church he finds a long discarded Christmas tree. Its presence puzzles him.

She turned, holding out the card. "See what Mr. Payne found."—and she told them the story, her eyes brilliant, her cheeks flushed as if the incident had excited her. "Not everything is lost in Lostland."

"And some things beyond price are found," Wilton reflected.

"Here we rest," he called at length from an eminence where he and Berenice stood tall and straight against the honey-colored sky.

The elevation commanded all the rugged country about them. They could not see the academy, and Wilton was glad of this. Berenice seemed more than content, seated on a fallen tree trunk, her hands clasped about her knees. They were rather old fashioned, the four of them—Berenice because of her seclusion—the other three for the reason that life had presented serious problems to them—problems of livelihood and education. It was natural they should think it quite wonderful to have such a view spread at their feet while Payne from an anthology he had brought read aloud "The Eve of St. Agnes." "These lovers fled away into the storm" seemed a thrilling climax while clouds raced across the intensely blue sky, and the silence of the lonely world about them was broken only by distant gunshots—the farmer boys after partridges.

"It would be a rare privilege to have an eve of St. Agnes these days," Janet remarked, "and flee away—only there's nothing as a rule to flee from!"

Arthur was reflecting that one could not be too sure this was true; and Payne, too, wondered if the old academy would not prove some day a good place to flee from. Would that he might take Berenice not into storm but out of it. Seated on the tree trunk, her nobly modeled head and her bright sweater shone out as clearly against the indigo folds of the hills as if she were in a painting by a modern Spanish master. Arthur was looking intently at Janet, and wondering how long he could go on without telling her he loved her. Now it seemed by those strange anachronisms of love that he had known her long before he ever met her. How automatically Haskell was left out of all their plans and pleasures! He wondered if the man had ever been in love. Their way home took them past the deserted village. At that hour the long, straggling row of crumbling houses, sunk in their ancient orchards, presented a ghostly, unearthly air. The empty windows seemed watching the road for inhabitants who were never to return.

A ruddy glow not of the sunset was traced to a burning pile of rubbish at the back of the church. Looming above it was Balder like a basalt image, for his face and clothes were dark with soot; he saluted them with more courtesy than was his wont. "Don't you want to warm you?"

"Balder," Berenice said as they gathered around the fire, "do you remember the last Christmas tree we had in the academy?"

Balder rolled his black eyes. "Do I—sure I do! and I know where it is, too. I saw it—only yesterday—the remains of it. It's up in the belfry of the church there."

"How on earth did it get there?"

He had a pitchfork in his left hand and on this he rested, meditatively watching the fire which lit up all their faces, and made Janet's sweater glow like a coat of gold. "I'll tell you what I know of its history after that Christmas. It was thrown out on one of the sheds, base and all, and lay there for months with some bits of tinsel sticking to it; then Norman, he found it, and he and Jethro took it up the ravine to be a flagpole in front of their tent near the whirl—they had a tiny tent there that summer—'twasn't safe—shale crumbly under their very beds; but there the pole was on its stand; it got washed down in the spring freshets; and bobbed up in the lake again. I fished it out and brought it down here to burn with some other rubbish; some children must have lugged it up those belfry stairs. I remember missin' it when I came down to set fire to the stuff. I never thought no more about that old dried tree till I see it yesterday."

Arthur and Janet dropped behind Berenice and Wilton on the way home. "I don't think Payne ought to have told her about that tree," he said. "That poor child is too morbidly interested in everything connected with her brothers and sisters."

Wilton was meanwhile saying to Berenice: "If I were you I would not speak of the old tree to Mr. Haskell. After all, he has his memories, too; and it may be as well not to revive them."

"That's true!—I hope you will all stay here until I am twenty-one," she added impulsively.

"So far as I am concerned, nothing could drive me away."

As they entered the grounds, Haskell and one of the farmers of the neighborhood came slowly down the walk together. As they passed Berenice and Wilton the farmer was saying: "I can't make Sally come if she don't want to come! And she's afraid—"

They heard no more, but another moment Haskell came running after them. "Of all the ridiculous nonsense, I must say—" he panted as he came up to them. "Here's Obadiah Welford over to tell me his daughter Sally has nerves about this place, and doesn't want to come to school any more."

"That's a pity," Wilton said. "For she's quick and bright. Really, we can't allow her to drop out. Do you want me to walk over to the Welford farm and talk to her?"

Haskell brightened a little. "I wish you would. Go over Sunday afternoon—Berenice will show you the way. One would think when these people had a chance at education they wouldn't be deterred by silly stories. And, Payne, if convenient, I'd like you to go to Birndale next Saturday for some supplies."

"Where is it?"

"Up the line. You can drive yourself over if you want to. It's about fifteen miles—a metropolis compared to Blade—almost a thousand inhabitants, and a motion picture theater!"

Wilton was already sure of one errand he would perform at Birndale—he would have a duplicate made of the key to the room in which the four wax figures were stored. Berenice should go there when she wished.

When he had been in his rooms a few minutes Arthur appeared. "I wish we were going to move out of this place tonight," he announced abruptly.

"Dean of the Mathematics, what's on your mind?"

"You know, Payne, I am not a nervous individual. I came up here as full of health and spirits as a man could be!"

"Don't tell me you're afraid of those four wax figures?"

"I might as well say first as last that I am—and so is Janet; but it's a sense of some danger still lurking. Were we brought up to serve some purpose other than our utility as teachers?"

"How should I, Fleming, know more than you? If I conjecture, my guess is that we were sent for because Berenice insisted on the terms of her father's will being complied with—that she should be well educated. Certainly she is getting intensive training now, if she ever did."

Payne told Arthur of the proposed expedition to Birndale. "That means I can get a duplicate key made of the wax-figure room door—for Berenice's use."

"You think she ought to have one?"

"She'll feel more at ease. I could have told her where Haskell hid the key, but I thought it might make trouble if he found she knew its hiding place. It may make trouble anyway."

"I can sympathize with her. The four figures have seemed much more oppressive to me since they were locked in. If they were kept openly upstairs as we saw them that first night—for everybody to look at and remember or forget, as he chose, we'd soon all forget them. You can't remember anything that's constantly under your nose."

There was a knock on the door. Mrs. Denver stood there, looking quite white. "I hate to trouble you, Mr. Wilton, and you'll think me very foolish, but Mother Martha has been in the kitchen talking of those four children. She even told me what they had on that day—Jethro and Norman in corduroys; the little girl Isabel a green silk blouse, Althea in a violet dress—wash dress, I think she said. I listened as patiently as I could, because the old have so few to listen to them—but when Mr. Haskell came in and asked me to go in that room and see that everything was right in there —and to dust around a bit, I confess I'm too nervous—to go alone."

"Did he give you the key, Mrs. Denver?"

"Yes, and I am to put it into his own hands again."

"I'll go with you! I should think Haskell wouldn't send you in there at this hour of the day. But I'll gladly go with you, Mrs. Denver."

They were passing through the hall when Gordon Haskell met them. He was wearing his academic cloak, and looked more scholarly than usual. "Well, was everything right?" he addressed Mrs. Denver.

"I haven't been yet, sir."

"Payne, may I see you a moment?"

TO BE CONTINUED.

Longevity Secret Now Held to Be Moderation

Ten thousand Japanese more than eighty years old recently told how they live, and their stories agree with the general direction surveyed for the several, still dimly understood, scientific roads to longevity.

These roads are diet, heredity, rest and mental poise. All seem to be converging toward the common goal of moderation.

On the diet there are two recent significant surveys indicating how man may soon learn to prolong his life. The latest, by Dr. C. M. McCay, of the Cornell university animal nutrition laboratory, challenged the present practice of feeding both animals and children enough to produce maximum size in the shortest time.

In his colony of rats Doctor McCay has some already twice normal rat ages, and still going, with the oldest equal to 110 years of human life.

The lives of these animals were doubled by just one thing—feeding them less than enough to let them grow as fast as nature would permit.

The other survey shows diet applied in a manner more nearly fitting humans' desires. This was made by Dr. Henry C. Sherman, of Columbia university, whose experiments led him to predict that the average life span can be prolonged ten years in the near future by choice of diet.

No nation yet has ventured to apply the known laws of heredity that result in longer life. But the Japanese study suggests this type of heredity is somehow mingled with moderation; that those who inherit their longevity come from families neither very small nor extra large, according to the Associated Press.

This study was made by Doctor Nakayama, a school hygienist. To him the 10,000 reported on climate, circumstances and manner of living, hygiene, tastes and family records.

Living in cities, a tabulation of the 10,000 reports shows, decreases the life span. Aged women are more numerous than aged men. Seaside villages were the most numerous among the habitats of the long-lived Japanese. All villages exceeded all towns for long-lived inhabitants and the towns were ahead of the cities.

The majority of those who reported were agricultural workers. Most were of medium build, but some were corpulent and a few slender. They now go to bed early and rise late. They generally have led quiet lives.

Marvelous Dwarf Trees

Only the Japanese cultivate the unique art of growing dwarfed trees in pots for room decoration. Sometimes these little trees, even after hundreds of years, are less than two feet in height, yet their proportions of stem, branch, and leaf are preserved with fidelity. Pots containing groups of six or eight fine ones, suggesting a forest, have frequently been sold for thousands of dollars.—Exchange.

COLORED ROADS

Colored roads are the subject of the newest experiments in Italy for the further improvement of motor traffic movement. The roads of Italy are ideal for motoring save for their shiny surfaces, which are equally annoying under the brilliant sunshine of Italian daytime or nocturnal headlights. Coloring, it is suggested, would remove the brightness of the road surface and different colors could be used for different localities, so that every motorist would know the road to take to get to a particular place. The coloring matter is to be mixed with the surface dressing of the road and nonfading tints are being sought.

Dark Thought

Sometimes we can't help getting the impression that the big idea is to have the armament race and the human race end simultaneously.—Boston Herald.

THE HOLT CAFE

THEO. NESS, Prop.

Desirous of selecting dates between Dec. 10 and 20 to hold their annual show, members of the Marshall County Poultry association made tentative plans for an early show this year at the annual meeting of the association held in the City Hall at Warren recently.

The early dates for the big show are being planned because of possibilities of better weather conditions and roads which will have a tendency to make a bigger and better show, association members stated at the sessions. The dates will be definitely set by committees who will confer with neighboring shows so as not to conflict witn other dates.

Elmer Rosendahl, of Warren, was reelected president of the county association, and all present officers were returned to their posts. Other officers reelected include John O. Allen of Radium, secretary; Ward Clancey, Stephen, vice president; and M. W. Munger, Warren, treas.

Following the bussiess meeting a program of entertainment numbers was given after which a delicious luncheon was served to members of the association and friends who were present.—Warren Sheaf.

Marshall county corn-hog contract signers can save themselves money and hasten the receipt of their final 1934 corn-hog payments by cooperating closely with the local farm supervisors in their final complianee inspection, says the chairman of the county allotment committee.

This inspection, he says, will begin November 30 and be completed by December 8. The final payment will be made to farmers complying with their contracts on or about February 1, 1935.

All local administrative costs of compliance checking, are deducted from the producers' adjustment payments. The more rapidly and accurately this work is done, the less it will cost the contract signers and the sooner their contracts will be certified for payment.

Since the supervisor must count all hogs on farms under contract, each farmer will do well to find out when the supervisor will call and have his hogs penned up awaiting the supervisor's arrival. He should also have his sales slips ready. When ever possible, the supervisor will notify the contract signer of the approximate time of his visit.

Corn At All Seasons

BECAUSE the frost is on the pumpkin and the corn is in the shock is no good reason why we shouldn't go right on eating corn—ripe whole kernels of corn fresh from the cob, or, if our delicatessen dealer carries a large assortment of canned foods, we can even continue to eat corn on the cob!

It is a boon to be able to have canned corn at all seasons, because it is particularly in the winter that we need the energy and vitality which corn affords. Know a variety of ways to serve corn. Here are some tested recipes.

For Cool Days

Cream of Corn and Mushroom Soup: Cook the following ingredients in a double boiler for fifteen minutes: the contents of one 11-ounce can of corn, three cups milk, one large onion sliced, one small stalk celery and one bay leaf. Strain. Use the contents of one 4-ounce can of mushrooms, cutting the mushrooms fine and sauteing in two tablespoons butter for three minutes. Add two tablespoons flour and stir smooth. Then add the mushroom liquor slowly, stirring until thick and creamy. Add to the hot milk mixture and cook again until smooth and creamy. Season to taste with salt and pepper and add one-half cup cream. This fills six cups.

Scalloped Corn and Veal: Mash the contents of a 7-ounce can of veal loaf. Put a layer of cream style canned corn in a baking dish, then a layer of veal loaf, then a layer of bread crumbs with dots of butter and a sprinkling of salt and pepper. Repeat until all is used up (using one and one-half cups canned corn, and one-half cup bread crumbs) having corn, crumbs and butter on the top. Pour in one-fourth cup milk and bake for thirty minutes in a moderate oven, 375 degrees. This serves four persons.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

Safety education is a very important item in our schools today. It should be taught to all classes. Teaching or preaching safety, however, is not enough. If the only thing a child gets out of safety education is a bundle of facts he can recite to the teacher or visitor. I don't believe we have him a thing. He must "do" what he is being taught -- he must do what people preach to him. A famous author once said "I have quit trying to be good, but I have not quit trying to do good."

That is the thought. Cultivate safe habits in the children through safety education. Safety education must, of course, be based on intelligence and facts and ideals, but it must have coupled with that desirable and safe habits.

Safety education is a conception of life or a state of mind. It must, however, at the same time create a machine or a thought for building efficient and safe conduct.

To the Voters of Marshall County.

You have given me a splendid endorsement -- one that I am deeply thankful for, and it shall be my endeaver to so serve you as your clerk of court that it will meet with the approval of those who opposed me as well as those who supported me, and I want to take this method of expressing to all of you my most sincere appreciation for good will, your support and your vote.

your servant,
Alfred C. Swandby.

Appreciation

I wish to extend my heartiest appreciation to the voters for the splendid support given me at the recent election of county auditor. Especially to those who so bravely supported me against the unfair charges circulated by my opposition the very last days of the campaign, regarding the administration during my term of office. I will discuss the charges made in some future issue of this paper. Again thanking you, I am

Sincerely
Levi G. Johnson.

Garter Snake Habits

Although garter snakes are viviparous, giving birth to their young, the parent snakes are not concerned with caring for their young after they are born. They may be found near a crevice where their mother is sunning, but this is only a coincidence. Newly born garter snakes shift for themselves from their earliest existence.

HOME RAMBLES

Last week we went out a few days in search of the members of the hoofed tribe but failed to bring any venison home. However there are still a few days left in which to loook for a deer und we may be lucky enough to get one next trip.

Yes we went a huntin' for to shoot a bear, spent four days in the woods and never saw a hair. So we turned to shooting deer but boy those babies are fast. Shot at one in an opening and when the bullet hit the spot we aimed at the deer had already past.

County Boy Wins 1st Place

Showing a grade Hampshire lamb against 34 lambs in the other breeds of lambs class at the Junior Livestock Show held at South St. Paul, Nov. 10-15, Clifford Hurst a member of the Warrenton 4-H Club was awarded a first place in this class. At the sale held on Thursday, this lamb was sold for $.35 per pound to Herbert W. White.

George Monrow, a member of the Radium 4-H Club was awarded an 8th placing on his Shorthorn Baby Beef in the senior calf class. This placing allowed the sale of this calf as an individual and at the sale the calf was sold no Northrup King and Co. at 15c per pound.

Other 4-H Club members to receive placings on their lambs and Baby Beeves are as follows:

Dorothy Hirst, Warren, 13th in Southdown Lamb Class; Harry Poolman, Argyle, 15th in Shropshire lamb class; Martha Jadeke, Warren, 12th in Aberdeen Angus Senior Beef Class.

Considering that there were 876 entries at the Livestock Show the showing made by the Marshall County delegation was very good and much credit is due to Mr. Harrison who has had charge of the club work during the past year.

Other 4-H Club members making the trip to the Jr. Livestock Show are as follows:

Benjiman Loeslie, Radium, Angus Baby Beef; Lillian Stoltman, Argyle, Pen of Turkeys; Oliver Lambine, Argyle, Hereford Baby Beef; Ralph Knutson; Warren; Fat Barrow; Donald Kurz, Warren, Fat Barrow; Evelyn Jadeke, Warren, Angus Baby Beef; Lloyd Larson, Holt, Angus Baby Beef; Wm. Anderson, Warren, Lamb Trio.

Quality is a very important factor in the production of cream, with inspectors inspecting all butter that comes on the market, for foreign matter such as flies and other things that may get into the cream, which may result in a total loss of some churnings. King Won Race

State Auditor Stafford King, Republican, was reelected by 648 votes over John T. Lyons, Farmer-Labor candidate, according to official returns of November 6 general election announced Tuesday by the state canvassing board. What we are unable to understand about the recent election is, why did so many Farmer-Labor members vote for King, Holm and Schmahl that all three were favored by re-election to their post?

These three republican state officers and the Governor and Attorney General are the big five on the State's Executive Council and, it appears as if the voters were afraid to let their Farmer-Labor friends get in there alone to run the big state affairs.

The official results of the election in which 1,064,322 votes were cast, the second highest in history of the state, showed that Governor Olson was re-elected by a plurality of 72,453 over Martin A. Nelson, Republican.

The official results made no changes in the previously-announced unofficial winners. U. S. Senator Henrik Shiptead was re-elected on the Farmer-Labor ticket by more than 200,000 votes, getting 593,379, and defeating Einar Hoidale, Democrat who got 294,757, and N. J. Holmberg, Republican, who got 200,083.

Hjalmer Peterson, Askov, newspaper publisher and running-mate to Governor Olson, received a larger plurality than the governor, with 438,897 votes, defeating Franklin Ellsworth, Republican, who had 331,747.

All present justices of the state supreme court, running for re-election, were winners

Other state officials named were Mike Holm, veterean Republican, re-elected secretary of state; State Treasurer Julius A. Schmahl, Republican, re-elected; Attorney General Harry H. Peterson, Farmer-Labor, re-elected; Charles Munn, former speaker of the house and running on the Farmer-Labor ticket was elected railroad and warehouse commissioner; Russell O. Gunderson, Farmer-Laborite, as clerk of the state supreme court.

Nelson-Reierson

Clara Nelson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Knut Nelson, and Lawrence Reierson, son of the late Ole Reierson, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony Monday evening, at the Ole Ellingson home.

Emma Nelson, sister of the bride was bridesmaid, and Johnny Ness was best man.

COMPTROLLER COMMENDS INSTITUTE OF BANKING

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The American Institute of Banking, said to be the most successful project of its kind in the field of applied adult education, has performed a valuable function in training bank clerks for "sound public service as well as personal success," J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, said here in a recent radio address. The institute is a section of the American Bankers Association.

"While imparting useful knowledge, it has improved the morale of banking personnel and has stimulated in its members an intelligent interest in national and international monetary problems," Mr. O'Connor said. "Its courses cover a wide field in banking. Among the subjects, one finds Bank Organization and Operation, Commercial Law, Negotiable Instruments Law, and Economics, in the Pre-Standard Division; followed by such subjects as Money and Banking, Credit Management, Financial Statement Analysis and Bank Management, in the Standard Division.

"Each and every subject is one which is necessary to a knowledge of banking. However, the institute does not stop here, but encourages graduate study in Corporation Finance, Trust Service, Farm Credit Administration and Business Forecasting. Again it emphasizes in special courses the importance of the less technical but highly beneficial study of Constructive Customer Relations, Banking Fundamentals and Public Speaking. No comment is necessary on these courses: their value is at once apparent."

BOOKLET ON FARM CREDIT

A booklet has been published by the Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association, on "Factors Affecting Farm Credit," for the purpose of furthering on a national scale the taking of farm inventories and the making of credit statements as sponsored by the commission in cooperation with the state colleges of agriculture and the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The goal is better relationships between farmers and their banks.

The booklet is devoted to the types of loans generally required by farmers, the need for farm credit, how it can be obtained, when it is safe to borrow, what principles to follow to establish credit in advance of needs, and how both the lender and borrower are interested in sound, productive farm credit.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

Every school house should have a systematic fire drill. Schools can control the terrific loss of life when fires do break out by having closely supervised and carefully planned fire drills.

I recommend you get in touch with your local fire department and arrange to have the firemen through their services and by arrangement with the fire chief, hold periodic drills and get the children used to a signal system. After the drills have been properly held, it has been felt pratical to set an alarm unexpectedly and see the children file out. They do dot know whether a fire actually exists or not, but never theless a frequency of fire drills puts confidence into their own efforts and in the event of a large fire, serious disaster can be spared.

Organize your school for fire drills. It is worth while. Every father and mother should demand this.

Hear Wm. Munch Tues.

According to word received at the News office on Wednesday afternoon, Wm. Munch, Crookston, one of the oldest State Game Wardens in that service will be here next Tuesday evening, Nov. 27, at 8 o'clock in the schoolhouse and give a lecture on conservation and other subjects pertaining to his work.

Inasmuch as conservation has been added as a 4-H Club project, you are urged to attend this meeting. Parents are also invited.

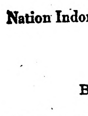
News Review of Current Events the World Over

Nation Indorses President and the New Deal at the Polls—Democrats Gain Nine Seats in the Senate.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© by Western Newspaper Union.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT and his fellow New Dealers had every reason to gloat over the results of the elections, for, generally speaking, their policies and acts were endorsed by the citizens of the United States by what amounted to a real landslide. The Democrats gained nine seats in the United States senate; and on incomplete returns, appeared to have just about held their present strength in the lower house.

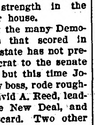


Joseph Guffey

Outstanding among the many Democratic victories was that scored in Pennsylvania. That state has not previously sent a Democrat to the senate in a half a century, but this time Joseph Guffey, the party boss, rode roughshod over Senator David A. Reed, leading adversary of the New Deal, and sent him to the discard. Two other persistent critics of the administration who were retired were Senator Simeon B. Fess of Ohio, beaten by former Gov. Vic Donahey; and Senator Arthur R. Robinson of Indiana, soundly walloped by Sherman Minton. Hatfield of West Virginia, Walcott of Connecticut, Hebert of Rhode Island, Kean of New Jersey, Goldsborough of Maryland and Patterson of Missouri, all Republican senators, must give up their seats respectively to young Rush D. Holt, Francis T. Maloney, Peter G. Gerry, A. Harry Moore, George L. Radcliffe and Harry S. Truman, all Democrats.

Upton Sinclair, the extreme radical, had the fun of scaring California out of its wits with his EPIC campaign for the governorship, and at little or no expense to himself; but the national administration had turned him down and the Republican nominee, Gov. Frank F. Merriam, won by a handsome majority. So the wealthy "refugees" who make California their home decided not to abandon the state. Hiram Johnson, being the nominee of everyone for re-election, goes back to the senate.

Wisconsin remained true to the La Follette dynasty even though it had created a new "Progressive" party for its own uses. Senator Bob La Follette had been patted on the head by President Roosevelt, and John M. Callahan, the Democratic nominee for the senate, was not acceptable to the administration because he was a friend of Al Smith; so Bob came through with a big plurality over Callahan and John B. Chapple, the Republican candidate. To clinch the victory of the third party, Philip La Follette was elected governor again, defeating Gov. Albert Schmedeman, Democrat, and Howard T. Greene, Republican.



Sherman Minton

There was a crumb of comfort for the Republicans in the re-election of Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan, who has condemned parts and espoused other parts of the New Deal. One other crumb, less comforting, was afforded them in Maryland where Albert C. Ritchie was defeated in his attempt to annex a fifth consecutive term as governor. He was beaten by Harry W. Nice, a Republican of Baltimore whom Ritchie defeated for the same place in 1919.

The old line Republicans succeeded in re-electing Senator Austin in Vermont and Senator Townsend in Delaware.

Illinois, New York and Massachusetts were among the states that were swept by the Democrats. In the first named they took five house seats from the Republicans, the defeated including the veteran Fred Britten. New Yorkers returned Dr. Royal S. Copeland to the senate and H. H. Lehman to the governorship by tremendous majorities. Senator David I. Walsh was re-elected in Massachusetts, and Jim Curley, three times mayor of Boston, was made governor.

In the main the Democratic campaign had been skilfully conducted under the leadership of Postmaster Jim Farley. A fight to oust the "ins" always is difficult, and the Republicans in their hearts had not hoped for much. They did not get even the little they had expected. For at least two years President Roosevelt is assured of full support by congress for whatever policies and experiments he may undertake, and the voters of the nation have told him to go ahead and do what he can to restore the country to prosperity.

SEVEN states voted on repudiation of prohibition and only Kansas, still stoutly Republican, remained dry. The others, all turning wet, were Florida, West Virginia, Nebraska, South Dakota, Wyoming and Idaho.

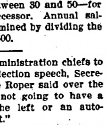
In Nebraska Senator George Norris succeeded in putting over his pet amendment to the state constitution providing for a small one-house legislature, and there is a belief that he will run for governor in 1936 to guide the experiment. Under the amendment, the 1935 legislature will pick a number of legislators—between 30 and 50—for its one-house successor. Annual salaries will be determined by dividing the number into $37,500.

FIRST of the administration chiefs to make a post-election speech, Secretary of Commerce Roper said over the radio: "We are not going to have a dictatorship to the left or an autocracy to the right."

He insisted that the Roosevelt recovery program contemplates the restoration of private profits and that, in fact, the government's essential revenues, through the income tax, are dependent upon private profits.

"As soon as future relief requirements can be determined," Secretary Roper said in announcing a new approach to the relief problem, "the major portion of these expenditures should be assumed by the states and localities, with federal assistance supplied only in those instances where the situation cannot possibly be met without federal aid. We need to discourage the growing tendency to 'let the federal government do it.'"

GASTON DOUMERGUE, utterly unable to make headway against the political schemers in the French cabinet, has resigned the premiership and returned to the retirement from which he was called last February to save the country from imminent civil war. The six Radical Socialist ministers, determined to frustrate his plan for constitutional reform, refused the premier's offer to postpone discussion of this scheme until after a regular budget was voted, provided the chamber of deputies first passed a three months' budget. Doumergue thereupon read his resignation, and at the suggestion of Edouard Herriot, leader of the Radical Socialists, the entire cabinet resigned.



Gaston Doumergue

President Lebrun immediately asked Pierre Laval, foreign minister, to form another coalition government, but he refused the commission. So the difficult job was turned over to Pierre-Etienne Flandin, a left Republican who was minister of public works in the Doumergue cabinet.

The crisis aroused fear of armed conflict in Paris between the Socialists and the so-called Fascist groups, for both these parties called on their militant elements to be ready for action. There was danger, too, that the meeting of war veterans and patriotic societies on Armistice day would be turned into an anti-government demonstration.

OFFICERS and crew of the Morro Castle are held to blame for the heavy loss of life when the liner turned, in the government's report on the disaster, but no attempt is made to fix the origin of the fire that took 134 lives.

"After a careful examination of the wreck and evaluation of the testimony," says the report submitted by Dickerson N. Hoover, assistant director of the steamboat inspection service, "it is not possible to state what the exact cause was."

Blame for the catastrophe is placed by the government also on the construction of the vessel itself.

FOR the information of those who are hazy as to what the Germanic Faith movement is all about, here are the nine commandments just issued for the neo-pagans, to replace the ten commandments of the Christian Bible:

1. Honor the deity, the World foundation.
2. Honor ancestors and grandchildren.
3. Honor the great of thy people.
4. Honor thy parents.
5. Keep yourself clean.
6. Be loyal to your people.
7. Do not steal.
8. Be truthful.
9. Help the noble.

SOVIET Russia celebrated the seventeenth anniversary of the Bolshevist revolution with a parade of the great Red army before the tomb of Lenin in Moscow, and at the same time the Comintern, or Third Internationale, issued by cable an appeal to the toilers of the world to unite in a common front against imperialist wars and Fascism.

BECAUSE of her personal achievements and not because she is the wife of the President, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt has been awarded the second Gimbel prize of $1,000 and a medal for outstanding work for America. She will receive the award in Philadelphia on December 12.

Mrs. Roosevelt has requested that the $1,000 be applied toward sending a child suffering from the effects of infantile paralysis to Warm Springs,

UNDER the auspices of the National Association of Manufacturers, a drive has been started "to prevent labor union coercion," and all state legislatures, when they convene, are to be asked to enact six specific provisions "for the purpose of fixing the legal responsibility of labor organizations for their acts." The association says it is moved to this course because it believes the federal government is at last aware of the "terrorism" practiced by union members against other employees who desire to act.

The laws to be asked of legislatures are:

1. To make sympathetic strikes and sympathetic lockouts illegal.
2. To make both employers and unions equally responsible for the observance of contracts.
3. To make it illegal for any association of employers or employees to expel, suspend, fine or otherwise punish members refusing to participate in an illegal strike or lockout.
4. To make picketing illegal when it is carried on in such a manner as to intimidate or coerce employees or customers.
5. To declare illegal employment contracts requiring a person either to join or not to join any labor organization.
6. To require written consent of the employee before the deduction of any part of his wages for the payment of organization dues may be made.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT agreed to extend the automobile industry code until February 1 without changing its wage or hours provisions. The American Federation of Labor had demanded an immediate and drastic revision of the code, and this the President refused. Mr. Roosevelt, however, said he believes the code needs revamping, and he hinted that on February 1 he may demand that the industry stabilize employment and pay rolls.

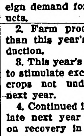
"I have no hesitation in telling you," the President wrote in a letter to William Green, president of the A. F. of L., and Alvan Macauley, secretary of the Automobile Manufacturers' association, "that there are a number of matters connected with this code with which I have never been fully satisfied."

He disclosed both in his letter and a separate formal statement that he is launching an investigation into working conditions and wages in the industry, with especial attention to the workers' annual earnings.

FOLLOWING a week's conference with agricultural economists from 40 states, officials of the Department of Agriculture and leaders of the AAA, the bureau of agricultural economics has issued a bulky report forecasting generally improved conditions for the farm industry during the coming year. Here are the chief points in the predictions:

1. Greatly reduced supplies of most farm products will be seen, which, with improvement in consumer purchasing power, will probably bring a higher level of farm income during the first half of 1935, this despite low foreign demand for American farm products.
2. Farm production will be larger than this year's unusually small production.
3. This year's higher prices may tend to stimulate excessive planting of some crops not under production control next year.
4. Continued improvement in demand late next year will depend primarily on recovery in the durable goods industries.
5. "A small improvement in the purchasing power of farm families may, in general, be expected."
6. Prices of goods used in farm production are expected to average somewhat higher, at least until June, 1935.
7. The farm credit situation "will continue to show gradual improvement above the bad conditions of the past several years."
8. Next year's wheat crop is expected to result in an export surplus, with prices hanging close to an export basis.
9. Substantial advance in prices of meat animals is expected, with no material expansion in live stock numbers sighted before 1936.
10. Next year's wool clip will be the smallest in several years, with prices dependent on world production.
11. "A generally favorable" outlook is seen for poultry raisers, with prices remaining at seasonably high levels until next summer.

FRANCIS J. GORMAN, head of the United Textile Workers' committee that directed the recent strike, in a letter to George A. Sloan, head of the Cotton Textile institute, said that union labor would be glad to co-operate with the industry in developing new markets for the output of the factories.



F. J. Gorman

He declared that after controversies had been ironed out by the federal board named as a result of the strike, representatives of the two sides could "begin conferences looking toward the improvement of the industry."

Mentioning the increased competition from Japanese goods and other factors which caused demand for American textiles to fall "millions of yards" below production capacity, he said:

"A part of the purpose of the conferences which I have in mind would be to create joint employer-union machinery for the expansion and extension of the textile market. Such a program would be in furtherance of the interests of workers and employers alike."

Let Our Motto Be

GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD

Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

YOU CAN PASTEURIZE MILK

A city mother was telling a country mother how lucky she was that she could raise her baby where there was clean air and open fields and sunshine.

"I know these are important," said the country mother, "but you city people have pasteurized milk, while we never know what disease our babies will get in the milk they drink."

The country mother was right. Pasteurization of milk is one of the greatest boons to health that the city offers children. Milk is one of man's best foods, but it is also a good food for germs. Germs grow well in milk. Milk from cattle certified to be free from disease and handled by persons free from disease is good wholesome milk, but unless this certification of health has been made, then a family should not take any chances on milk that is used for drinking or in the preparation of uncooked food. Unpasteurized milk may of course be used safely in cooked or baked dishes.

Milk, as stated above, is a food in which many kinds of germs thrive. Some of these are harmless to man, but, unfortunately, many are decidedly harmful. Among these are the tuberculosis, typhoid fever, septic sore throat and infectious diarrhea germs.

Pasteur discovered that when he heated milk to a certain degree for a certain length of time, these harmful bacteria were destroyed and the milk was safe for drinking. This principle is the one used in the large commercial pasteurizing plants in the large cities.

In a survey made several years ago we learned that 70 per cent of the population in Illinois outside of Chicago was without benefit of pasteurization.

So in the research laboratory of the University of Illinois we worked out a plan that would allow for home pasteurization. The various steps may seem complicated the first time, but after a little practice, you will find that the routine is very simple. Certainly much simpler and less worrisome than the care of a sick child would be.

We devised two simple temperature indicators containing chemicals that would "clear" at the desired temperatures. By the first you can easily tell when the right heat point is reached; by the second when the danger point of coolness is reached and the milk is no longer safe for the baby.

The heat-telling indicator is a sausage-shaped glass tube 11 mm. in diameter and 45 mm. long, into which 400 mg. of palmitic acid is placed.

The cooling-point indicator is a glass tube 4½ mm. in diameter, approximately 8 inches in length, with a bulb blown at one end. This bulb is filled with menthol, and the open end of the tube sealed.

With these two tubes, a vacuum bottle of one quart capacity, and a pan of more than one quart capacity with a side lip to facilitate pouring of milk from pan into bottle, you are ready to go into the pasteurization business. The equipment necessary to carry out this method of pasteurization will cost less than $3. If you want to pasteurize more than one quart at a time, then do not use a larger bottle, but get several quart bottles. The results are better.

Pasteurization technique:

1. Clean out vacuum bottle with hot soap water several times. Rinse well with water about 160 degrees F., fill bottle with this water and let stand.
2. Wash the stopper well, place in a pan of water and boil for ten minutes. Pour water out of pan, leaving the clean stopper in the pan.
3. Clean the lipped pan well and pour a quart of strained milk into it. Milk should be less than 12 hours from the cow.
4. Drop indicator No. 1 into the milk. Place pan on stove and bring temperature of milk up slowly, stirring constantly with a clean spoon.
5. When the indicator becomes transparent, the temperature of the milk has reached 145. Remove milk from stove immediately and take out indicator with the spoon.
6. Pour the hot water out of the vacuum bottle.
7. Pour the hot milk into the bottle. Seal with stopper.
8. Set the bottle in a warm cupboard in the kitchen.
9. Do not use this milk until it has stood in the vacuum bottle for at least one hour.
10. When ready to use the milk, hold one end of Indicator No. 2 in the hand and put the bulb end down into the milk in the bottle. Hold for two to four minutes. If the milk is above 115, the bulb will clear. If below, it will remain opaque.
11. If the bulb clears, pour out enough milk for a feeding and replace the stopper, and put the bottle back into the cupboard.
12. If the bulb does not clear, the milk is unsafe for the baby. It can then be used in cooking or set aside to sour.

If this technique is followed carefully, the milk usually stays safe for about eight to ten hours, so that a pasteurization in the morning and one in the evening will give the baby safe milk all the time.

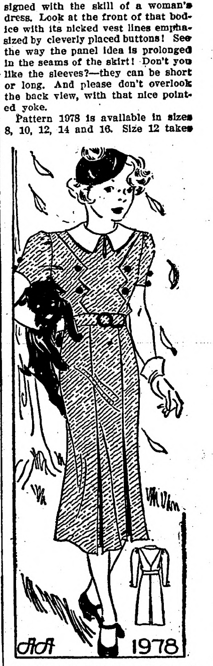
Does Away With "Awkward Age"

PATTERN 1978

This is a frock for what used to be called the "awkward age"—the years between eight and sixteen. Styles like this have made it one of the most attractive feminine ages. The model is as young as youth, but designed with the skill of a woman's dress. Look at the front of that bodice with its nicked vest lines emphasized by cleverly placed buttons! See the way the panel idea is prolonged in the seams of the skirt! Don't you like the sleeves?—they can be short or long. And please don't overlook the back view, with that nice pointed yoke.

Pattern 1978 is available in sizes 8, 10, 12, 14 and 16. Size 12 takes 3¼ yards 36-inch fabric and ⅜ yard contrasting. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.



Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

Add to Fire Defenses

About 20,000 miles of communication lines, truck trails, and permanent fire defenses were built in the national forests by the Civilian Conservation corps in the last year. In addition, more than 10,000 miles have been completed by men employed with P. W. A. funds. Workers on these and other jobs also helped to check outbreaks of fire.

Along with excessive drouth, 1934 brought an unusual number of "dry" thunderstorms in the western states, starting hundreds of lightning fires in the forests. Following the storms, drying winds whipped the glowing snags into flaming torches which spread the flames far and wide. A total of 9,338 fires broke out in the national forests up to September 10 this year, compared with 7,385 for the same period in 1931, and an average of 5,907 for the past three years. Fifty per cent of this season's fires were man-caused.

Why Liquid Laxatives are Back in Favor

The public is fast returning to the use of liquid laxatives. People have learned that the right dose of a properly prepared liquid laxative will bring a more natural movement without any discomfort at the time, or after.

The dose of a liquid laxative can be varied to suit the needs of the individual. The action can thus be regulated. A child is easily given the right dose. And mild liquid laxatives do not irritate the kidneys.

Doctors are generally agreed that senna is a natural laxative. It does not drain the system like the cathartics that leave you so thirsty. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a liquid laxative which relies on senna for its laxative action. It gently helps the average person's constipated bowels until nature restores their regularity.

You can always get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any drug store, ready for use.

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a faculty position in Lostland Academy, Janet Mercer meets Prof. Arthur Fleming, also on his way to the Academy. At the school they are struck by an air of mystery pervading the place. Gordon Haskell, proprietor, welcomes them. Wilton Payne completes the Academy faculty. In a schoolroom Janet finds a group which the teachers had supposed were scholars, are wax figures. Haskell explains unusual circumstances connected with the conduct of the Academy. Among the pupils is Berenice Bracebridge, daughter of the late owner of the school. The story of the tragedy of Lostland Academy is that of two sisters and two brothers of Berenice, who lost their lives in the water, some years ago. The wax figures were modeled in the likenesses of the four, and Doctor Bracebridge's will provided that they must be preserved. Payne learns from Berenice that an uncouth giant whom Janet had seen with Haskell is named Balder, and is a valuable servant. From Jerry Moore, the only witness of the drowning of the children, Payne learns particulars of the tragedy. He begins to take an increasing interest in Berenice, as Fleming does in Janet. Reading diaries kept by Doctor Bracebridge, Payne senses something sinister in the drowning of the children. In the belfry of the old church he finds a long discarded Christmas tree. Its presence puzzles him. Balder makes a halting explanation of its preservation.

"I am going down with Mrs. Denver."

"Why?"

"She's afraid."

Haskell gave an impatient exclamation. "How glad I'll be when Berenice attains her majority. Then we'll have no more of the wax figures. Well, let the dusting go, Mrs. Denver. Here, give me the key. Really a woman of your years should have better sense."

"You should have mentioned the figures in your letter, sir," she gave back; "unless you were afraid to mention them."

He scowled but made no answer. Payne was moving toward the library. "No, not there! Here in the drawing room."

"You don't favor the library much."

"Too many memories of my poor stepfather. What I want to say is this: Balder tells me that Berenice was talking about a Christmas tree the family had the year before the accident. Now, what started her on that?"

"Isn't it natural her mind should sometimes go back to the very early days?"

"It's just as well you should not encourage her recollections. I want her to look forward—not back!"

"With all my heart—so do I! Why is that door kept locked?" Wilton added.

"The archives of the parish are kept in a chest in that room," Haskell explained smoothly.

"Oh, well, there's every reason—"

"Yes, every reason."

The two men faced each other across the marble-topped center table; one like a study in burnt umber; the other a bold and melancholy etching in black and white. Haskell's dead-white hand pressed down against the marble, his veins as black as the veins in the stone. His ring had cut a scarlet circle about his ring finger.

"Payne," he went on, "you don't know how oppressive this ancient place is to me. I'd like to leave it to its ivy and its bats. And the ghosts of all the dead presidents could come and ring its bell if they had a mind to—Ah, Berenice, come in."

She stood in the doorway. She had changed to a black taffeta dress with many ruffles that stood out like the petals of a black rose. Wilton went away. Berenice watched him go; and her guardian, appraising her as the prettiest of sublunary girls in that quaint dress, remarked jealously: "You have brightened very much since these teachers came."

"Naturally! They have transformed the place."

"Don't get too fond of them. They will not be here forever."

"Neither shall I!"

"No—after your majority—or your—marriage, we can sell the old place; though who would buy it I don't know—unless it were some doctor to turn it into a sanatorium."

"Yes, it might make a sanatorium. You might be the doctor."

"Oh, no—nothing like that. Berenice—darling—I've hoped for just one thing during the course of these years."

She met his eyes steadily, though she knew what was coming; had known it before the ministering angels of education had appeared upon the scene. It was her acute realization of the trend of her guardian's emotions that had led, indeed, to her demanding a small corps of teachers to finish her education; together with a strong though dimly defined instinct that if any ghosts haunted the old academy it was the specter of a mystery not yet solved.

"Just one thing," he said brokenly, "your—love—the hope that some day you would be my wife."

She hesitated before she answered him. "Guardian, that can never be!"

His astonishment, his pain, was genuine. Across her mind floated the memory of a fairy tale once told her by Mother Martha, of a wolf who desired to become human. Gordon Haskell's eyes at that moment were oddly like those of a wounded animal baffled in its attempt to step from its own kingdom into another.

"You are very young, Berenice. Do not be final."

"I know that it could never be, Guardian."

"Why not?" he gasped crisply. "What is wrong with me that you cannot love me?"

"Love doesn't come at a call. You've been very good—devoted to our family—"

He stepped back a few paces, his face ashy white, his hand clutching with the old gesture of pain at his heart.

"You have an attack! Shall I bring you water?"

"Yes, hurry!"

He was sitting by the fire when she returned. After drinking the water he straightened up again and muttered, "I must avoid emotion. Don't let these young teachers make love to you, Berenice. You have money, they have none!"

She flushed with anger! "How can you imply such things, Guardian! They have been most kind to me—anyone is kind, I think, who stays in this old academy."

"They are well paid."

"People of their attainments would be well paid anywhere. I repeat—it's a kind of high sacrifice and devotion to stay here!"

He looked furtively at her. "Why?"

"Because of the wax figures, and the old sad memories. Balder says the last Christmas tree we ever had is in the belfry room. It ought to be destroyed."

"I'll tell him to burn it."

"And I should like the key to the room where the figures are."

"No, no, my dear! I know best."

Janet entered at that moment, and Berenice welcomed her warmly. "Let us go up and see Mother Martha," she proposed. "In the east wing."

Janet hesitated. "Have I your permission, Mr. Haskell?"

"Certainly," he answered, not looking at her.

Berenice led the way down the corridors—up a staircase, through one totally deserted and shut-up floor to a large room with a fireplace under the eaves. It was hung with photographs of the Bracebridge family, and on one shelf was a collection of children's toys. Before the soft-coal fire sat Mother Martha in her rocking chair, her hands in her black silk gloves, her bright shawl wound closely around her stooping shoulders.

"I've brought Janet to see you!"

"Sit you down! It's been a fine day—like the days when they were all here; I used to hear them runnin' and callin' me. The brown man's locked 'em up now."

"Just the figures, Mother Martha."

"They're yours not less, Berenice. You have your Sunday frock on!"

"Yes, Mother Martha."

The old woman searched Janet's face anxiously. "You are not taking her away?"

"No—oh, no!"

Mother Martha rocked herself in her chair, gazed at the glowing coals. Up in this high story the wind whistled as if they were in a tower. "Ain't you been up the ravine yet?"

"Yes, once."

"'Tis an awful place—a place of death."

"Yes, dear," Berenice said soothingly; "but don't think of that now. Show Janet all the things you knit so beautifully."

When they were going away Mother Martha called Janet back to her and, grasping her arm, drew her down confidentially. "He laughs at the stories they tell about this old house—but it's all gospel truth. I seen 'em—walking."

CHAPTER VI

The Welford farm was up a lonely road about two miles from the academy. Wilton Payne walked there alone, for he wanted to put his thoughts in some kind of orderly array before talking to Sally Welford on the folly of superstition. What he gradually evolved from his rather confused emotions was the theory that all superstitions are woven around some fact. They may embroider this fact to the point of fantasy, but it remains a solid center beneath the tapestry of imagination. What was the fact at Lostland academy from which people departed into the uncertain and shivery region of fears and fancies? With his best efforts, Wilton could run down but two facts of enough importance to set in motion the machinery of hauntings or of some blight that killed all joy of living in the ancient academy. One was the sudden deaths of four adored children, with the consequent illness and mental impairment of Doctor Bracebridge; the other the by-product of the first—the four wax figures.

Sally herself admitted him to the chilly hall of the farmhouse, with its striped green-and-white paper and green glass hanging lamp; and ushered him into the darkened best room and invited him to be seated on one of a set of horsehair chairs, from which he could contemplate another glass lamp in a nest of knitted wool—all shells and balls; and the oval-framed photographs of the family.

"I'll call Pop," she said.

"It's you I want to see, Sally."

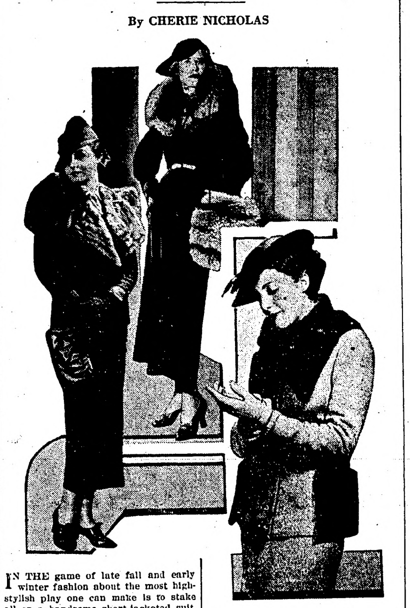
Fur-Trimmed Short-Jacketed Suit

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



IN THE game of late fall and early winter fashion about the most high-stylish play one can make is to stake all on a handsome short-jacketed suit, hiplength to be explicit, which is lavishly trimmed with luxurious fur. As an after thought add more than one fetching blouse. Begin with a blouse of tinsel knit, then a plaid velvet or taffeta and so on, leading up to a sumptuous tunic of glittering lame.

It is a question which is more exciting in point of novelty and elegance, the materials which go to make up these dramatic suits or the furs which adorn them. The new tweeds which fashion as many of the smartest suits are a treat to the eye both in the matter of color and novel weave.

However, all is not tweed that is tailored, for broadcloth is "in" this season and best-dressed women are ordering their suits made of handsome duvetyne in rich vibrant reds or greens or browns. Indeed than duvetyne we know of no smarter material for the new jacket suits, that is, unless you choose velvet.

As to interpreting the glories of velvet suits as "now is" in the style parade the most extravagant adjectives fall short of doing the theme justice. The best we can do is to call your attention to the fetching velvet costume centered in the illustration and let you judge for yourself as to what heights of glory this season's velvet suit fashions are being carried. A very choice grade of black velvet was selected for this formal afternoon suit. The sleeves are intriguingly worked with tucks to give them fullness at the elbow. The belt and pocket are decorated with gold-metal discs and the blouse is of red and gold lame. A flattering silver fox collar with a huge matching muff add "class" to this outfit de luxe. By the way we are going to see more muffs during the next few months than we have seen for winters and winters past.

The smart town suit to the left radiates that feeling of quiet elegance which bespeaks refinement and good taste. The brown striped woolen of which it is tailored is a more than ordinary weave. The effective styling of the generous mink collar is noteworthy in that it emphasizes the vogue which calls for clever rever treatments. This accent on designful revers is very noticeable throughout the fall and winter mode. The blouse worn with this suit is chartreuse crepe patterned with a gold threading.

The interesting note to carry in mind in regard to the suit to the right is that the jacket tops a one-piece dress—an excellent idea for winter warmth as well as costume chic. The jacket-and-dress suit is a favorite theme with designers. Very often the scheme is carried out in two woolens such as plaid for the dress with duvetyn or velveteen in a solid color for the jacket, the plaid repeated in the jacket lining. Nutria fur trims the light oxford wool suit in the picture. Fashion reports from Paris all stress the importance of nutria trimming and other similar furs. Another outstanding fashion is the black woolen suit which is trimmed in white ermine, galyak or breitschwantz.

WINTER GLOVE-MUFF BECOMES ACROBATIC

The winter glove-muff is becoming almost acrobatic. With wide and high cuffs reaching to the elbow, they look like coat sleeves, as they are intended to look, and when folded back over the hands and snapped together to form the muff, they in no way detract from the sleeve arrangement of the coat.

So wide is the cuff and so cleverly is the glove attached to it that the whole thing can also be worn as a hat. The hand of the glove is turned inside and lies flat across the top of the head, while the cuff—either of fur or fabric—forms the hat that is crushed into shape and held in place with a pin, feather, flower or button.

Milliners Are Awaiting New Trimmings for Hats

Hat trimmings have not said their last word and all the new millinery collections are reserving a very important place for them. There is a supple black felt toque, the front part of which is turned down as a brim and gathered in a draped effect against the crown, where it is held by a motif in red plastic material and metal, which is pinned through the felt.

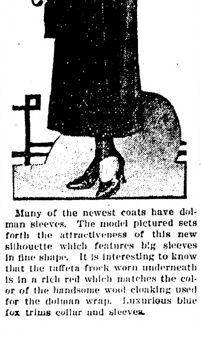
Also, there is a cloche in grenat felt, entirely covered with rayon stitches in a lighter shade and in checked design. The crown is fastened at the back from the top of the head down to the hat band with black plastic buttons in half-conic shape.

Alluring Black Stockings to Be Popular for Winter

Deeper shades of hosiery are expected to be popular this winter, partly as a result of the revival of black hose. An off-black or mascara shade is outselling black, dealers report, and equally popular is a deep brown, called mahogany, which looks well with either black or brown attire. Hose for evening wear are darker than last winter, a beige-like suntan being preferred to the natural skin tone.

DOLMAN SLEEVES

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



Many of the newest coats have dolman sleeves. The model pictured sets forth the attractiveness of this new silhouette which features big sleeves in fine shape. It is interesting to know that the taffeta frock worn underneath is in a rich red which matches the color of the handsome wool cloaking used for the dolman wrap. Luxurious blue fox trims collar and sleeves.

WONDERFUL MINIATURE

A model hospital, complete in every detail, yet small enough to be exhibited on a billiard table, is the latest propaganda to be employed for a hospital fund in London, England.

A million bricks are indicated in the model, and 7,000 stones, while 13,000 tiles, each about half the size of a little fingernail, have been used to decorate the nursery ward and kitchens. There is a large solarium and an X-ray department, in which the delicate electrical apparatus is reproduced on the scale of three-quarters of an inch to a foot.

In the children's ward on the top floor two cots are covered with lace handkerchiefs presented by the queen, who has shown great interest in the construction of the model. There are also an electric lift, which really works, and business offices with carpets and paneled walls, one of them decorated with miniature pictures of Florence Nightingale, Lord Lister, Lord Dawson of Penn and Lord Moynihan, painted by Alfred Praga.

Happy Thanksgiving
PEAS

A New Deal Thanksgiving

"IT was a hungry pussy cat,
ear of corn.
And she watched a thankful little mouse, that ate an ear of corn.
"If I ate that thankful little mouse,
how thankful he should be,
When he has made a meal himself, to make a meal for me!"

Thanksgiving, this year, after a season of drought, should be an especial season for sharing. The philosophy of the hungry pussy cat belongs to a bygone era when the big ones ate the little ones. Why not, then, plan a New Deal Thanksgiving dinner—a dinner where the family who unite annually to share the harvest will share, also, with those who have had no harvest?

Dealing Out the Dinner

Send out invitations cut in the shape of baskets, and write on each one:

New Deal Thanksgiving Dinner
—One o'clock
Bring along a basket
Of food you have to spare.
We'll speed it where it's needed
Via flivver, or old gray mare.

Have your car in the drive, when the guests arrive, with a placard on it reading BASKETS WELCOME HERE, so that each one may leave his basket as he gets out of his car. Then, while your Thanksgiving dinner is being served, let James, or the town welfare nurse, deliver the baskets where they are most needed.

A Gay, Modern Table

Then, with a clear conscience you can proceed to enjoy the dinner party, and it should be a very gay one. Set the table with some of the new table runners and individual mats which come in such pleasing autumn colors—russet red, dark green or old gold. They are very smart and a distinct change from the pastel colors so long popular. If the fruits for your centerpiece, do not come in interesting enough colors to suit you, wrap each one in a different color of cellophane, and you will have a novel and very modern fruit bowl, with sparkling reds, glittering blues and gay purples.

For favors, for your New Deal Thanksgiving, give decks of playing cards with a toy turkey roosting on top of each and tied there with red ribbon. Ask each one to cut his deck, and the person who cuts low is elected toast-master for an after-dinner round-table discussion of the most optimistic thing that has happened to each one since last Thanksgiving.

Your dinner menu will be optimistic, indeed, if you plan it along the lines of the one here given which serves eight people.

The recipes are tested so you may feel confident in your results.

Cauliflower en Casserole: Separate one head of cauliflower into flowerlets and boil until tender, then drain. Lay in a buttered casserole, keeping pieces as unbroken as possible. Make a white sauce of three tablespoons butter, three tablespoons flour, one and three-fourths cups milk, one-half teaspoon salt and a few grains of pepper. Simmer one cup of canned peas for three or four minutes, and pass them through a sieve. Add to the white sauce. Pour over the cauliflower and cover with crumbs. Brown in a hot oven.

Mock Cherry Pie: Chop fine one cup cranberries and add one cup of canned crushed pineapple. Add one cup sugar, one tablespoon flour and a few grains of salt mixed together. Add two tablespoons butter, heat to scalding in double boiler; bake between two crusts. Have the oven hot at first, 425 degrees, then reduce the heat and continue baking until done.

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

H.O. Hanson, Editor and Publisher — Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota, Friday, November 30, 1934. — Volume 24, Number 31

HOME RAMBLES

Well the big deer hunting season closed on Sunday evening and from what we have heard, a lot of the women folks had said that they were more than tickled to death to have their hubby's come back home with their own hide all in one piece. From reports in the papers we find that over a dozen men were killed and many wounded during the eleven day season.

Hunters in Holt and vicinity brought home twenty deer.

This is the Thanksgiving season and we believe that each citizen in this community who was favored with good crops and otherwise had a fair year should stop for a moment and in gratitude for what the Great Maker has given us, give a word of thanks. When you stop to realize how much better condition we are in here than they are many other places in this state, you can gladly sing out in praise for all what has been given to us.

Kenneth Swan spent the week end up in the Gatzke country on a deer hunt. Keno has a keen eye for a dear and we understand he saw one up there that he liked pretty well.

Olaf Ness spent the week end in the Twin Cities on business.

School Notes

School will open again Tuesday Dec. 4, after the Thanksgiving holiday.

Report cards for the second six weeks period were handed out Wednesday.

Northwest School News

Preliminary plans are well under way for the silver anniversary celebration of the Red River Valley Winter Shows which will will be held here February 4-8, 1935. John Saugstad, business manager, states that the premium list covering prizes offered to livestock, farm crops and poultry exhibitors is now being prepared and will be ready for distribution at an early date in January. With satisfactory crop yields throughout most of the Red River Valley, together with the highest prices since 1929 and 1930, it is anticipated that the attendance will surpass all records for the past five years.

Features of the week, in addition to the exhibits, will include numerous educational contests for farmers' clubs, agricultural high schools, Schools of Agriculture and 4-H club members. These meetings will deal primarily with problems of the farm and the home. Huge mass meetings will also be held each evening during the week, at which time speakers of national and international prominence will be heard. The Northwestern Minnesota Singers' association will also appear on the program during the week.

Activities of the week are coordidated through the Winter Shows Board of Managers, of which Dr. A. A. Dowell, superintendent of the Northwest School and Station, is president; John Saugstad, business manager; F. A. Green, Stephen, representing the Red River Valley Livestock Breeders' association; C. M. Pesek, River Valley Dairy men's Association; R. S. Dunham, Red River Valley Crops and Soils association; E. W. Spring, Grookston Association of Public Affairs; H. A. Pflughoeft, District Club leader, and C. L. McNelly, District County Agent leader. A successor to W. R. Low, who for many years represented the Red River Valley, Development association as its secretary, has not yet been announced. Wm. Dalquist, Thief River Falls, is president of this organization.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Gunheim, Rev. and Mrs. L. M. Redal and family and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Nohre were entertained at the O. H. Nohre home Sunday.

We had a little more snowfall late Saturday night and the community has taken on a wintery atmosphere for the Thanksgiving season.

The ladies of Holt gave Mrs. Harold Saastad a shower on Monday afternoon at the home of Carl Peterson.

Held Caucus Meeting

The annual village caucus was held at the schoolhouse on Saturday evening with only about a fourth of the voters of the village present. Village business matters were the main subjects that were discussed and were followed by the nominating of the candidates for village offices at the coming election.

The main question to be brot up was as to whether or not the Trustee of the Electric Light Fund of the Village should purchase outstanding Electric Light Bonds at present market value from the funds now on hand.

What is meant by this is: That the Marshall County State Bank is the trustee to whom the Interstate Power Company are paying back the money which they borrowed from the village of Holt when they built the High Line in here ten years ago, and that at the present time the trustee has money on hand to purchase some of the bonds that the village issued at that time and, save the taxpayers some money. The Interstate Power company does not hold these bonds but are paying them back to the Village over a period of 20 years on a contract with interest for the use of money that the village got for the bonds when sold.

The bonds are held by investors in the Twin Cities who are willing to sell instead of holding them until due in ten years from now. The benefit to taxpayes here in this deal comes in this way that when the bonds were sold the interest rate on the money held by the trustee was 6 per cent as compared to only 3 per cent now. Therefore, as soon as there is funds on hand held by the trustee it should be used to retire outstanding bonds and save the 3 per cent of interest that is being paid out above what is received on funds on hand.

Voice your opinion on the question at the bottom of the ballot next Tuesday so as to let the Village Council know how you voters stand on the matter.

Minnesota Auto Tax Low

Minnesota taxes its motorists less than any other state in the Union except North Dakota and Kansas, according to tabulations just received by the state highway department from Washington.

In the matter of motor vehicle license fees and gasoline taxes, Minnesota motorists pay almost one-third less than the national average, altho this state maintains a much larger trunk highway system than most of the others.

The national average for individual motorists, including both license fee and gas tax, was $34.50 in 1933, the American Association of State Highway Officils reports. In Minnesota the average was only $24.41.

California and Nebraska show slightly lower gas tax and license fee average than Minnesota but both these states also assess a personal property tax against automobiles which brings up their total motor vehicle tax higher than Minnesota's.

The Holt 4-H Club will hold their carnival on Friday evening Nov. 30, at the Sunnyside school. Everyone welcome.

Paskewitz-Wegge

The marriage of Mable Paskewitz, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Paskewitz, to Edgar Wegge, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wegge, took place at the Rev. Shroeder parsonage in Thief River Falls, Thursday Nov 15 in the presence of Mr. and Mrs. Dennes Wegge, brother and sister-in-law of the groom. Rev. Shroeder, pastor of the German Lutheran Church of Thief River Falls read the ceremony.

The young couple are well known in this community, the bride having attended high school in Holt and graduating from the Lincoln High School of Thief River Falls in 1930.

Mr. and Mrs. Wegge spent their honeymoon at St. Paul, Minneapolis and Fargo.

The News joins their many friends in wishing them success and happiness.

Christmas Seal Sale Starts

County organization plans for the twenty-eighth annual Christmas Seal sale, which will open Thanksgiving Day, are nearing completion.

The theme of the campaign this year commemorates the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the first sanatorium in the United States for the modern treatment of tuberculosis.

The seal design depicts "Little Red", as the cottage that served as the first sanatorium is called.

"Little Red" was established in the Adirondack Mountains by Dr. Edward Livingston Trudeau and was made possible by his personal experience with the disease, his research and his persistance. His good work is continued today by this penny seal, by means of which a local, state and national program is carried on to prevent, find and cure tuberculosis and promote general health.

In addition to the design of the little red cottage standing among the pine trees in the snow the Christmas Seal this year, as always, bears the double-barred cross by which it may be distinguished from all other seals.

Held Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the congregation of the Nazareth Lutheran Church was held Friday evening in the church and a good many of the members of the congregation came in to attend it. The following officers were elected for the coming year and years: F. K. Fredrickson, President of church council for one year; Gilbert Sanoden, Secretary for one year; Hjalmer Peterson, Treasurer for one year; Albert Bennes, Trustee for two years; Ole Larson, Trustee for three years; Hans Fosholm was again reelected as Deacon.

After the election of officers the financial standing of the church was discussed and from the reports of the secretary and treasurer the indications were that the institution was in fair circumstances.

The Nazareth Lutheran Ladies Aid held their annual meeting at the same time and the following officers were elected for next year: Mrs. Olaf Halvorson, President; Miss Amanda Fosholm, Vice-President; Mrs. Sam Lorentson, Secretary and Mrs. Guy Anderson, Treasurer.

Quality is a very important factor in the production of cream, with inspectors inspecting all butter that comes on the market, for foreign matter such as flies and other things that may get into the cream, which may result in a total loss of some churnings. School in the Sky

The headmaster of a Dutch school has conceived the brilliant idea of using an air liner to teach geography. Instead of trooping dolefully into their classroom, the children now eagerly take their seats in the airplane, each with a map beside him and a pair of earphones. While the flight is in progress, the geography master, sitting before a microphone in the fore part of the cabin, points out and explains the features of the countryside below, and the pupils check his remarks on their maps. A prearranged section of the Netherlands is taken with each flight. The children, it is found, absorb their lessons with 20 times the enthusiasm shown on the ground.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

President Starts His Social Reform Program, Putting Unemployment Insurance First—Visits TVA on Way to Warm Springs.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© by Western Newspaper Union.

WITH the election in the background, President Roosevelt is ready to push forward more rapidly his ambitious plans for what he calls "the abundant life" in this country. So he has appointed a large advisory council to aid in formulating and getting through congress his program of social reforms. The chairman is Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, who has been serving as vice chairman of the NRA consumers' advisory board. He and his colleagues, all known to be New Dealers or in close sympathy with the New Deal, are asked by Mr. Roosevelt "for advice and counsel in development of a program for unemployment insurance, old age security and adequate health care."

Frank P. Graham

Work on the social program already is well under way and an executive committee has laid the groundwork. Also Miss Frances Perkins, secretary of labor and chairman of that executive committee, has named an advisory committee of physicians and surgeons that, according to advance rumors, will report a program that will be "revolutionary almost to the point of establishing socialized medicine." This medical group is headed by Dr. Harvey Cushing of Yale whose daughter Betsey is the wife of James Roosevelt, son of the President.

Secretary Perkins announced that other committees were being organized to aid in the formation of plans for federal intervention in problems of public health, hospitalization, and dentistry.

WHEN the federal conference on economic security met in Washington, nearly all the members of the advisory committees were present. The President told the delegates that he would present to the coming congress bills to provide for setting up immediately an unemployment insurance program. As to health insurance and old age pensions, he said he was not certain the time had arrived for federal legislation to put these into effect, and he uttered a warning against "organizations promoting fantastic schemes" and arousing hopes "which cannot possibly be fulfilled."

Though Mr. Roosevelt conceded to the separate states the right to decide what type of unemployment insurance they would adopt, he declared that he would reserve to the federal government the right to hold and invest and control all moneys which might be collected.

This was necessary, the President added, because of the magnitude of the funds, and "so that the use of these funds as a means of stabilization may be maintained in central management and employed on a national basis." It is expected that from $4,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000 would be raised in the course of several years.

Mr. Roosevelt insisted that unemployment insurance must be kept entirely apart from the dole, and that it should be managed strictly on an actuarially sound basis. He indicated that he favored legislation along the lines of the Wager-Lewis bill introduced in the last congress, under which a 5 per cent federal tax would be put upon all commercial pay rolls, certain portions of the proceeds being paid back to such states as had adopted legislation for the working of an unemployment insurance program.

Before the conference members went to the White House to hear the President, they indulged in a discussion that brought out all sorts of views on what should be done. Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins and Mayor La Guardia of New York urged immediate establishment of a federal program to include benefits for the 4,200,000 families now on relief. Hopkins said any program not encompassing these destitute "is not worth its salt." La Guardia, in the same vein, said cities cannot hold up under the relief load much longer. This was not in accord with the view expressed a little later by the President, and was an example of the confusion of ideas in the conference.

FOR the purpose of obtaining better co-operation among federal agencies engaged in lending government funds, the President has appointed a committee consisting of the heads of the agencies, with Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau as chairman. The new organization will report to the President from time to time and its activities will cover the treasury, interior, public works, federal housing, farm credit, Home Owners' Loan corporation, agricultural adjustment administration, export-import banking, commodity credit, federal deposit insurance, the RFC, federal reserve board and public works housing.

In connection with this co-ordinating move, the White House stated that when the present applications of the Home Owners' Loan corporation have been reduced to terms of approval the original $3,000,000,000 allotment will have been used up.

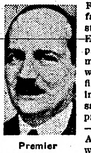
ANOTHER program that is being rapidly prepared by the President's advisers for action by congress has to do with the nation's natural resources, and the necessary legislation is being drafted by the national resources board. It is of utmost importance and in Washington there is a belief that it may lead to government control, and possibly government ownership, of all timber lands, oil reservoirs and coal fields, and government dominion over all existing and future water power developments on the nation's lakes and rivers.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has gone to his winter retreat at Warm Springs, Ga., where he will remain until after Thanksgiving day, and on the way had some interesting experiences. First he traveled to Harrodsburg, Ky., where he helped Gov. Ruby Laffoon and other officials in the unveiling and dedication of a memorial to the men and women who established there the first permanent Anglo-Saxon settlement west of the Alleghenies. The monument, erected by the federal government at a cost of $100,000, overlooks Pioneer Memorial State park. It depicts an epoch rather than an event, and the only portrait among the many carved figures is that of George Rogers Clark, who there planned his conquest of the old northwest territory.

From Harrodsburg the President went to see the Tennessee valley development which has been well called the laboratory of the "more abundant life." It was with deepest interest that he viewed the work that is being done by about 1,200 men building dams in the Tennessee river and tributaries to provide power, flood control, navigation and new fields of work for persons drawn from unprofitable land.

After a visit to the Hermitage, home of Andrew Jackson at Nashville, Mr. Roosevelt inspected the revived Muscle Shoals plants and the Wheeler and Wilson dams, and then went to Tupelo, Miss., the first town to purchase power from the new federal development.

UNCLE SAM need expect no payment from France on the war debt on December 15, when the next installment is due. It is stated in Paris that France will then default for the fifth straight time. Pierre Etienne Flandin, new premier, opposed payment in 1932, when he was minister of finance, and his cabinet is now taking the same position as the previous government—awaiting an Anglo-American settlement which would serve as a basis for Franco-American negotiations.



Premier Flandin

The only idea for revision of the debts that has met with any enthusiasm in French parliamentary circles is a 10 per cent payment to correspond with the reparations relief granted Germany by the Lausanne agreement. Proposals for larger amounts, or "payment in kind," have met with coldness. The chamber of deputies is clinging to the position that France will not pay one cent more than it gets from Germany.

ANDREW MELLON may now have another cause for grievance against the federal Treasury department, for the government has made charges against the Union Trust company of Pittsburgh, a Mellon institution, of filing "a false and fraudulent income tax return" for 1930 in a tax action demanding payment of $218,333 plus a 50 per cent penalty.

In supporting its claim, the government listed eight transactions in 1931 as evidence that all were "a part of a false and fraudulent course of conduct on the part of said Union Trust company." Among the 1931 transactions were two "accommodation" deals with Andrew W. Mellon.

FEDERAL JUDGE CHARLES I. DAWSON of Louisville, Ky., overruling an attack on the validity of the Frazier-Lemke farm moratorium act, declared "with regret" that it is constitutional. In his opinion he said:

"The legislation, in some of its provisions, is unfair to creditors, and unwise even as to farm debtors, for it inevitably closes to them all private sources of credit."

FREDERICK LANDIS, the only Republican to be elected to congress from Indiana in the recent election, died of pneumonia in his home town, Logansport. He was a brother of Kenesaw M. Landis, national baseball commissioner.

BUDGET requests for 800 new airplanes have been submitted by the army air corps, and if the corps' plan is approved the United States will have the largest and most up to date military aerial armada in the world, including eventually 2,400 planes.

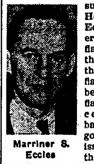
GERMAN Nazis in the Saar, organized as the German Front, assert that the French separatists have been trying to stir up a quarrel for the purpose of inducing Geoffrey Knox, president of the League of Nations commission for the Saar, to call in foreign troops. The accusation was contained in a note sent the League denying that the German organization has gone beyond the law in urging inhabitants of the Saar to vote for return of their land to Germany in the plebiscite to be held January 13.

In its memorial to the league the German Front asserted that it possesses documents to prove that France has sent arms into the Saar and that pro-French groups have been trained in the use of machine guns and inflammable liquids. This is for the purpose of executing a coup d'etat late in November or early in December, the German note said.

TOM MOONEY, who has served 18 years of a life sentence for complicity in the San Francisco Preparedness day bombing in 1916, may yet win release. The United States Supreme court consented to give at least preliminary consideration to his case, and that is a big point in his favor.

The court ordered the warden of San Quentin prison to show cause within 40 days why counsel for Mooney should not be granted leave to file a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. The order of the court does not mean that it will review the case.

SENATOR THOMAS and his fellow inflationists were not pleased with the President's choice of a new governor of the federal reserve board to succeed Eugene Black. He picked Marriner S. Eccles, a Utah banker, whose ideas of inflation are not at all those of Thomas, for they do not include fiat money. Mr. Eccles believes in "credit inflation"; he would control the reserve banks' purchases of government securities, issue money against these purchases and spend the new money for government bonds, thus creating an endless chain of credit arrangement. So long as this chain were maintained unbroken, the government's credit would be inexhaustible.



Marriner S. Eccles

Something like fifteen billion dollars, according to Mr. Eccles, should be spent by the government for public works and housing projects, and he thinks this vast sum can be obtained by following out his monetary plans.

THE government has issued an order permitting the free exportation of capital from the United States, and business men take this as a concession to those who demand stabilization of the currency as a prerequisite to business recovery. It does not mean stabilization but is a step toward it and indicated the administration has dropped the idea of bringing about recovery by debasing the dollar. Presumably, if further attempts to cheapen the dollar in foreign exchange were contemplated, the treasury would not leave the doors open for the wholesale flight of American capital abroad.

ARIZONA is determined to prevent the construction of the Parker diversion dam across the Colorado river unless it gets what it considers its share of the hydro-electric power to be developed by that project. Gov. B. B. Moeur declared a "war zone" on the Arizona side of the river at the dam site and sent a detachment of National Guardsmen with rifles and machine guns to halt work there.

The United States bureau of reclamation ordered that work on the Parker dam on the Arizona side be stopped until the dispute is settled, so Governor Moeur called the troops back to Prescott and Phoenix.

"It's a showdown this time," Moeur said, "we are going to get something or we aren't. And if we can't expect anything, we want to know it before this project is farther advanced."

W. P. Whitsett, chairman of the Los Angeles metropolitan water district board of directors, said he "heartily agreed" with Governor Moeur that Arizona should have one-half of the power privilege at the Parker dam.

CELEBRATIONS of Armistice day in the United States and the allied countries of Europe were generally marked by warnings of the dangers of another terrible war in the not distant future. At Arlington national cemetery President Roosevelt quietly laid a wreath of chrysanthemums on the grave of the Unknown Soldier while military detachments stood at attention, and then, as taps sounded, Mrs. Roosevelt stepped forward and placed a single white flower at the foot of the shrine. National Commander Belgrano of the American Legion was one of the speakers at Arlington, and called for adequate defense of the nation against both foreign foes and the forces of unrest that are attacking our institutions.

IN A cablegram to the League of Nations, Chancellor Riart of Paraguay said his government could not accept a truce in the Chaco war in return for international guarantees, as was proposed by the league. Riart insisted that an end to hostilities should come before negotiations are undertaken to solve the war and to arrange definite terms for peace. However, Paraguay accepted the principle that the conflict proper should be settled by conciliation.

The Chaco consultative committee of the league asked the secretary general to request the United States and Brazil to collaborate in ending the war.

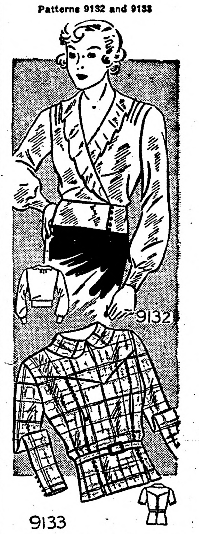
BLOUSE SERVING DOUBLE PURPOSE

Patterns 9132 and 9133



One of the most pleasant things about the returning vogue of the suit is that blouses are again high style. Women who pride themselves upon the ability to make a limited budget go a long way love their blouses. Think of the same suit, for instance, with the two different blouses sketched today. Pattern 9133 is a simple affair of tailored lines with pleats that flare out at the bottom in a chic little peplum effect. Pattern 9132 has its becoming surplice accentuated by a graceful frill.

Pattern 9132 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 36 requires 2¼ yards 39 inch fabric.

Pattern 9133 may be ordered only in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 2⅛ yards 39 inch fabric.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York.

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a faculty position in Lostland Academy, Janet Mercer meets Prof. Arthur Fleming, also on his way to the Academy. At the school they are struck by an air of mystery pervading the place. Gordon Haskell, proprietor, welcomes them. Wilton Payne completes the Academy faculty. In a schoolroom Janet finds a group which the teachers had supposed were scholars, are wax figures. Haskell explains unusual circumstances connected with the conduct of the Academy. Among the pupils is Berenice Bracebridge, daughter of the late owner of the school. The story of the tragedy of Lostland Academy is that of two sisters and two brothers of Berenice, who lost their lives in the water, some years ago. The wax figures were modeled in the likenesses of the four, and Doctor Bracebridge's will provided that they must be preserved. Payne learns from Berenice that an uncouth giant whom Janet had seen with Haskell is named Balder, and is a valuable servant. From Jerry Moore, the only witness of the drowning of the children, Payne learns particulars of the tragedy. He begins to take an increasing interest in Berenice, as Fleming does in Janet. Reading diaries kept by Doctor Bracebridge, Payne senses something sinister in the drowning of the children. In the belfry of the old church he finds a long discarded Christmas tree. Its presence puzzles him. Balder makes a halting explanation of its preservation. Haskell proposes marriage to Berenice, but she tells him she does not love him enough to marry him.

"Me?" She looked at him suspiciously.

"I want to know why you're not coming back to the academy?"

She flushed. She was a pretty girl, with rather handsome eyes and an independent manner. "Mother has too much to do. She needs me home. Wait, I'll fetch her and Pop—or maybe you'll come into the kitchen. It's warmer."

Farmer Welford and his wife received him cordially, but seemed disinclined to talk about their daughter's desire to give up the pursuit of an education.

"Sally thinks she'd better stay home," was all the satisfaction Payne could get; so he switched off to crops, and, thinking that he had quite fulfilled his obligations of inquiry, he rose to go.

"I'll step a piece with you," said Mrs. Welford.

Wilton was surprised, but glad of this turn of affairs.

"I have to take some mash to the black pig on the lot," she explained to her husband, but she would in no wise permit Wilton to carry the mash.

When they were some distance from the house, Mrs. Welford slackened her pace. "I didn't have to feed that pig; he's overfed now. But I knew well enough Sally would never tell you; and her father thinks it all nonsense. But she has a queer faculty—she sees things—that ain't there."

Mrs. Welford turned her bright eyes upon him, then looked toward the dark mass of the academy in the distance. "I don't expect you to believe it any more than her own father does—but twice while she was at school she says she saw the four Bracebridge children—once in one of the halls, once on the grounds. She's awful sensitive about her way of seein' things invisible to other people. The second time it happened she come home and she says, 'Mom, I can't go back again. There's something wrong over there. I hate the place. I can't go back.' I coaxed her to tell me what was wrong, and then she told what she had seen."

"Mrs. Welford," Wilton remarked impatiently, "if a story is once started it never dies—and the step from believing a rumor, and then actually imagining ghosts or noises, is exceedingly short."

The wild grunts of the nearby pig now filled the air. Mrs. Welford emptied the mash into the trough, and then and only then answered Wilton. "You see, Sally is what they call—it's a long word—"

"Clairvoyant?"

"That's it."

"It's a pity," Wilton commented, thinking it best not to argue the point. "Your daughter is very intelligent, and learns quickly; it's a pity to give up the chance for a winter's education because of silly stories."

"But them wax figures. You can't talk them away," Mrs. Welford remarked shrewdly.

"Mr. Haskell has locked the figures in."

"So I hear—but what Sally sees is not wax."

"I'm sorry! That's all I can say." He bade her goodby and departed thoughtfully.

* * *

A Sunday calm brooded over the academy. Arthur and Janet had gone for a walk. Mrs. Denver was seated with Payne in the library, knitting and glancing from time to time out of the high, narrow windows toward the lake. Balder was out in a boat fishing, and Haskell was watching him from the shore.

"That's a lonely man—a queer, lonely man. Some days I am afraid of him and some days I'm sorry for him. He's going to lose everything in a year or two."

Some one passed the door. "Who was that?" Mrs. Denver asked.

"I wasn't looking."

"Some one passed the door."

"Yes, I half saw them."

Haskell came in after a while. "It's raw out," he commented. "Well, did you see Sally?"

"Yes. She won't come back."

"Why not?"

"She saw the Bracebridge children twice, she says."

Haskell laughed nervously. "Payne, you'll have a chance to study rural psychology. The country people about here are very foolish over this old place. They are worse than sailors."

"So it seems."

"Let us go down and see that the figures are safe. I get rather fidgety over them. With all these cock-and-bull stories about, one never knows what depredations might be attempted. I believe I'll have iron bars fitted in that window; then I'll rest easy."

Payne nodded. He rather dreaded the expedition to the basement, and followed Haskell reluctantly. The head of Lostland academy had already taken the key from its hiding place. He drew it from his vest pocket, and opened the door with what Payne thought rather a shrinking manner.

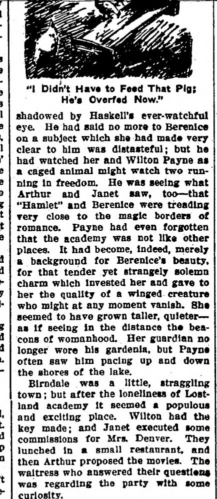
The four wax figures were at their eternal tasks, with their little, secretive smiles which would never fade as long as they endured. Haskell and Payne stood looking at them in the chilly room.

"They're all right," Haskell said nervously. "Come, let's be going. It's as cold as a vault here. Yes, I'll have bars put on that window, and then I can rest easy at night. Sally Welford is a fool," he added bitterly.

Payne made no answer, but when Haskell had gone from him again on some errand, he started down the hill for another visit to the belfry of Lostland church. That night he told Arthur Fleming that he thought he was at last on the track of the mystery which hung like a cloud over the academy.

CHAPTER VII

When Payne drove to Birndale several weeks later—the expedition had been twice postponed—Berenice, Janet and Arthur were with him, all of them in rather high spirits at the prospect of a trip over the hills and back unshadowed by Haskell's ever-watchful eye. He had said no more to Berenice on a subject which she had made very clear to him was distasteful; but he had watched her and Wilton Payne as a caged animal might watch two running in freedom. He was seeing what Arthur and Janet saw, too—that "Hamlet" and Berenice were treading very close to the magic borders of romance. Payne had even forgotten that the academy was not like other places. It had become, indeed, merely a background for Berenice's beauty, for that tender yet strangely solemn charm which invested her and gave to her the quality of a winged creature who might at any moment vanish. She seemed to have grown taller, quieter—as if seeing in the distance the beacons of womanhood. Her guardian no longer wore his gardenia, but Payne often saw him pacing up and down the shores of the lake.



"I Didn't Have to Feed That Pig; He's Overfed Now."

Birndale was a little, straggling town; but after the loneliness of Lostland academy it seemed a populous and exciting place. Wilton had the key made; and Janet executed some commissions for Mrs. Denver. They lunched in a small restaurant, and then Arthur proposed the movies. The waitress who answered their questions was regarding the party with some curiosity.

"Are you the teachers from Lostland academy?"

They said they were.

"I heard the principal's goin' to marry Miss Bracebridge."

"I am Miss Bracebridge, and I assure you there's nothing in the report."

"I ask your pardon. The hired man over there—that great tall fellow—told my brother it was so—"

"Balder, I suppose. He talks far too much." Berenice looked earnestly at the girl. "I wish you'd deny this report—wherever you hear it."

"I will—if that's your wish," the waitress answered warmly. "I don't like to be talked about myself."

In the motion-picture theater, Berenice, who was seated beside Wilton, whispered: "I hope this report will go no further. It's just like Balder to talk—and about things he is ignorant of. I wish he could be sent away."

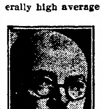
Let Our Motto Be GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD

Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

TOO MANY GIRLS DIE OF TUBERCULOSIS

Girls in their teen age have a generally high average of health. In fact, statistics for Illinois show that the ten-twenty age period has the highest health average for any age period, both for boys and girls.



But too many girls die of tuberculosis in this age group. Their death rate is twice as high as for boys with tuberculosis in the same age period.

Many moralists will undoubtedly wag their heads and say that this is because the modern girl wears too few clothes and stays up too late.

But then how explain that in her grandmother's day, when girls wore loads of clothes and the wildest party was over before twelve, the same proportion of girls died of tuberculosis then as now?

In a study which we have been making in the medical research department of the University of Illinois, we have learned that since 1870, when the first vital statistics in this country were collected, the peak age for deaths from tuberculosis among girls was in the ten-fourteen-year group. That peak has held for every decade. In 1870, 208 girls died to each 100 boys in the ten-fourteen-year group; in 1880, 230 girls; in 1890, 250 girls; in 1900, 257 girls; in 1910, 262 girls; in 1920, 255 girls.

The jump from 208 girls in 1870 to 262 girls in 1910 is explained by the fact that the general death rate for girls in the 1870, 1880 and 1890 decades was much higher than it has been so far in this century. This means that in the earlier years not so many girls reached the ten-fourteen-year age as now, with our lowered death rate. They had more typhoid, diphtheria and other infectious diseases in those days to take their toll.

Moreover we learned that this condition held true in twenty-five other countries besides our own where statistics were available. In every country the peak age for the death of girls from tuberculosis was in the ten-fourteen-year group, and in every country more than twice as many girls died as boys in the same age group.

That set us thinking. Modern flapper foolishness certainly couldn't be held responsible for a condition that has held for decades all over the world. The cause is physiological. This ten-fourteen-year period is the time when a girl passes through the stage from girlhood to womanhood. It is in this time that she starts her regular stimulation periods, when the metabolism of the body is increased. In tuberculosis the cure is largely rest, but with this monthly increased metabolism rate the body can't rest. Nothing that medical science can do can lower this high stimulation of the body at this time. It is a basic law of nature that there must be these rhythmic periods of stimulated bodily functions. Boys, on the other hand, do not have regular periods of increased metabolism.

What, then, can be done about decreasing this high death rate among girls? The common sense thing is: don't let the girls get tuberculosis.

You may say that is easier said than done. But young girls can be kept away from active cases of tuberculosis. This is easier to do now than it was in the past because active cases of tuberculosis are now usually brought to sanitoriums where they can be given the proper care. But if a girl should contract tuberculosis, then take care of it in the early stages. Tuberculosis can be cured easily if it is taken at the beginning. It is when it has been allowed to make progress that its cure is difficult.

Parents of young girls should be on the watch always to note signs of listless or finicky appetite, lack of desire to play or do active exercise, irritability. The cause may be some other reason entirely, but suspect tuberculosis and take her to the doctor for an examination.

One of the great landmarks of medical science was the discovery of the tuberculin test by Von Pirquet in 1907. By means of the tuberculin test it is possible to find out whether a person has ever been infected by the germ of tuberculosis. The test is made by placing a small amount of a substance called tuberculin between the layers of the skin. If the person has ever been infected, a small red swollen spot will appear within two days. A positive tuberculin test does not mean that the individual has active tuberculosis. It means only that the germ of the disease has located somewhere in the body. In most cases the cells of the body have built a wall around the germs so they cannot get out, unless the body loses its healthy state.

If your daughter should react to this tuberculin test, then the physician will give her further tests to determine whether or not the disease is "walled up" or in an active state. He can do this by X-ray pictures and an examination of the chest.

There is not much occasion for alarm when the disease is treated at the beginning. As we said before, tuberculosis can be cured easily when recognized in its early stages. It should never be allowed to go further.

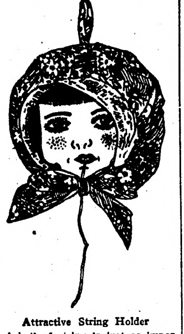
STRING HOLDER SUNBONNET GIRL

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



Attractive String Holder

A ball of string is just as important in a kitchen as a pot holder or a fly swatter. String is used for many purposes, but where is it when you want it? This attractive string holder is always ready to serve you when hanging in its place somewhere on the kitchen wall. It is to be made up, and when finished looks like the picture shown above. Sunbonnet is made of bright colored prints. The face is painted. The ball of string is in the bonnet. String is used passing through a hole in mouth. A very catchy, useful, inexpensive gift.

Package No. A-7 contains percale in pretty patterns, lines stamped for cutting, painted face and foundation ready to be made up, also directions just how to do it.

HOW MANY WORDS NEEDED TO "SAY IT PERFECTLY"?

A British professor says it requires a knowledge of 50,000 words to read the London Times intelligently and adds that there are 850 words, with which a person limited to that number could say anything he would be likely to want to say, and "say it perfectly."

The evident inference is that the erudite London newspaper employs 49,150 words that are superfluous, mere excess baggage. At least, that would be the inference if we accept literally the theory that the best writing is that which says something in the simplest possible sort of way.

But of course it is not always literally true that a worthwhile thing may be said "perfectly" in the simplest sort of way, especially if the sayer or writer is to be limited to 850 words. The perfection possible by that method is no more than what is implied in the statement that a "perfect" piece of music may be written with eight notes all in one key. As a matter of fact, one of the chief pleasures of living, though many do not realize it consciously, is found in the fine shades of meaning, sound and connotation that separate one word from another very similar one.

The London Times, we suspect, will not resent the British professor's reflection on its surplus wordage, but will be content to leave the sort of simplicity he had in mind to—well, to the sort of publication read by those whose word knowledge encompasses only 850.—Detroit News.

NUDISM OLD IN LONDON

Nudism is not a novelty in London, according to records recently found there. They reveal that the cult has waxed and waned through the centuries. In 1733 a nocturnal meeting of the Naked society was held in a tavern near the Haymarket, but the organization was prompted more by religious and moral than by hygienic convictions. Records show that a similar society existed in the city in 1641.

Why Hospitals Use a Liquid Laxative

Hospitals and doctors have always used liquid laxatives. And the public is fast returning to laxatives in liquid form. Do you know the reasons?

The dose of a liquid laxative can be measured. The action can thus be regulated to suit individual need. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will a mild liquid laxative irritate the kidneys.

The right dose of a liquid laxative brings a more natural movement, and there is no discomfort at the time, or after.

The wrong cathartic may often do more harm than good.

A properly prepared liquid laxative like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin brings safe relief from constipation. It gently helps the average person's bowels until nature restores them to regularity. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is an approved liquid laxative which all druggists keep ready for use. It makes an ideal family laxative; effective for all ages, and may be given the youngest child.

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
© The Safety Man

The other day while driving into a large city the driver of the car in which I was riding came up to a "stop and go" sign and as the red light was against him, stopped the car. We had hardly stopped when suddenly another car rushed by us and drove directly through the red light.

Such insoletce and lack of respect is nothing short of murder. If a little child had crossed on the opposite side with the sign, or any person for that matter, they would have been helpless in the path of this demon. Public opinion will soon demand that these men have their licenses revoked and charged with the ultimate that can be charged against them under the law.

Respect the rights of others. Always stop when the change in signals is giving you warning that the traffic lights are about to change. It is the safest thing to do and it is only an act of courtesy on your part. Please follow the warning signs and traffic signals.

Some European countries are trying a new method of encouraging careful driviving on the highways. Every time two automobiles have a collision, the drivers of both cars are put in jail for three days while an official investigation is made.

London, England, plans to hold automobile drivers entirely responsible for all injuries to pedestrians who cross the streets at regular, designated crossings. If a pedestrian is struck while he is within the boundaries of a regular crossing, the driver will automatically be judged guilty and no excuses will be accepted.

Notice for Bids

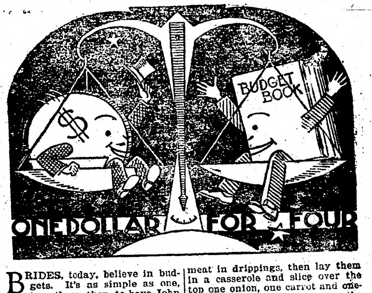
A $1.00 Dinner for 4



BRIDES, today, believe in budgets. It's as simple as one, two, three, then, to have John and Ann over any night for dinner, if the usual dollar meal may be budgeted to serve four. It must, of course, be a smart modern meal, but cost has very little to do with the appearance and the taste of a dinner. It's all in knowing how, and here's how:

Steak Casserole 39¢
Buttered Noodles 10¢
Bread and Butter 8¢
Orange and Cabbage Salad 14¢
Raspberry Tapioca Cream 26¢
Demi-Tasse 3¢

Steak Casserole: Cut a one pound slice of round steak in four servings. Salt and pepper each piece and roll in flour. Brown the meat in drippings, then lay them in a casserole and slice over the top one onion, one carrot and one-half green pepper. Pour over the contents of one can of tomato soup and two tablespoons water. Cover and bake in a slow oven—350 degrees—for one and one-half hours or until the meat is tender.

Raspberry Tapioca Cream: Add three-fourths cup water to one cup of canned raspberries, and bring to boiling. Add three tablespoons of quick-cooking tapioca and five tablespoons sugar; cook over boiling water for fifteen minutes, or until the tapicca is transparent, stirring often. Cool. Fold in one stiffly-beaten egg white and one-third cup cream whipped. Pile in glasses and chill. Serve, if desired, with thin cream.*

We would appreciate very much to have you breeze in with those $ $ $

HOME RAMBLES

As far as we know all the people here had a good Thanksgiving. Cars sliding around on the icy roads. You better drive carefully, The weather has been a little colder the past few days but it sure is nice for being out in December. Court is in session at the county seat this week. Farmers are busy marketing their turkeys. All the school children are selling Christmas seals this week. The southern part of the state has been visited by two heavy snowstorms the past week according to reports from the Twin Cities. There are still many cars of baled straw and hay to be shipped out from here. Baling crews are busy at work in the community. The Carlson Merc. Co. Inc., shipped out four carloads of dressed turkeys from here for the Thanksgiving pool and according to reports they beat all concerns on the final payments.

Advice of Inspectors

Quality is a very important factor in the production of cream, with inspectors inspecting all butter that comes on the market, for foreign matter such as flies and other things that may get into the cream, which may result in a total loss of some churnings. Let's all work hand in hand to prevent such happenings.

News From Rosewood

Rosewood, Minn. Claiming that the free life of the outdoor trapper and hunter was much in preference to the daily grind of school and the chores about the farm, little 11 year old Donald Sandry left school under an excuse and struck out for the wide open spaces. Failing to return from school a general community alarm was sent out, and before dark his footprints were located in the snow and he was followed for six miles, where he had found a sidetracked box car and decided to stay over night. Sound asleep when found at four oclock the following morning he showed no desire to return, and proudly displayed a caught weasel which he claimed when sold would bring him food until another one could be caught. Back in school today he still ponders over the necessity of tiresome chores and brainracking school books when trapping affords a much more pleasant pastime and profit.

W. F. Munch Spoke Here

In the interest of conservation of nature and wild life in Minnesota, W. F. Munch, senior Minnesota game warden and representative of the Minnesota Department of Conservation, spent last week in this county giving a series of lectures in schools and before various 4-H clubs.

Mr. Munch spoke at the school house here on Tuesday evening of last week to a good sized crowd of interested listeners. Arrangements for the lectures were made by R. A. Reierson, agriculture extension agent of Marshall county.

Mr. Munch gave a very interesting talk on bird life and told the boys and girls how to build bird houses so as to attract these little friends to their yards in the spring. Conservation of the Minnesota state flower, the moccasin, must be practiced if the flower is to be perpetuated, according to Mr. Munch. He stressed the fact that it requires from 16 to 26 years to grow a blossoming plant from seed. For this reason, if for no other, great care must be taken of the moccasin flower in this state.

Mr. Munch told the audience that at one time we had 300 kinds of birds in our state but, that this number has dwindled to only 284 at the present time. This was caused he said because people are careless and often destroy the very sources of the bird's food. A notable example of this destruction is the thotless picking of the bittersweet, the main food of the birds in the winter months.

Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Reierson and family returned to their home in Velva, N. D. on Sunday after a visit with relatives here. They also visited friends at Karlstad, Minn. enroute.

FINDS BANKS WILLING, BORROWERS CAUTIOUS

Prominent Writer Refutes Statements Bankers Are Refusing Sound Loans — Describes Reasons for Reduced Volume of Credit.

FIGURES supplied by typical, well-managed banks in different parts of the country show that a high proportion of all applications for loans have been granted in the past year or two, says Albert W. Atwood in a recent article in The Saturday Evening Post on "The Idle Dollar." Excerpts from Mr. Atwood's article follow:

"Frequently banks state that as high as 90 per cent of all such applications are granted and for from 60 to 75 per cent of the amount asked for. Allowing that the bankers make these figures as favorable to their own case as possible, it seems strange that we are told again and again that banks are not lending at all.

"If we take into account the whole class of regular bank borrowers, the plain fact is very few want to borrow yet. For the word 'borrow' is merely another name for the word 'debt,' and we face a great world-wide drive to get out of debt.

"An experienced small-city banker, asked if banks were lending freely enough, wisely replied: 'The really good borrower does not wish to borrow now. In fact, I think our customers are making a remarkably fine showing in paying off their loans, especially loans of long standing.'

The Shrinkage of Credit

"Or if we think of business concerns rather than of individuals, it is conservative to say that those able to maintain high credit ratings have been mostly the ones able to maintain ample cash resources and, therefore, least in need of credit. As prices and costs fell, many concerns found themselves with plenty of cash because of the shrinkage in operations. Cash resources were still further swollen by reduced dividends, and smaller inventories made bank borrowing still less necessary.

"Expressed in another way, banks cannot expand credit, they cannot make loans, unless there is a demand for the same. Fundamentally, the business transaction makes the loan, the loan does not make the transaction. It is a mistake to try to force upon business organizations funds which they do not need. Under the circumstances the 'idle dollar' is a natural and proper enough phenomenon. A demand for credit is difficult to create artificially, and there is always danger in so doing.

"Banks must be liquid enough at all times to pay depositors. The idea of a commercial loan is that it represents a self-liquidating process in business. If the banker makes only those advances that are inherently sound, and selects his maturities wisely, he will have incoming funds to meet demands.

Government Lending

"As everbody knows, the Government has vast lending agencies, for home owners, farmers, and the like. These have nothing to do with the subject of this article, except that all such Government operations would be impossible if the banks did not lend the Government money for the purpose.

"No one can set a time when borrowing will be resumed. But it will come when men once more feel that conditions are sufficiently settled to warrant them in taking chances, in entering upon deals, and in trying to make money."

Mr. Atwood says that it may be that the banks are overcautious now, just as they were overconfident in 1929, but calls attention to the fact that until a little more than a year ago banks were failing "partly because they had loaned too freely, and were being criticized right and left for precisely that fault." He adds:

"Indeed the banks which had been cautious in their lending policy came through the crisis safely. Under such conditions it is utterly useless to criticize banks for not making loans. After the experience they had for several years, especially in 1932 and 1933, it is only natural that they should relax their requirements very slowly and gradually.

"Unfortunately, many of the applications for loans are not people who want temporary banking accommodation for three or six months and are quite able to meet their maturity dates, but are from those who really need permanent capital. They are busted and they want someone to stake them to a new start. What they really seek is a partner to furnish them with long-time capital. But depositors insist upon being paid on demand, and, therefore, it is a grave question whether banks should tie up their funds for any length of time."

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Fricker and son and Miss Caroline Aspelin visited at the Verner Nelson home in Warren Thanksgiving Day.

1200 Cattle In Woods

Grand Rapids.—Somowhere in the north woods are 1200 cattle roaming loose, part of the herd which was driven to Grand Rapids as part of the government relief program, and the government is interested enough in getting them back to offer a bounty of $2 a head for anyone bringing them in. While some of the cattle have doubtless died while in the woods, either from injury or from becoming mired in mud holes, a good many have been seen by hunters and by others in small bands scattered about the country. In some cases the cattle have wandered many miles from where they were herded. Quite a number of people now have the impression that the cattle running at large are public property and can be slaughtered or kept. They belong to the government, however, which is determined that as many as can be found will be brought in and slaughtered for the needy.

Election and Reverses

The annual village election held here Tuesday was as usual a quiet affair. All the candidates that were nominated at the caucus and put on the ticket were elected with the exception of C. H. Gunheim for councilman and F. K. Fredrickson for justice of the peace. Mr. Gunheim let it be known that he did not want the job and Dennes Wegge was elected in his place and Joseph Nelson was elected as justice instead of Mr. Fredrickson.

The Dorcas Society are having their annual sale tonight at the Lutheran church. Come and see their fancy work. Lunch served by the Ladies Aid.

Do you know that from this morning on, you have only 15 more shopping days before Christmas? The merchants in Holt have stocked a full line of gifts for you to chose from.

50,000 Die From T. B.

Two hundred and ninety Marshall County men, women and children have been killed by tuberculosis during the past 23 years. In the same period nearly 50,000 deaths from this disease have been reported throughout Minnesota. These facts are contained in a Christmas Seal bulletin issued by the Minnesota Public Health Association.

Although more than 1,000 tuberculosis deaths have occured in the state for the year 1933 alone the actual death rate has decreased slightly from the previous year. Deaths reported in 1933 were 1,003 as compared with 1,049 in 1932.

Minnesota has maintained its place in the nations as eighth lowest in number of deaths per population according to a report issued by the National Tuberculosis Association. Arizona has the highest death rate of any state with 236.9 per 100,000 population which is a decrease from the state's showing for 1932 of 250 per 100,000. Minnesota had 38.7 during the past year compared with 40.8 for 1932.

While the percentage of deaths from this plague has decreased remarkably during the past years, it is still a leading cause of death between the ages of 15 and 45, the bulletin shows. A constant battle agrinst the disease has been waged in every state and county including a program of public health, nursing, tuberculin testing, clinics for school children, and healthy education for both children and adults, all carried on by funds derived from the annual Christmas Seal sale.

Mr. and Mrs. Leo Horien and family, Mrs. Chas. Hagglund and family, Pete Hanson from Warren, Ben Hagglund from Thief River Falls and Miss Harriet Hanson from Roseau were entertained at the home of the editor and family on Thanksgiving Day.

Our Gratitude To Holt and Community

THE progress of this bank is due not only to its policies but to the good will and the conservative business judgement of the people of Holt and vicinity. They appreciate our bank.

At this Thanksgiving season and all the year, we are thankful for this loyalty and friendship.

We want folks always to point proudly and effectionately to our bank as an institution worthy of Holt.

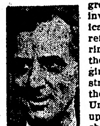
General Butler's Fantastic Story of Fascist Plot to Seize the Government—Strike in the Great Steel Industry Becomes Imminent.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© by Western Newspaper Union.



Gen. Smedley D. Butler

SOBER minded American citizens find it difficult to take seriously the fantastic story that Maj. Gen. Smedley D. Butler told to the congressional committee investigating un-American activities. This retired officer of marines charges that there is a plot, engineered by Wall street men, to seize the government of the United States and set up a Fascist dictatorship, and the chairman of the committee, Representative John W. McCormack of New York, considered the tale of enough importance to warrant the calling of witnesses to prove or disprove it. General Butler made his story public through the columns of the New York Evening Post, as the proceedings of the committee are conducted in private.

If Butler is to be believed, he was approached by Gerald P. MacGuire, bond salesman in the stock exchange firm of Grayson M. P. Murphy and Company, and urged to accept the leadership of a soldier organization of half a million men "which would assemble—probably a year from now—in Washington, and that within a few days it could take over the functions of the government." MacGuire, according to the general, thought the overturn of the government might be accomplished peacefully and suggested that "we might even go along with Roosevelt and do with him what Mussolini did with the king of Italy."

"He told me he believed that at least half of the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars would follow me.

"MacGuire explained to me that they had two other candidates for the position of 'Man on the White Horse.' He said that if I did not accept an offer would be made to Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff of the United States army, and that the third choice would be Hanford MacNider, former commander of the American Legion.

"So far as I know, neither General MacArthur nor MacNider has been approached. Their names were merely mentioned as 'alternates.'"

The general said he was offered considerable sums "for expenses" which he did not accept. He said MacGuire intimated that among the backers of the plan were Mr. Murphy and Col. Robert S. Clark, a wealthy New Yorker with offices in the Stock Exchange building; and he added that later Colonel Clark offered him money to go to the American Legion convention in Chicago last year and make a speech for retention of the gold standard, which speech MacGuire had previously given Butler.

Clark, at present in France, admitted he had asked Butler "to use his influence in favor of sound money and against inflation," but strongly denied that he had sponsored a Fascist movement. He declared he would take action for libel against any person accusing him in such a connection.

Murphy and other Wall street men said the story was absolutely false and unutterably ridiculous, and MacGuire, after being heard by the McCormack committee, said: "It's a joke—a publicity stunt. I know nothing about it. The matter is made out of whole cloth. I deny the story completely."

SO FAR as the great steel industry is concerned, it appears that the industrial truce asked by President Roosevelt cannot be arranged, and the prospect of a strike of the steel workers is growing.

In behalf of the United States Steel corporation, a proposal was made to the American Federation of Labor that recognition of that organization would be granted, but that no contract would be made. This proposal, it was said, would be agreed to by 85 per cent of the steel industry.

The labor spokesmen, led by William Green, president of the A. F of L., rejected the tender on the ground that it was hedged about in such a way to permit collective bargaining with minority groups or company unions, and that the employers were still unwilling to accept the principle of majority rule as set forth in the national labor relations board's decision in the Houde case.

If a rupture comes the Federation of Labor may find the federal government rather unsympathetic. Mr. Green's influence in the White House has been waning noticeably and he has had no personal contacts with the President for some time.

New Yorkers with offices in skyscrapers were gladdened by the news that a threatened strike of elevator operators had been averted and an agreement, drafted by Mayor La Guardia's board of arbitration, had been signed by representatives of the real estate interests and the union. The union withdrew its demand for a closed shop; and standards of wages and hours in various types of buildings will be worked out by a committee of three arbiters, with the union recognized as the bargaining agent for the employees.

BY ORDER of the national labor relations board there will be held soon a great workers' election which will determine whether organized labor shall dominate the country's rubber industry.

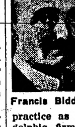
The board decreed that the Firestone Tire and Rubber company and the B. F. Goodrich company of Akron, Ohio, must allow their employees to ballot on the question of whether they want a company union or an American Federation of Labor union to represent them in collective bargaining under the NRA.

Twenty-one thousand workers, the largest number ever polled by the labor board on an NRA question, will participate in the election. In addition another 15,000 workers of the Goodyear Rubber company may ballot on the same question. The Goodyear angle of the case has not yet been passed upon by the board.

Both the Firestone and Goodrich companies have opposed the elections now ordered, maintaining that conditions in their plants are satisfactory and that electioneering in rival unions would only disturb the peace among the workers.

DONALD R. RICHBERG, executive director of the national emergency council and now perhaps the President's chief adviser, addressing the Associated Grocers of America at their convention in New York, proposed the creation of a new federal body, combining functions of the NRA and the federal trade commission, to define and regulate concerted trade action in the "twilight zone" under antitrust laws.

Discussing the program for permanent NRA legislation, he reiterated his opposition to control of prices and production. He said the fixing of minimum wages and maximum hours had demonstrated its soundness for eliminating the worst forms of unfair competition in treatment of employees, and that admittedly dishonest business practices should be proscribed.



Francis Biddle

PHILADELPHIA lawyers are traditionally supposed to be able to unravel the worst of tangles, so President Roosevelt has picked one to be chairman of the national labor relations board. He is Francis Biddle, of the famous family of that name, and he succeeds Lloyd K. Garrison, who retired from the chairmanship to resume his duties as dean of the law school of the University of Wisconsin.

Francis Biddle has been engaged in law practice as a member of the Philadelphia firm of Barnes, Biddle, and Meyers. He served from 1922 to 1926 as assistant district attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania. In his new post his task will be the settlement of labor disputes arising out of the recovery act, especially those involving collective bargaining.

FRANCE is worried by the admitted fact that Germany has developed a military air fleet of considerable size, composed of modern pursuit and bombing planes, and Gen. Victor Denain, French minister of air, estimates that by January the reich will have from 1,000 to 1,100 of these machines, swifter and better than those possessed by France. Consequently he has asked the chamber of deputies for about $230,000,000 to finance a program for recovering the ground lost by French aviation. The task is already under way, $32,500,000 having been spent out of an appropriation for modernization.

HUGH R. WILSON, American ambassador to Switzerland, laid before the disarmament conference in Geneva a proposal by the United States for international control of arms traffic and full publicity to prevent secret arming of nations. The proposal was well received by most of the delegates, and it will be studied by committees in January.

By the American plan each government would license its manufacturers of munitions for five year periods. No reserve stocks would be allowed and manufacturers would be required to present bona fide orders before receiving a license. Details of war vessels built for other nations would have to be reported. Reports of licenses and orders would be turned over to a central committee at Geneva and made a matter of public record. A permanent commission, including a member from each signatory nation, would be empowered to investigate transactions.

NOTABLES of the Catholic church gathered in Chicago from all parts of the world to take part in the silver jubilee of Cardinal Mundelein, who was consecrated a bishop 25 years ago. The pope sent his personal greetings and his blessing.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT is reveling in baths and rest at Warm Springs, Ga., but he is not neglecting the nation's business, keeping in close touch with Washington and receiving many official visitors. At his first press conference there he announced with glad smiles that he would again "lend his birthday," January 30, to the national committee that arranges birthday balls all over the country for the benefit of infantile paralysis sufferers.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL J. R. M'CARL has thrown a monkey-wrench into part of the machinery of Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins. Turning down a check from Hopkins to the officials of the District of Columbia which was to have started work on a housing development, Mr. McCarl held that the federal emergency relief act, providing for the granting of funds for various relief purposes, could not apply to the acquisition of real estate and the construction of homes. This type of activity, he said, would be of a permanent and not an emergency nature, and the act was adopted to meet emergencies.

The FERA already has under way a program of "rehabilitating" 80,000 farm families in homes and on land to be sold to them by the government.

Silas Strawn

MORE and more it becomes evident that President Roosevelt intends to pursue a middle of the road policy in his efforts for national recovery, and that in the overwhelmingly Democratic next congress there will be no one faction strong enough to dictate to him. The Chief Executive and the business leaders of the country are gradually coming together, and if and when they reach an accord on methods it will be found that a good many of the more radical ideas of the brain trusters will have been discarded. The best minds in industry and finance are no longer standing back and merely criticizing. They are taking an active part in planning for the future welfare of the nation. Herewith are summarized some of the important new developments in this direction:

President Henry I. Harriman of the United States Chamber of Commerce, in pursuance of a resolution adopted by the board of directors, has appointed a committee of six men, headed by Silas Strawn of Chicago, to co-operate with other business and agricultural associations in drafting plans for the recovery of business. The board of the chamber endorsed the continuation of relief and housing, but signified that business is still opposed to the unbalanced budget, further reduction of working hours as embodied in the movement for a 30-hour week, new and unprecedented outlays for public works, continuance of the NRA, the doctrine of majority rule in collective bargaining, and unemployment insurance.

Through the National Association of Manufacturers, invitations were sent to every manufacturer in the United States to attend a national industrial conference in New York on December 5 to draft "constructive recommendations" for presentation to President Roosevelt.

In a petition addressed to the President and congress the National Economy league has presented a definite program for balancing the federal budget in the coming fiscal year, holding that only by balancing the budget can sustained national recovery be accomplished. The petition proposes heavy reductions in government expenditures and additional taxes totaling $935,000,000.

NOT so pleasing to the industrialists were the two speeches the President delivered during his inspection of the Tennessee valley project, for if his predictions are borne out, his "revolution" will bring about the death of private enterprise in the power industry. At Tupelo, Miss., he declared himself flatly for public ownership of public utilities, saying: "What you are doing here is going to be copied in every state in the Union before we are through"; the allusion being to the fact that Tupelo has contracted for TVA power.

In Birmingham the President said: "I am aware that a few of your citizenry are leaving no stone unturned to block and harass and delay this great national program. I am confident, however, that these obstructionists, few in number in comparison with the whole population, do not reflect the views of the overwhelming majority.

"I know, too, that the overwhelming majority of your business men, big and little, are in hearty accord with the great undertaking of regional planning now being carried forward."

FORTY-FIVE new bills were pushed through the Louisiana legislature in five days with Senator Huey Long on the rostrum telling the legislators just what to do, but seldom stopping to tell them why. The "Kingfish" says he now is in position to make the state a Utopia, or rather, in his own words, "the kind of state nobody has dreamed of." It is the general belief that he hopes his "share the wealth" program will ultimately land him in the White House.

The senator's most ambitious legislation is the statute proclaiming a two-year moratorium for harassed debtors. Another bill sets up a civil service commission, composed of state administration leaders, with power to remove police and fire chiefs. That will give Long control of virtually all municipal policemen and firemen. Long said the bill was intended to take them "out of politics."

MINNESOTA NEWS

Minneapolis—Six Minnesota deer hunters were killed during the first week of the open season.

Austin—Bids for construction of 44 homes in a federal subsistence project here will be received from contractors December 3.

Granite Falls—Pains Miss Mildred Komplein suffered in her leg led her to a doctor where X-ray examination disclosed a needle imbedded deeply in the flesh.

St. Paul—Minnesota will receive from the federal relief administration $4,700,000 for state relief work for December, it was learned from Washington.

Willmar—Several hundred dollars worth of watches and rings were stolen from the Paffrath jewelry store here when thieves cut through a show window.

Duluth—Logging operations in the woods of northern Minnesota and Wisconsin, to begin soon, are expected to give employment to 2,500 men during the winter months.

Fergus Falls—Marvin Knutson, 9 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Knutson, farmers, was killed when a gun held by his eleven-year old brother accidentally discharged.

Duluth—An infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hill of Duluth was killed instantly when the door of her parents' car swung open throwing Mrs. Hill and the baby to the pavement.

Deer River—Superintendent J. B. Hagen of the local schools suffered internal injuries when he attempted to oust three unruly young men from the school building, and fell down a flight of cement steps.

Tower—Plunging through thin ice on which they were playing, Jack Renstrom, 9-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Larry Renstrom, and Frederick Waltonen, 6-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Wantonen, drowned in the river.

Redwood Falls—Approximately 500 people attended the banquet held at the armory here, honoring Ted Balko, national corn husking champion. W. T. Foley and L. C. (Larry Ho) Hodgson, both of St. Paul, were the principal speakers.

Minneapolis—Marooned in the air by dense fog a Northwest Airlines plane carrying a pilot and four passengers flew for nearly two hours between the Minneapois and St. Paul airports before it found a hole and dived to safety in St. Paul.

St. Paul—The race for State Auditor in the recent election proved very close, and the winner was not officially learned until two weeks later. Official returns showed Stafford King polled 380,302 votes against 379,654 for John T. Lyons, a difference of 648 votes.

Rochester—Dr. and Mrs. William J. Mayo observed their fiftieth wedding anniversary here Nov. 20. The elder of the Mayo brothers and wife were honored at a reception by members of the Mayo clinic staff in the library of the clinic, and the anniversary was observed at a family dinner at the Mayo home. The Mayos were married here November 20, 1884, and have lived here since.

St. Paul—A legislature hostile to Governor Olson this winter appears a virtual certainty when Farmer-Labor followers in the house fell 13 votes short of a majority at a caucus designed to demonstrate the administration's strength. Where they had anticipated somewhere around 66 members at the session, the administration leaders drew but 56, and three of them declined to vote on the caucus choice for speaker, Representative Harold H. Barker of Elbow Lake.

St. Paul—A new naval recruiting sub-station has been opened in St. Paul because of the increase in recruiting of young men between 17 and 25 years of age, naval officers reported. The station will be in charge of recruiting in Chisago, Winona, Fillmore, Dakota, Wabasha, Goodhue, Ramsey, Washington, Houston and Olmstead in Minnesota and the southern part of Pine ounty, and Polk, Pepin, Chippewa, Eau Claire, St. Croix, Rusk, Barron, Dunn and Pierce counties in Wisconsin.

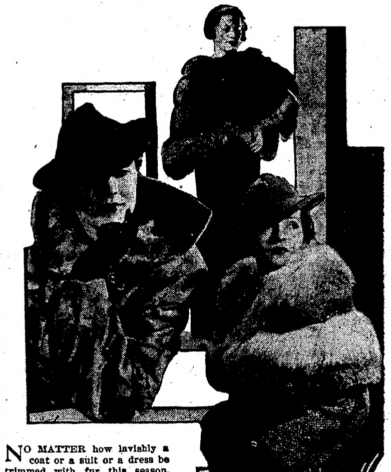
St. Paul—Minnesota started a single attack against two enemies of the past five years—drouth and unemployment—with announcement of a program for planting an auxiliary forest shelter belt in 17 drouth-stricken counties thereby providing 6,000,000 man-hours of employment for the preparatory work this winter. The auxiliary shelter belt will be started in the 17 counties of Lac qui Parle, Yellow Medicine, Big Stone, Traverse, Stevens, Grant, Pope, Kandiyohi, Renville, Redwood, Lyon, Lincoln, Pipestone, Cottonwood, Douglas, Otter Tail, Wadena. It will be extended to parts of bordering counties where drouth-killed trees are found. This will include portions of Wilkin, Cass, Stearns, Meeker, McLeod, Brown, Rock, Jackson, Hennepin and Wright counties.

Beaudette—Lewis Payne, 46 years old, was convicted of second degree murder in the killing of Paul Melhorn in the Northwest Angle country several months ago and was sentenced to life imprisonment at Stillwater.

St. Paul—Defeat of four out of the five constitutional amendments submitted at the recent election was indicated in a check-up of complete returns. The winning amendment is No. 3 which permits the exemption of household goods and farm implements from taxation.

Furs Are Gorgeous This Winter

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



NO MATTER how lavishly a coat or a suit or a dress be trimmed with fur this season, according to the present ways of fashion, it is not too lavishly furred. The same is true of the new separate fur pieces and "sets" which include muffs, the more sumptuous and the more spectacular the better do they interpret the latest style trends.

The big theme among furriers this season is capes—capes that are made of furs so gorgeous and grand they look worth a king's ransom. To illustrate, see the cape centered in the picture. This luxurious silver fox cape is semi-circular in shape, fastens on the left shoulder and has four tails falling to the back. The beauty of capes such as this is that they can be worn with different costumes, imparting an air of distinction wherever they go. Of course, we do not have to call attention to the attractive evening gloves which this lady is wearing, for no doubt they registered at first glance. They are of white suede, shirred in an openwork pattern as you see.

The separate cape theme is by no means confined to evening fashions; on the contrary, the newest thing going in the way of a fur piece is the fur cape which can be worn with either the cloth coat or the dress, if you prefer, which is made of a wintry good-looking woolen. The idea is conveyed in the stunning outfit to the right in the group. Here is something practical and smart. The color of this superb Russian lynx which forms the cape, blends in with the tone of the cloth to perfection. A particularly likable feature of this handsome cape is that while it is really a separate piece, it looks as if it were really an applied trimming. When you stop to think of it, what a worthwhile possession a separate fur cape such as this is—wear it with anything, dress, coat or suit. This young woman's hat, if you are wanting to know, is a brown antelope felt trimmed with leather. The most important bit of news in regard to this hat is that it has an embossed monogram at one side of the crown just over the right eye. It is monogrammed because the fashionable thing to do is to monogram most everything this season.

Mademoiselle sitting so placidly in the picture has on one of those sleek, patrician looking full-length gray kidskin coats which are so beautifully slenderizing. The model shown has a double sailor collar (turn it up or down) which is youthful in line and exceedingly flattering. The sleeves are full below the elbow, which is a characteristic feature of many of the newest coats. The black felt sombrero is edged and banded with black wool.

If you are having a suit tailored, let it reflect Russian inspiration in that its tunic-like coat be bordered with fur all around, even up the front or side-front fastening. There should be an upstanding collar fencing the throat. A cossack turban of matching fur with a muff of the same are essential to complete the picture.

The three-quarter coat, all of fur, with wide belt across the front and full peasant sleeves, is also a favorite. Other fur style notes point to the return of gray squirrel into favor, also borders of tawny, showy furs around hemlines or bandings of flat furs such as caracul or nutria. A black cloth cossack outfit with bandings, tall turban and muff of black caracul, is chic.

THREE NEW GOWNS NOVEL TO EXTREME

Three dresses Parisiennes like:

One from Mirande called "Pour Plaire," which, interpreted, means "to please," and it should, for it is a dinner frock in black velvet with the lower portion of the bulbous sleeves made of bright blue velvet. It has a belt of the bright blue velvet, too, and the neckline is shaped something like a stirrup, round in the back and squared off in the front.

The second model is by Rosevienne and named "Satnico," after the novel new fabric of which it is made, combining satin with a mat surface. It is an afternoon dress of flame-colored satin combined with incrusted diagonal bands of the reverse side of the satin which is mat.

The third item is from Irmone, who has called it "Ciros." It is a coat in brown wool trimmed with frosted brown lamb as collar and cuffs. Both collar and cuffs are small and discreet, and the coat has a tailored look about it at first glance, but on second glance you see it is also a semi-dress coat.

Trains Will Be in Vogue This Winter, Says Paris

Trains will be in vogue this winter. Some have a long panel that starts at the waistline at the back; others feature a Watteau pleat or court mantle effect at the back.

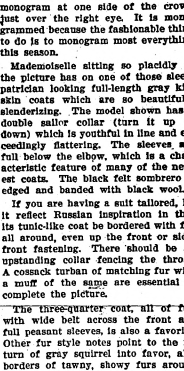
Worth shows trains with a long flared volant that develops from the back of the dress. Maggy Rouff has very formal dresses with a wing effect that is used for a train. Augustabernard obtains effects by several shirred volants that are continued down to the ground in irregular effects.

Parchment for Buttons

Thick parchment made up into odd buttons add to the long line of novelties being launched this year. They are available curled up on the edges like ancient scrolls or just slightly bent like bits of peanut brittle.

NEW HIGH TURBANS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



Hats have gone frankly Russian. Here is one of the high turbans which is distinctly of Russian influence. It is fashioned of black hatters' plush. Not only have hats gone Russian, but costumes in the winter mode bespeak this influence in no uncertain terms. In every collection there is a predominance of Cossack tunics, Cossack turbans, wide-belted Russian effects, high military-looking collars and fur borderings galore.

Neckwear Is Feminine

There is a revival in delicate, truly feminine neckwear. Very smart are the new styles in sheer chiffon, combined with lace and trimmed with metal thread stitching, especially in feather stitching.

Just a Little Smile

CRITICISM

"What do you think of the critics of your plan?"

"I resent them," answered Senator Sorghum.

"Haven't they any good ideas?"

"Oh, yes. I may utilize some of them. Nevertheless, I don't propose to encourage the nerve they show in expressing them."

And He Went His Way

Sinister-Looking Individual (significantly)—Is yer 'usband at 'ome, ma'am?

Lady (resourcefully)—Well, if he's finished his revolver practice, he'll be playing in the back garden with our bloodhounds. Did you want to see him?—London Tit-Bits.

Resented Imputation

Specialist—This eccentricity you speak of in your daughter—isn't it, after all, a matter of heredity?

Mother (severely)—No, sir! I'd have you to know there never was any heredity in our family!

Length, Not Breadth

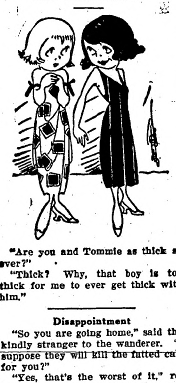
First Voter—How long did the candidate speak, Bill?

Bill—About an hour and a half.

First Voter—And what was it all about?

Bill—He didn't say.—Exchange.

TWO THICKNESSES



"Are you and Tommie as thick as ever?"

"Thick? Why, that boy is too thick for me to ever get thick with him."

Disappointment

"So you are going home," said the kindly stranger to the wanderer. "I suppose they will kill the fatted calf for you?"

"Yes, that's the worst of it," replied the wanderer sourly; "I am on a diet and can't eat any meat."—Pathfinder Magazine.

Hard Luck Story

My friend, the visiting nurse, reports that a very sick patient told her that her illness was caused by bad teeth. The way she put it was, "I should have had my teeth excavated two years ago, for pyrex."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Ambition

He—I'd like to write the most popular book of the day.

She—You think that is the way to fame?

He—I don't give a hoot for the fame, it is the way to fill a pocketbook, and that's what interests me.

He Shouldn't

Edithe—My fiance lost all his money in the stock exchange crash.

Bessie—I bet you feel sorry for him.

Edithe—Yes, he'll miss me.

Her View of It

He—Would you marry for money?

She—Well, a husband with no money to me would be like a garage with no car in it.

Not Missing Anything

Old Gentleman—Didn't I give you a dime just now in the High street?

Tramp—Yes, sir; I've got a branch office there.

Among the Bluebloods

"The road to success is a hard one, my son, and often blocked by trees."

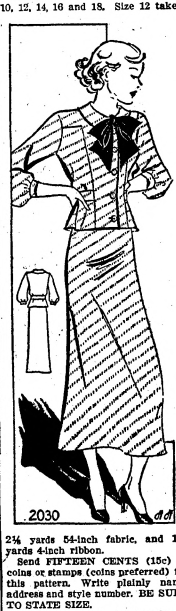
"Yes, sir; family trees."

Two-Piece Frock in Smart Design

PATTERN 2030

In this two-piece frock youth is delightfully served. Make it of one of the new fabric prints which look like wool, or of a smart sheer woolen. It suggests a suit in its trim lines and neat tailored finish. The yoke extends down the front to the edge of the jacket in a vest effect from under which a belt partly encircles the waistline. The bow at the neck is extremely attractive in velvet. Think of it in rust color with the frock in two shades of green. With the diagrammed sewing chart which accompanies the pattern, even a young girl can easily make the frock.

Pattern 2030 is available in sizes 10, 12, 14, 16 and 18. Size 12 takes 2⅛ yards 54-inch fabric, and 1⅛ yards 4-inch ribbon.



Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle, Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth street, New York City.

PREPARATION

"Daddy, I want to be an Arctic explorer."

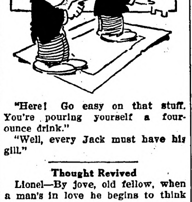
"That's fine, my boy."

"But, daddy, I want to go into training at once."

"How so?"

"Well, I want a dollar a day for ice cream so that I can get accustomed to the cold."

QUITE TRUE



"Here! Go easy on that stuff. You're pouring yourself a four-ounce drink."

"Well, every Jack must have his gill."

Thought Revived

Lionel—By jove, old fellow, when a man's in love he begins to think that his eyes are open for the first time!

Sympathizing Friend—Yes, and when it's all over he sometimes has the same sensation!—Vancouver Province.

Quaint Forms

"George Washington had quaint forms of speech," remarked the studious person.

"Yes," said Miss Cayenne. "But wouldn't George say the same of us if he could hear some of the things that go on over the radio."

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a faculty position in Lostland Academy, Janet Mercer meets Prof. Arthur Fleming, also on his way to the Academy. At the school they are struck by an air of mystery pervading the place. Gordon Haskell, proprietor, welcomes them. Wilton Payne completes the Academy faculty. In a schoolroom Janet finds a group which the teachers had supposed were scholars, are wax figures. Haskell explains unusual circumstances connected with the conduct of the Academy. Among the pupils is Berenice Bracebridge, daughter of the late owner of the school. The story of the tragedy of Lostland Academy is that of two sisters and two brothers of Berenice, who lost their lives in the water, some years ago. The wax figures were modeled in the likenesses of the four, and Doctor Bracebridge's will provided that they must be preserved. Payne learns from Berenice that an uncouth giant whom Janet had seen with Haskell is named Balder, and is a valuable servant. From Jerry Moore, the only witness of the drowning of the children, Payne learns particulars of the tragedy. He begins to take an increasing interest in Berenice, as Fleming does in Janet. Reading diaries kept by Doctor Bracebridge, Payne senses something sinister in the drowning of the children. In the belfry of the old church he finds a long discarded Christmas tree. Its presence puzzles him. Balder makes a halting explanation of its preservation. Haskell proposes marriage to Berenice, but she tells him she does not love him enough to marry him. Payne ascertains the fact that the feeling of something sinister about the Academy is general in the community.

"Strong men like Balder are in demand," Payne commented; "mere muscular strength is valuable in a vast place like the academy." He slipped the key into her hand. "I had this made for you, though I know you are getting the better of your fears."

Her hand closed over the little key gratefully. "I am much better—much happier. It's only when I am listening to Mother Martha that I think of the figures. Even my guardian doesn't speak of them now, and I think he does not go near them."

"No, he doesn't."

"And the scholars seem less afraid. They are getting used to the old place."

"It has become very dear to me," he whispered.

"I wish I hadn't heard that report about my guardian and myself."

"Forget it!"

"Balder is always doing what he shouldn't do—but not what he should. I don't suppose he even burned the old tree."

"I think he did. It was there the first time I went back to the belfry; the next it was gone!"

"I'm glad! It made me lonesome thinking of that dreary little tree up there. I believe I'll wear this key around my neck—under my dress. Be sure you remember to put the original back."

When they returned home they found Balder burning leaves on the other side of the garden from the pine grove.

"Don't speak to him about talking of your engagement, Berenice," Janet cautioned her. "Don't get his ill will."

Berenice promised to say nothing. Wilton, when he had put the car away, proposed a walk around the lake, "—if you are not tired with all the excitement of the day."

She glanced back several times at the figure of Balder seen across the smoke and flame of the burning leaves.

"He's watching us. He pretends he isn't watching us, but he is—as he tosses the leaves, he's watching!"

"What of it? He cannot harm us."

"I'm not so sure. He has a queer sort of fidelity to my guardian. He may resent—"

She broke off, blushing. She had come too near to uttering a secret hope. Wilton, looking tenderly at her, saw in the signals of that rising color a prophecy of his own ultimate happiness—the fulfillment of his dearest wish!

They stood where a little beach of crisp white sand received the low murmur and caress of the lake at its endless lapping and stirring; a wood, a tangle of small birches and maples, stretched back from the banks and invited them to enter. A little, smooth path of white sand serpentined through the wood, its edges fern bordered; this they took until the fairy birches received them into their company, and ringed them from observation. The girl paused then with a sigh of relief, took off her knitted cap, and let her hair blow in the wind.

"Your hair is as yellow as the birch leaves. You are not afraid now."

"No!"

"Berenice, I never meant to tell you so soon—but, my dear—"

He paused, unable to meet her eyes or to utter the wild words of worship and adoration he had so often rehearsed in the lonely watches of the night—now they had fled from him as dreams flee. What was real was his stammering, his inability to tell her that she had become his inclosed world of glory and enchantment.

"Wilton—it isn't too soon. Here everything has to come quickly."

"For the danger—the fear!"

The spirit of her eyes was one of intense demand and challenge—as if she sought the refuge of his arms for more than the bright validities of love.

"To know you love me keeps the darkness back—keeps back what I most fear—what creeps up to me from all those sad, empty rooms and corridors." She pointed through the trees, across the blue, moving waters at the ivied building. "I am glad, Wilton—"

"I could not help it."

"As if I wanted you to! We shall be married—soon."

"We must keep our engagement secret."

"But not from Janet and Arthur and kind Mrs. Denver."

"No—they're safe."

"I would have to tell Janet." She started as the whirr of a partridge shook all the bushes near them. "I feel nowhere safe from harm."

"What harm could come to you?"

"I don't know! I think too much."

"Yes—and you've had rather a strange girlhood."

She looked about her. "I'm glad you asked me to marry you here—out of doors. I shall never forget it. Here a little wintergreen plant close to my feet; a laurel bush behind us, a birch tree over us!"

He drew her into his arms, held her close—then a voice startled them apart. "Miss Berenice!" They turned. It was Balder, glowering at them evilly. "Your gardeen wants you," he said, and threw Wilton an insolent and threatening look.

"Miss Bracebridge will come when she is ready. Please go back where you came from."

Balder drew himself to his full height. He was a terrifying spectacle as he shot an arm into the air with the curious precision of a machine.

"Don't get near my arm," he muttered. "I warn you to keep away."

"Leave us!"

"You think you can have it all your own way in Lostland academy. You're not the boss."

"Go! I tell you."

Balder turned away muttering "You'll be sorry."

Berenice addressed Wilton with passionate earnestness. "Oh, I am so sorry you spoke to him at all, Wilton—he is so sullen, so revengeful. I am always afraid of him. I hate to go back. He'll go straight to Gordon Haskell—and what will happen to us then?"

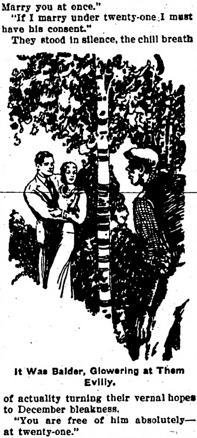
"Nothing can happen to us, darling. Haven't we the right to love each other?"

"Yes—but suppose he separates us?"

"He can't. I'll take you away first. Marry you at once."

"If I marry under twenty-one I must have his consent."

They stood in silence, the chill breath of actuality turning their vernal hopes to December bleakness.



It Was Balder, Glowering at Them Evilly.

"You are free of him absolutely—at twenty-one."

"Yes! free! I hope. He has always liked me better than I like him."

"Give me your promise, dear, to wait for me—through everything."

"What else should I wait for?"

"You haven't met many men, dear."

"No—but I—know that I could not change." She spoke without emotion, as quietly and with as much conviction as she would have affirmed that they were standing near a lake.

"Berenice, I think I shall go straight to your guardian and tell him. What can he do! He can't turn back the clock!"

"Do you think it's best? I'm not sure of him. I've been under the same roof with him for years, and I do not know him well yet. He has strange moods—solitary rages, biting ways of cutting people short. His personality helped in the decay of the academy; Oh, I am talking most freely, but it is a relief!"

"Of course it is. You are only telling me things I've figured out largely for myself. Janet and Arthur see it, too."

"You see, if he should be angry and tell you to go—what would become of me?"

"Don't worry! My darling, I'd be standing within call like these ever-lasting pines. I can camp in the deserted village—anywhere! Or go to Jerry Moore. He'd lodge me for a while, I'm sure."

"Don't let us tell him," she pleaded.

"But Balder will."

"Then let us go together."

TO BE CONTINUED.

New Hybrid Wheat Sets Good Record

Tenmarq, Fair Example of American Type Produced by Hybridization.

Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

Tenmarq, the new high-yielding, excellent quality, hard red winter wheat which made a good showing this year in spite of the drouth, is a good example of an American variety produced by hybridization from wheats of other countries. Tenmarq, produced and tested by the Kansas agricutural experiment station and the United States Department of Agriculture, derives its name from the pedigree number of the male parent, Ten-sixty-six and the female parent, Marquis.

Ten-sixty-six is a selection of hard winter wheat made in 1906 from a bulk lot of Crimean wheat introduced from Russia. Marquis is the result of a cross made in Canada in 1892 between an early ripening spring wheat from Calcutta, India, and Red Fife, a high quality, hard red spring wheat introduced into Canada in 1842 from Danzig, Prussia.

Tenmarq also is an excellent example of the procedure followed by the bureau of plant industry in producing and testing new varieties. The first cross of Marquis and Ten-sixty-six was made in 1918. Several hundred selections of this cross were tested in the plant breeding nursery at Manhattan, Kan., until 1924, when the selection now known as Tenmarq was advanced to field plot tests on the agronomy farm. As it continued to show the good qualities sought, it was tested at experiment stations in western Kansas, and at stations in Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado, and Nebraska.

Tenmarq appeals to the grain trade, millers, and bakers, because it has inherited many of the milling characters and "baking strength" of Marquis, its spring wheat parent. Marquis is considered in the flour markets of the world as a high standard for new varieties.

Tenmarq is superior to Turkey, Kharkof, Kanred, and Blackhull, old varieties of hard red winter wheat in yield, stiffness of straw, earliness, and quality, the characters of primary interest to farmers.

It was grown in quantities this year by 60 Kansas farmers and lived up to advance expectations, although the yield was affected by the drouth. Tenmarq is not so winter hardy as Kanred and Turkey and is not recommended for northern Kansas or states to the north.

There Are Various Ways of Destroying Stumps

If time is an object stumps can be removed quickly by use of dynamite or a stump puller, but either method entails considerable work and expense, says Pathfinder Magazine. If the process can be stretched out over several weeks they can be removed with little expense or effort. Fire is the agent used but several weeks of treatment are necessary before the entire stump is made inflammable. The treatment consists of boring several vertical holes into the top of the stump, filling them with saltpeter, and then adding hot water. The chemical will gradually be carried to all parts of the stump and as the holes empty they should be refilled. After about four weeks during which time the holes have been refilled about three times, the stump is ready to burn. Due to the saltpeter the fire will even follow the deep roots and consume them.

World Wheat Supplies

Production of wheat in the northern hemisphere, not including Russia and China, is expected to be about 325,000,000 bushels less than last year, and the crop of the southern hemisphere about 105,000,000 bushels less, according to the government survey, says Wallaces' Farmer. The world carryover appears to be about the same as last year. The United States carryover is estimated at 290,000,000 bushels, which, together with the estimated production of 491,000,000 bushels, indicates a domestic supply of 781,000,000 bushels. With a normal domestic utilization of about 625,000,000 bushels, this would leave a carryover next July of about 156,000,000 bushels if there are no net imports or exports.

Plan Crop Locations

Considerable thought is going to be needed to plan 1935 crop rotations so as to avoid damage from chinch bugs. It is not so easy to plan for the elimination or reduction of acreages of the grass crops such as wheat, oats and rye. Care can be taken, however, in planning field arrangements so that these crops are more or less isolated from the cornfields. If the wheat fields are separated from corn by fields of clover, soy beans, potatoes, or other crops such as sugar beets the bugs are not likely to migrate through them to the corn.—Prairie Farmer.

Clover in Ontario

In the clover plots at the Ontario Agricultural college there are 236 strains of early red clover, perennial red clover, sweet clover, white clover and alsike, says the Montreal Herald. Nearly 25,000 plants in all are being studied, these including strains and indigenous hardy types from Russia, other northern European countries, America, and from old pastures in Ontario, the objective being thorough selection and cross-hybridization to combine the best characters.

Close View of Forces Dame Nature Unchains

The Glacial age is past, but the glaciers that still remain on the face of the earth continue to put on lively shows which gives us some conception of the forces that carved mountains and chasms millions of years ago.

Visiting the huge Mendenhall glacier a few miles out of Juneau, Alaska, a few weeks ago, a correspondent writes, we watched it toss thousands of tons of ice from its deep blue grotto into the rushing Mendenhall river. Each crash of ice falling from the roof of the cave comes like a bombardment in the great war. The thundering echoes roll around the mountain sides for 10 or 15 minutes.

The brilliant blue of the glacier, stretching away as far as the eye can reach and farther, the turmoil of the river and cataract, are awe-inspiring enough. But when the roar of breaking ice comes and the ground quivers beneath one, while icebergs as big as a house tear past us down the river, it is almost too awful for comfort—one of those things you have nightmares about on quiet nights, but also one of those experiences you always want to remember.

CHRISTMAS DESSERTS

A FLURRY of snow, a whoa to the horses, the stage-coach stops at the door and a bevy of bundles and beaming faces emerge. Inside, hot spicy things are waiting to warm bodies and hearts, and Christmas twilight will find them lingering still over dessert and egg-nogs.

Home for the holidays is ever the same—whether they arrive in stage-coach, racing car or air coach. It's the welcome that counts. And so for weeks before Christmas we plan special treats, not only for Christmas day, but surprises that will come out with the candles, all through this happy week.

Canned Conveniences

There'll be hot foods, plenty of them, but don't forget that frozen desserts are most accommodating about waiting in the refrigerator until the merry-makers come home from the matinee, from the skating party, or from afternoon bridge. Meals are always late during Christmas week, and why not? Let's prolong the good times as long as possible.

Not only should your refrigerator and your cupboards be well filled with foods you have made in advance, but the pantry shelves, too, must be well stocked. Cans of pantry whipping cream, are a great convenience for festive desserts made up in a hurry; there are plum puddings in cans, and fruit cakes which make delicious desserts if they are placed in a bag, steamed up a bit and topped with a hard sauce or a hot sherry sauce.

Useful Recipes

You will want to keep in mind, too, these excellent recipes for Christmas desserts:

Frozen Christmas Layers: Beat one cup cream, add four tablespoons confectioner's sugar and o and one-half squares of chocolate. Flavor with a few drops of vanilla and spread in the bottom of a refrigerator tray. Let stand while making part two.

Beat one-half cup cream, add one tablespoon confectioner's sugar, one-half cup of canned green gage plums, both fruit and syrup pressed through a sieve. Flavor with a few drops of almond flavoring, and tint green. Spread on top of the chocolate layer. Let freeze while making part three.

Beat one-half cup cream, add one and one-half tablespoons confectioner's sugar and one-half cup of canned raspberries pressed through a sieve. Color red and spread on top of the green layer. Turn out in brick form and serve in slices. This serves eight persons.

Frozen Plum Pudding: Melt one and one-half squares of chocolate in a double boiler and add slowly the contents of one can of condensed milk, stirring until thick and smooth. Add one and one-fourth cups water, and cool. Freeze to a mush in refrigerator tray, stirring occasionally. Add one cup of beaten cream, and freeze again to a mush. Then add one-fourth cup chopped walnuts, two tablespoons chopped dates, two tablespoons chopped raisins, two tablespoons chopped maraschino cherries and two tablespoons chopped mint cherries. Continue freezing. Stir now and then to prevent fruits from settling to bottom. This serves eight persons.

Snow Puffs with Mince-Meat Sauce: Cream one-fourth cup butter with one-half cup sugar and add one-fourth cup milk. Add the following sifted dry ingredients: one cup flour, one and one-half teaspoons baking powder and a few grains of salt. Fold in the stiffly-beaten whites of two eggs. Steam in small buttered molds (rounded bottoms if possible) for forty-five minutes. Turn out and pour over the following

Mince-Meat Sauce: Cook together until well blended and slightly thickened: one cup canned mince-meat, one-third cup sugar, one-half cup water and one tablespoon lemon juice. This makes six puffs with sauce.*

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

The primitive man met dangers which were inevitable. We meet dangers which are preventable.

Automobile accidents can be prevented. In fact, all accidents can be prevented. The fact that we can, if we will, eliminate to a very large degree the appalling dangers of modern life, is what makes the moral significance of this safety movement.

We should realize and appreciate the value of a human being Not all people seem to realize or appreciate that.

The carelessness regarding human life is the great tragedy that hangs over human industry.

It is only recently that there has come to be any regard for human life and we hope that this regard will increase.

The motorist can help considerably in solving this accident problem by driving carefully, courteously, and thoughtfully on our highways.

The state highway patrol has been instrumental in adding $149,872 to the state's motor vehicle license income in the first 10 months of 1934, according to a highway department bulletin. This money, mostly from commercial truck owners, represents payments made for correct license plates by persons found to have been driving with improper plates. Reports show the patrol, in the 10-month period, also collected $30,401 in fines, exclusive of license corrections; traveled 2,454,645 miles gave aid to 764,698 motorists, warned 148,883 of law violations, tagged 27,276 for illegal equipment and 6,847 for illegal registration and arrested 2,082 drivers for various infractions of State highway laws.

Christmas Tree Patrol

During the past week, personnel of the Division of Forestry have been stationed on the main highways leading into the big cities to check on the transportation of Christmas Trees. Each shipper must have written permission from the owner of the land and this permit must accompany the trees while being transported. The permit must contain the description of the land from which the trees are removed and signature of the owner.

The men stationed on the highways have instructions to stop all trucks carrying Christmas trees and examine the permit carried by the drivers.

This Christmas tree patrol will be maintained until after the Christmas tree shipping season is over.

All the Christmas tree cutters are required by law to report the descriptions of the land on which they expect to cut the trees. This report must be sent to the Director of the Division of Forestry, State Office Building, St. Paul, Minnesota, before any cutting is done. It must be signed by the person responsible for the cutting.

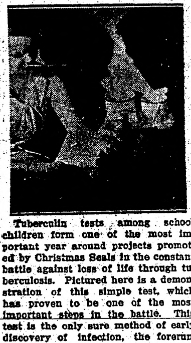
Simple Tuberculin Test Reveals Hidden Enemy



Tuberculin tests among school children form one of the most important year around projects promoted by Christmas Seals in the constant battle against loss of life through tuberculosis. Pictured here is a demonstration of this simple test, which has proven to be one of the most important steps in the battle. This test is the only sure method of early discovery of infection, the forerunner of the dangerous type of tuberculosis.

State O. K's. Nesting Grounds

The state executive council gave approval Saturday to a plan under which the government will ultimately establish a 50,000-acre wild migratory fowl nesting and breeding grounds in the Mud Lake area of Marshall county at a cost of $100,000.

The project is one of the largest sponsored by the United States Biological survey of which J. N. Darling is chief.

The executive council gave approval to a plan under which the Department of Conservation will acquire title to the land needed for the conservation area and then deed the land over to the goverment for which the government will pay the amount awarded by district court.

Appraisals have been made and title examined and the conservation department is ready to file an application in condemnation with the district court at Warren. The highway department also has assisted in the work, according to E. V. Willard conservation shief.

He said the project will not cost the state a cent, as the government will bear the entire cost.

Make Deer Hunting Reports

Appreciation was expressed by Erling Swenson, Director of the Divison of Game and Fish, because of the comparatively large numbers of deer hunters who have already filed their hunting reports. He warned that all hunting reports including the amount of game taken must be returned before January 31. Failure to do so, Director Swenson said, bars license for next year.

"Reports received to date indicate in the whole that Minnesota's deer herd is in good condition," Mr. Swenson said. "It is gratifying to note the absence of serious disease and the fact that the widespread drought did not effect the deer areas of the state any great degree."

Advice of Inspectors

Quality is a very important factor in the production of cream, with inspectors inspecting all butter that comes on the market, for foreign matter such as flies and other things that may get into the cream, which may result in a total loss of some churnings. Let's all work hand in hand to prevent such happenings.

$3,825,000 More Needed

Approximately $3,825,000 additional income will be needed by the Minnesota Highway department next year if it is to match the federal aid allotment anticipated for this state, according to N. W. Elsberg, highway commissioner.

Beginning in 1935, the federal government will demand dollar for dollar matching of highway aid funds by the state. In the past two years the national government gave Minnesota more than $15,000,000 in emergency highway grants as an employment measure. This money has kept state highway construction going since motor vehicle license fees were reduced in 1933, Mr. Elsberg said, but now that outright grants have been discontinued very little construction will be possible with present state revenue.

Commissioner Elsberg gave the following analyses of state highway finances for the coming year:

1935 estimated revenues based on average receipts during 1933 and 1934, with no change in present motor vehicle license fees will amount to $13,275,000.

The 1935 estimated essential expenditures will be $13,100,000 which goes to pay for the state highway patrol, bonds and interest, maintenance, construcion and all the other expenses that the department has to take care of thru the year.

The difference between revenues and expenditures amounts to only $175,000 free for matching.

The amount of federal aid expected to be offered Minnesota is $3,400,000. Amount of state funds necessary to match this amount is $4,000,000. Therefore, with $175,000 on hand it will require only $3,825,000 difference for the department next year.

Buying Of Cattle Resumed

The Federal government has launched another emergency cattle-buying program in the West and Southwest, with the exception of Minnesota, according M. T. Morgan, special representative of the Federal Surplus Relief corporation.

Work already is under way, Morgan said, and the government contemplates that the program of buying, slaughtering and processing the beef will be completed by the first of the year.

The total purchase will involve 986,000 head of cattle and calves. It will be distributed as follows:

Arizona 45,000, Colorado 64,000, Ihaho 18,000, Kansas 30,000, Missouri 16,400, Montana 125,000, Nebraska 37,000, New Mexico 125,000, N. Dakota 80,000, Oklahoma 30,000, South Dakota 75,000, Texas 225,000, Utah 50,000, Wyoming 64,000.

Morgan said one-third of the cattle will be retained in the states where they are bought and killed for relief purposes.

The others, he said, will be slaughtered and processed in other cities which include South St. Paul, Chicago, Denver, Fort Worth, Kansas City, St. Louis, Salt Lake City and Spokane.

In South St. Paul the program embraces the slaughter of 1,850 cattle and 1,200 calves a day until the first of the year.

R. Reierson Called Home

Just as we were going to press at 7:30 last night, we received the sad news that R. R. Reierson, pioneer merchant and business man of Holt, passed away at his home here after an illness that has kept him in bed the past few months.

SEASON'S GREETINGS
1934

This Christmas Seal makes possible the year round campaign to prevent, find and cure tuberculosis.

In Early Pioneer Days

Christ Norbeck of Thief River Falls was here on Tuesday and spent an afternoon visiting with old friends. While here we got into a conversation with him about olden times and what the Mud Lake country looked like in the early days. He stated that he homesteaded out in there about in 1904 and that the only way one could get out to his old farm was by boat.

He went on to tell us about one time that himself and Pete Knippa were going to town with butter and eggs in the early spring in 1908. He stated that they started out in the morning from the Knippa place in a small boat and the water was so rough that they only made it to the island where Hjalmer Johnson now lives, by night. There they camped and fried a duck or two which they had shot with an old gun that they had along with them. Christ said that the duck meat does not taste so good when you have to fry it on sticks and eat with no other side dish than butter.

The next morning they struck out again and took to the north shore of the lake and got to the Ed Erickson place about noon and there they had a good meal.

Mr. Norbeck now operates a nice farm east of Thief River Falls and reported that he had a good crop this year.

Notice for Bids

Sealed bids will be received by the School Board of District No. 61 until 1 o'clock p. m., December 28th, 1934 for 12 cords of green white popolar wood to be delivered on the school grounds The Board reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

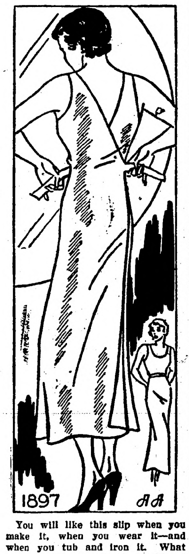
Here's Slip That Fits the Figure

PATTERN 1897



You will like this slip when you make it, when you wear it—and when you tub and iron it. What more could you ask of any bit of lingerie? It is a wrap-around model that crosses in the back and is both shadow-proof and adjustable. Our figures do change a bit from time to time, and with all this talk of "streamline silhouettes" and what not, it is a nice thing to know that one's slip will fit exactly right, come what may. It takes next to no time to make, as you will find to your joy, and irons flat like the proverbial handkerchief. Lovely in wash satin, crepe or unshrinkable rayon.

Pattern 1897 is available in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 takes 3½ yards 39 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins and stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

Robinson Says President Plans No New Taxes—Franco-German Agreement Concerning the Saar Reported—Vinson's Warning to Japan.

Senator Robinson

JOE ROBINSON of Arkansas, senate floor leader, spent four hours in conference with President Roosevelt at Warm Springs, and emerged with the welcome assurance that the New Deal program to be presented to congress in January does not contemplate the imposition of new taxes or the substantial increase of existing taxes. He added that he believed expenditures for normal government purposes would be kept well within the national income. Of course, this does not mean a balanced budget, for this cannot be had while enormous sums are being spent for relief and re-employment, but the senator would not admit that the cost of these would go above the ten-billion-dollar mark.

"Unemployment relief is to be preferred to the dole," he said. "A reasonably conservative program should be adopted with a view to tapering off the deficit."

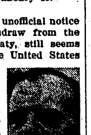
Senator Robinson said that the bonus was discussed at some length but no conclusion was reached. Intimates of the White House have expressed the fear that a bonus program calling for expenditure of more than two billion dollars may be passed over a veto.

Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi, chairman of the senate finance committee, who was also present at the conference, left for Washington to begin a study of unemployment insurance.

Next day the President's chief caller was Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper, and he told Mr. Roosevelt that business would move rapidly on the road to recovery if only it were assured of a safe and sane federal program of expenditures. To correspondents Mr. Roper said he was greatly cheered by Senator Robinson's statement. He felt that the left wing demand for vast sums of money for relief of the unemployed must be checked and that there must be a further shifting of relief control to communities.

TROUBLE over the Saar plebiscite may be averted after all the alarm, for it is reported unofficially that Chancellor Hitler of Germany and Foreign Minister Pierre Laval of France have reached an accord providing that Germany will pay for French mining properties in the Saar if France abandons the effort to keep the region under the jurisdiction of the League of Nations.

Substance was given this report when Reichsfuehrer Hitler instructed all the Nazi propaganda forces in the Saar to cease their activities. He ordered that disturbances must be avoided and that the Nazis must rely largely on the press to keep the swastika flying in the disputed territory after the plebiscite. This would seem to insure an impartial vote on January 13.



Representative Carl Vinson

JAPAN, having given unofficial notice that she will withdraw from the Washington naval treaty, still seems to have hope that the United States and Great Britain will agree to give her naval parity. But just in case, she has now invited France and Italy to join her in denouncing the pact. Those nations may consent, but the two great Anglo-Saxon nations are as one in demanding that the 5-5-3 ratio be maintained. Representative Carl Vinson of Georgia, who is chairman of the house committee on naval affairs, has made plain the policy he will insist upon.

"I sincerely hope it will not be necessary to scrap the treaty," he said, "but it seems now we cannot hope very strongly for anything else. We cannot grant naval equality to Japan at any price. If the Tokyo government does insist upon wrecking the treaty I will insist that the house naval affairs committee and congress make enough money available to build five ships for each three laid down by Japan."

Japan, he said, had once agreed to be satisfied with three warships for each five built by the United States or Great Britain. "Officially and formally it said that was all it needed," Vinson said, "yet now it wants more."

AGAIN it may be said that if or when another European war breaks out, it will start among the southern nations. The blaze lighted by the assassinations of King Alexander and Louis Barthou in Marseilles is still smoldering. Jugoslavia's delegates in the League of Nations formally charged Hungary with complicity in the murder of the king, asserting she had harbored Balkan terrorists. Hungary demanded immediate action by the league's council on this accusation, declaring "the peace of the world" might be affected. The Hungarian note asked that the matter be placed on the agenda of the council's session called to meet on December 3 to discuss the forthcoming plebiscite in the Saar, so that Hungary might "defend its honor against proceedings which have no other purpose than to compromise the good name of the whole Hungarian nation."

The document then pointed out that the council, under Article IV of the covenant of the league, may deal with any question affecting the peace of the world.

It is, therefore, the duty of the council to face this question as soon as possible, it asserted, "and thus guard against the grave dangers which might arise from the situation that Hungary is still bound to bring to the attention of the council."

The Jugoslavian charges were supported by the other two states of the little entente, Czechoslovakia and Rumania.

Italy, which has stood by Hungary, was expected to refuse to grant extradition to France of Dr. Ante Pavelich, alleged leader of the gang that planned and carried out the assassination of King Alexander. The court of appeals at Turin denied the application of France, and it was believed the minister of justice would confirm this ruling.

Col. Jean Fabry

LEON ARCHIMBAUD, French reporter of the budget, declared before the chamber of deputies that it was undeniable that an understanding exists between France and Russia, and that the Soviet government had offered armed aid to France in case of a conflict with Germany. This caused great excitement and the French office contented itself with a denial that there was any military accord. The Russian offer was generally believed to have been made by Maxim Litvinov, Russian foreign commissar, last spring to the late Louis Barthou and again to his successor, Pierre Laval. Col. Jean Fabry, former French minister of war, gave support to Archimbaud's statement by asserting that France's knowledge of German rearmament, the details of German troops and information concerning the secret manufacture of arms and airplanes in the reich was supplied by Russia. The two men were arguing for a large war budget, and Archimbaud pictured Russia's huge military machine working with France as the only means of preserving peace in Europe.

DISPATCHES from Germany tell of serious unrest in the reich, and though the government calls them "malicious lies," it is a fact that the army and police forces are being held under emergency orders.

A long smoldering feud between the reichswehr (regular army) and the schutzstaffel (black shirt picked Nazi guards) was believed responsible for the orders, which involved suspension of Christmas furloughs for soldiers and military police.

Drilling of Nazi storm troops has increased, reports said, while all marriages of army men and police set for the Christmas holidays, popular wedding period for Germany's military men, have been postponed.

Baron Werner von Fritsch, chief of the reichswehr, in a memorandum to Hitler, said plainly in discussing Nazi suppressive methods that, unless a more liberal spirit prevailed, the government would face opposition from all sides in case of war. He told Hitler something must be done about the bad blood between the schutzstaffel and the reichswehr.

BOLIVIA'S troops in the Chaco were being soundly whipped by the Paraguayans and President Daniel Salamanca was blamed. He visited the war front and was arrested by Gen. Enrique Penaranda and forced to resign. Meantime Vice President Jose Sorzano had taken over the presidential powers by decree and installed a new cabinet. Penaranda appeared to be the virtual dictator and it seemed likely he would take steps to bring about peace with Paraguay.

GEN. LAZARO CARDENAS, who though only thirty-nine years old is a veteran of the Mexican revolution, was installed as president of Mexico on November 30. He is of Spanish and Tarascan Indian stock, a fine soldier and statesman and has held office under the revolutionary government for five years.

IN A trial lasting only a few minutes, Lord Ashley won a divorce from his wife, the former Sylvia Hawke, actress, and the costs, estimated at $10,000, were ordered paid by Douglas Fairbanks, who was named as co-respondent. Neither Lady Ashley nor the American film star made any defense, and there were but two witnesses, Lord Ashley and George Edwards, Fairbanks' secretary. A decree nisi was granted by Justice Sir Boyd Merriman, and it may be made final in six months.

INSPECTOR SAMUEL P. COWLEY and Agent Herman E. Hollis of the bureau of investigation, Department of Justice, engaged in a gun battle with Lester Gillis, better known as George ("Baby Face") Nelson, Public Enemy No. 1, and a companion, near Barrington, Ill., and both the federal men were shot to death by machine guns in the hands of the bandits. The killers, accompanied by a woman, escaped for the time being in the agents' car, their own being disabled.

Next day Nelson's body was found miles away, in Niles Center, at the entrance to a cemetery. He had died of nine bullet wounds from the guns of the federal agents he killed and evidently his body had been left at the roadside after his companions had failed to save his life. In the same region were found Nelson's clothing and the car the bandits had fled in after the battle.

Cowley was the man who killed John Dillinger, chief of the gang to which Nelson belonged, and he also was in command of the posse that ran down and killed "Pretty Boy" Floyd in an Indiana cornfield not long ago.

THANKSGIVING day in America was wedding day in London for the duke of Kent, fourth son of the king and queen of England, and Princess Marina of Greece. The metropolis swarmed with royalty and nobility from many lands, and vast throngs of ordinary persons watched the parade to Westminster Abbey, where the marriage ceremony was performed. The ancient church was filled with the fortunate ones who had been invited and the scene was glittering. The only Americans present were United States Ambassador and Mrs. Robert W. Bingham.

The ceremony in the abbey was celebrated at 11 o'clock in the morning, and it was followed immediately by another, the Greek Orthodox. The latter took place in the private chapel of Buckingham palace and was celebrated by Archbishop Germanos, archimandrite of the Greek church in London. Only a select company of royal witnesses was present.

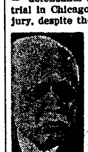
REPORTS of various business groups indicate that "luxury spending" is becoming more noticeable and is aiding industry considerably. This includes everything from the baby's doll to the palatial yacht—and some place in between is fine furs—and all trade organizations report an increase. Reports to Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper by business leaders indicated that sales in some gift lines this year would be 40 per cent greater than a year ago.

Charity is not forgotten in this revival of spending. Community chests and councils reported that contributions to community chest drives this year already are within 10 per cent of the 1929 total, and national income has dropped about 50 per cent in that time.

TAKE it from the Department of Agriculture that American farmers have these reasons to be thankful this year:

Cash farm income from sales of crops and live stock, AAA benefit payments, and emergency drouth sales of cattle to the government totaled $736,000,000 in October, compared with $659,000,000 in September and $620,000,000 in October, 1933.

Total farm cash income for ten months this year was $5,045,000,000 compared to $4,099,000,000 for the corresponding period last year, of which $4,614,000,000 was derived from marketings and $433,000,000 from benefit payments and emergency cattle sales, compared to $3,907,000,000 and $132,000,000, respectively, in 1933.



Samuel Insull

SAMUEL INSULL and his sixteen codefendants in the great mail fraud trial in Chicago were acquitted by the jury, despite the long work of the government officials in preparing and presenting the case at an estimated cost of $100,000. The verdict was reached on the third ballot, and the attorneys for the prosecution could say only that they had done their best. It was apparent that the jurors were not convinced that Insull and his aides had an intent to defraud. There are other charges standing against Insull, but whether or not there will be further prosecution is undecided.

There were rumors that the former magnate, if cleared of all charges, planned to re-enter La Salle street and the utilities field.

THERE is bound to be another hot fight in the senate over the revamped St. Lawrence waterway treaty, but it looks now as if President Roosevelt were justified in his expectation that the treaty will be ratified. Senator James Hamilton Lewis of Illinois, leader of the opposition that defeated the pact in the last session, said in Washington that he had heard rumors that some major provisions involved in the controversy had been eliminated in a new treaty with Canada that is being negotiated. The omitted provisions, he understood, have to do with the American share of the cost of the seaway and limitations on the diversion of water from Lake Michigan for the Chicago drainage canal. He added rumor also had it that the new pact would acknowledge complete American sovereignty over Lake Michigan.

The St. Lawrence treaty was one of the live topics discussed in the annual convention of the Mississippi Valley association in St. Louis.

The association voted to continue its opposition to the treaty unless its objectionable features are removed.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Glencoe—The new parochial school of the First Evangelical Lutheran parish here, erected at a cost of more than $12,000, was dedicated.

New Market—Three armed men kidnaped the cashier and robbed the New Market State Bank of $1,000. The cashier was released later.

Stillwater—More than 250 youths attended the annual Older Boys Conference here, with delegates coming from southern Minnesota and western Wisconsin.

St. Paul—Every county in Minnesota is now accredited as a bovine tuberculosis-free county, Dr. C. E. Cotton, live-stock sanitary commissioner, announced.

Litchfield—The foundations of the new postoffice building here has been completed and work started on the first floor. The construction will continue through the winter.

Minneapolis—Glen Seidel, quarterback on the Gopher football team this season, was named captain for 1935, succeeding Pug Lund. Bill Bevan, guard, was chosen alternate captain.

St. Cloud—Work on the proposed municipal incinerator plant to be erected here, with a large part of the plant to be built of St. Cloud granite, is expected to start soon, City Engineer R. E. Borrowman reports.

Mantorville—Bids received for the Mantorville brewery, the village's largest industry, were rejected by District Judge F. W. Senn as too low. More than $500,000 have been invested in the brewery in the last two years.

Rochester—Five hundred county and township officers from 12 southeastern Minnesota counties opposed inclusion of town and county roads in a state high system at a hearing before the state interim highway committee here.

St. James—Fire threatened to wipe out the entire business district here but was confined to one block, by the heroic work of the local fire department assisted by those from Fairmont, Madelia and Mankato. Damage was estimated at $200,000.

Tracy—Robert Marshall is driving his third homemade motor vehicle, a car powdered with a washing machine motor, and capable of 25 miles an hour. The car boasts a streamlined body, small pneumatic tires and knee action on all wheels.

St. James—Liquor flowed freely in St. James as Sheriff J. C. Bermel poured the huge supply he had confiscated during 16 years in office down a sewer, in order to make room for an office for the Watonwan county emergency relief administration.

St. Paul—Minnesota led 18 reporting states in purchase of federal migratory-bird hunting stamps for the current season, the bureau of biological survey announced. Nimrods purchased 32,433 of the 182,407 stamps reported sold to date to lead Wisconsin, its nearest rival, by about 3000 stamps.

Tyler—The electric plant here, municipally owned, has operated at a good profit during the last year and the village council has decided that there shall be no charge made for electricity used in residences during November. This will amount to about a 10 per cent discount in the electric bills covering the year's period.

Northfield—Professor James Robert Gillette of Carleton College, composer of symphony band music, directed the Carleton Symphony band of 57 pieces when it opened its 12th annual concert tour in the Roosevelt high school auditorium at Des Moines. The concert was the first of 19 engagements which will take the band through six states.

St. Cloud—The new A. G. Whitney memorial airport will be completed soon. A huge 15-plane hangar, built entirely of steel and St. Cloud granite, will be erected as soon as the present installation of boundary, hazard and beacon lights, and seeding of the graded runways is finished. Officials here hope to establish direct airmail service in the near future.

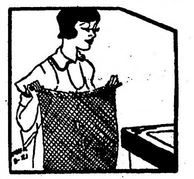
Minneapolis—The University of Minnesota football team won undisputed title of the Big Ten when they crushed Wisconsin 34 to 0 in the season's final game. Mixing strategy with power the Gophers ran up 214 points in the eight games played to their opponents 38. Hailed as the nation's best team, Bierman's eleven won the undisputed title of the Big Ten for the first time since 1911.

Little Falls—Construction of a $180,000 addition to the high school, will provide employment for all persons on relief rolls here this winter, FERA officials announced. Start of work waits only approval of plans and specifications. Relief funds, and a $3,000 Little Falls bond issue, will finance the work. In addition, Kelliher soon may start a city hall, costing $10,000, half paid by the municipality.

Fergus Falls—A baby mink whose curiosity led him to investigate the local business district wound up beneath a display window in a tire shop where he seems content to remain as a pet.

Madison—Completion of the $1,500,000 Lac Qui Parle flood control and water conservation project is assured with decision of SERA officials to take up options on land involved and to approve construction of the raised approaches of a bridge across Lac Qui Parle. The project will be financed with state and federal funds.

Housewife's Idea Box



An Economy

If you have lace or net curtains that are too torn to use as curtains, do not throw them away. Cut them into squares of the desired size. Stitch three or four layers together. Stitch across from corner to corner. These make excellent dish cloths and will wear as well as the bought knitted ones.

Putting It Neatly

When T. R. was President he had a habit, very annoying to some members of his cabinet, of suddenly phoning an invitation to breakfast. There were no gossipings or discussion of matters of state, the object apparently simply being to eat breakfast in the Presidential aura, and most officials seized every possible excuse to avoid them.

One morning the President called Elihu Root, who hemmed and hawed as he tried to think of a reasonable excuse.

"I understand you, Elihu," interrupted Mr. Roosevelt. "What you mean is that you'll come—if you have no subsequent engagement."

Hand in hand they went back to the academy, and the depression that nearly always settled upon Wilton's spirit when he entered the building pressed down like a black cloud—but a cloud whose heart was fire. They went into the great hall and Berenice paused beneath her father's painting.

"Here's my real guardian. Go and get Gordon Haskell. I will tell him here."

But Winton did not have to go far. Haskell was coming up the steps from the basement; his unusually sleek hair mussed and tumbled, his eyes quite bloodshot. He stared steadily at his teacher of psychology.

"So this is the way you abuse my confidence—making love to your pupil, a girl not yet twenty!"

"I am twenty-eight," Wilton said. "Much nearer Miss Bracebridge's age than you are."

A welt of red showed in Haskell's face as if Wilton had actually struck him with a whip. "Oh, you scoundrel!" he muttered.

"Scoundrel? Haskell, you forget yourself! What is wrong in love that is open and honest? Since you are Miss Bracebridge's guardian, I am telling you that we intend to be married some day; with your consent, of course, if we can get it—without it if we can't!"

"Defiance! Open defiance! I will pay you your quarter's salary and you can go! Never come back! If you attempt to write to Miss Bracebridge or to see her, I'll take legal steps to prevent you—that's all."

"Gordon Haskell—you are wicked! wicked!" Berenice's white face and blazing eyes transformed her for the moment into an accusing angel. "If you think I'll give up Wilton Payne for a thousand guardians, you do not know me!"

"You've only known this man for a few weeks."

"No matter. Now you are not to turn him out of this place. He is a gentleman, a scholar, a man of honor. He pleaded with me to tell you at once—and came to do it—and this is your greeting."

"You need not go until Monday," Haskell muttered; "but then you must."

"I certainly shall go—and, I warn you, I shall also continue to see Miss Bracebridge; I am not penniless. Before I engaged to teach here a death in my family put me in possession of enough at least to keep me from depending wholly on my profession."

Haskell changed countenance. "Oh, well, it's not my intention to turn you off without a quarter's payment."

"I shall certainly take it. I could force you to keep me here as well, but I shan't."

Haskell shrugged his shoulders and walked away.

Berenice stole to Payne's side. "Wilton, we must get his consent. I'd go anywhere with you—share any poverty!"

"We'll wait for each other."

"Where will you go?"

"I'll ask Jerry to take me in—and those of my pupils who want to finish this quarter with me—can—with no more obligation to me than they had before."

"I am afraid—he will make it very hard for you."

"I'm glad I had nothing in my hand. I believe I would have used it on him. I can quite understand now why your brothers and sisters did not like him."

"Kiss me quite openly under my father's picture. I know he's blessing us."

They kissed. The great house was shrouded in silence! Wilton thought what a blessing if the footsteps of Haskell and Balder would die out from these walls forever, and the place be restored to a lost innocence and peace.

"Who's that playing the old piano?" Berenice asked.

"I don't hear anything."

"Listen."

He did hear then the far-off melody of a Chopin prelude. "Maybe it's Janet. I think she plays!"

"Oh, my dear—what shall I do in this great place without you?"

"I'll stay near by. I can work and study; and plan for the future. Life is all ours."

He told Janet and Arthur that evening. The two were in dismay. "Let us all leave," Arthur exclaimed. "Let's clear out and leave the brute and take Berenice with us."

"What good would that do, Arthur?" Janet remonstrated. "It would only make matters worse! No, I think we must stay and help her in another way."

"You're right, Janet," Wilton said. "I want to get to the root of the trouble here, and maybe I can get to the root much quicker from the outside."

Arthur looked earnestly at him. "You'll never have a finer field for psychological research. What do you think Haskell's game is?"

"He wants Berenice's money, I'm sure—but I think he's fond of her, too. He puzzles her, but she has never been actively antagonistic to him, as were the four other children. You generally love what you protect, and as her guardian I suppose his affection and his sense of power increased together."

On Sunday he called at Jerry Moore's and was able to make satisfactory arrangements with him. Wilton was to have a large bedroom opening out of the kitchen, and provided with a desk and a stove. "It will be good to have ye," Jerry commented. "He turned you out for courtin', eh? Well, I think Berenice done right to take ye—if you ask me!"

Wilton did ask him many things. His parting from Berenice had been ardent, sorrowful, defeated and determined! She had promised him that with Mrs. Denver or Janet for a companion she would make her usual visits to Jerry. Wilton consoled himself by talking of her with the old farmer, whose admiration of Berenice was as great as his own. He spoke one night of the Christmas tree. Jerry took out his pipe and stared at him.

"That ain't around yet?"

"Not now—he's burned it."

"Balder always did act queer about that tree. He lied to you when he said he saw it floated down. He brought it down himself on old White Star's back. White was a draught horse they used to have. After the funeral Mrs. Bracebridge sent Jerry up to fetch down the tent and other things. The tree had an American flag on to it, so Balder—I was helpin' him—he says, 'I'll take down the hull business. They'll want the stand mebbe.' Why for he didn't burn it I don't know—but Balder's a half-witted loon any way you take him."

Wilton thought the description accurate.

Apart from his separation from Berenice he rather relished his change of surroundings. The stark simplicities of life were always congenial to him; and the plain old farmhouse, the silence of the great hills, the bright procession of the winter days—it was an open and friendly winter—all combined to content him. Arthur he saw almost every day, Berenice every week at least; when Janet could not come with her Mrs. Denver did. The little housekeeper was no more reassured than she had been on the day of her arrival; the pupils were falling off, she said; the story of Wilton's dismissal had gotten about and he had many sympathizers.

"When the last pupil goes, I'm going," she announced one day.

"I shall be the last pupil," Berenice said. "You'll wait for me, Mrs. Denver."

They left the housekeeper and Jerry talking on the subject of fruit preserving and went out into the cold for their own conference, more important to them than the plans of the Olympians.

"Why did you say you would be the last pupil, dear?" Wilton asked her.

"Because I know that many of them are not coming back after the Christmas holidays; there are rumors about, since Sally Welford's story of seeing my brothers and sisters—rumors that harm might come to people in the academy. Now, isn't that foolish?"

"No, I don't think it is!"

"I mean actual physical harm, not queer feelings and fear."

"I was always afraid of it. It's like a hidden ferment that may break out some day in a catastrophe. Has your guardian mentioned me in any way?"

"Yes; he says you will have to leave the neighborhood after Christmas!"

"By whose authority?"

"Dear, why not move as far as Onteaga. Mrs. Denver could go down with me there on shopping trips—and we could meet."

"I'll not leave you, Berenice! I'll not leave Lostland," he answered stubbornly.

"But he has threatened to stop my coming to Jerry's. He keeps the front gates locked now, and the way around by the lake is farther."

"Then we must write, when we can't meet."

"He looks over the mailbag every day."

"How about our own post—one of nature's providing? Here's a box ready—" he pointed to a squirrel hole in an old oak near by. "We can leave notes there—and if you can't get this far, Arthur will bring them himself, I know!"

"Wilton, we'll do that! My guardian has such an uncertain temper, one never knows what the next mood will be."

"I hope Arthur and Janet tread lightly in that debatable ground."

"They do, indeed. Janet and I are continually together. We watch the shadows as if they were alive. We sit by the fire and wonder when the wind will die. Mother Martha never leaves the top of the house now—but I have to watch her, for she creeps up and down the corridor. Once I heard her call out, 'I'm coming, Althea. I'm coming, my lamb.'"

"Keep close to Janet."

"I have to sit with my guardian sometimes—he seems so unhappy. I found him one day with his head buried in his hands, and when I asked him if he were in pain, he answered quite savagely: 'I'll make a bonfire of the whole place some day; it's been a torment and an agony ever since I set foot in it. I've been bound to the wheel of your family, the whole horrible tragedy descended on me.' I told him I would release him from his guardianship at once if he wished; then he accused me of being in league with you against him. 'You two are spying on me! I never wanted to bring these teachers here—but you forced my hand, as usual.'

"I saw there was no use, Wilton. I left him to his dark fancies. He doesn't even take any classes now—says the sooner the whole farce is done the better. I dread Christmas!"

Cousin Sarah's Visit

By Katherine Edelman

"OF ALL the times that Cousin Sarah could choose to come!" Florence Gordon cried, as she crushed the telegram and threw it to the floor. "Could anything be more upsetting—more annoying?"

A few minutes before her heart had been singing with the joy of Christmas. She had been filled with satisfaction and pride as she looked around the little bungalow. Her Christmas decorations had turned it into a place of beauty; it seemed to radiate the very spirit of the season.

But now everything was spoiled! Cousin Sarah, the most eccentric and utterly impossible of all her relatives was coming to spend the holidays with her and Ted.

At any other time Florence wouldn't have minded so much, for in spite of Cousin Sarah's peculiarities, she really had a feeling of affection for the little old lady.

But, now she was overwhelmed by the thought of what the Andersons would think of her. Robert Anderson had charge of Ted's department, and was a big power in the company. During the past year, their only daughter had married and gone to live abroad—her husband had been given a three year appointment in Shanghai. Ted had made the suggestion that perhaps the couple were lonely and might enjoy spending Christmas with them. At first Florence would not agree: the thought of the rather pompous Mr. Anderson and his equally stiff-looking wife filled her with dismay.

Reluctantly she gave in to Ted's wishes. The invitation was extended, and to her surprise, readily accepted. Since, she had done everything possible to make the occasion a happy one. But now Cousin Sarah was coming to spoil all her plans!

As soon as Ted opened the door that evening, she rushed to him with the news.

"Well, what of it?" he answered carelessly. "One more won't make any difference."

"But—but, Ted, you know Cousin Sarah. There's no accounting for what she may say or do."

"I wouldn't let it worry me, honey. If the Andersons are the sensible people they ought to be, they surely won't mind an old lady acting up a little."

She Might Break Loose With Some Freakish Stunt.

But Florence continued worrying. Ted, being a man, couldn't understand, of course. He didn't stop to think that it might even hurt him in the office if something should happen.

Cousin Sarah arrived on Christmas eve, a queer looking figure, dressed in a rustling black silk gown of a cut and style long out of fashion. Florence's heart sank as she looked at her, but she tried to make her welcome sincere.

The Christmas dinner threatened to be the stiff, unenjoyable affair that Florence had feared from the first. Ted had no right to invite such people as the Andersons. It seemed impossible to get them to unbend, to act in the natural, happy way that all people should act, especially at Christmas. . . Florence felt miserable, for there was also Cousin Sarah to worry about: at any moment she might break loose with some freakish stunt.

Cousin Sarah did. It seemed as if the stiffness and formality around the table was too much for her. Never had Florence seen her act so ridiculous. What would the Andersons think?

Florence was soon to know. She watched them become as delightfully human as any folks could be. They were joining in Cousin Sarah's fun in a way that amazed her. And soon Grant Anderson was passing his plate for another helping of turkey, and Mrs. Anderson was praising everything in the most enthusiastic tones. . . . Cousin Sarah, whose visit Florence had dreaded so much, was turning a dull and uninteresting dinner into the very gayest kind of a party!

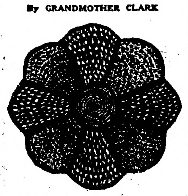
OUR SANTA CLAUS

THE American Santa Claus is a corruption of the Dutch Santa Nicolas, G. H. McHughes says: "Santa Claus, the name derived from St. Nicholas through the familiar use of children in Teutonic countries, crossed to America. The direct route followed by him is somewhat open to question. On the way he traded his gray horse for a reindeer and made changes in his appearance."

"DRESDEN PLATE" CROCHETED RUG

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



In Colonial days patchwork quilts and rag rugs were very popular. During the past 3 or 4 years patchwork quilts have been the leading item of interest for home art needleworkers. In 1933, when the crocheted rag rug in quilt design appeared, women all over the country took great interest in this new and beautiful way of making rag rugs. The old rugs were either round or oval, crocheted row after row until desired size was obtained. Changing of colors was the only variation. In quilt design rugs many beautiful combinations are possible and the work is really interesting.

Illustration above shows the "Dresden Plate" rug, named after the Dresden Plate or Friendship quilt, a pattern that every woman knows. This rug is another popular pattern, measures 34 inches and can be made from 40 oz. of Grandmother Clark's rag rug strips or 32 oz. of "Linkraft," the new woven material for rag rugs.

Send 15c to our Rug Department and get our book No. 24 showing 20 different crocheted rugs in quilt design in colors with illustrations.

Butcher Shop "De Luxe" Late Paris Innovation

Although the meat trade has taken advantage of many scientific inventions, butchers' shops still present a somewhat gruesome appearance. A Paris doctor has now taken the first step towards hygienic meat shops, and has opened one himself. He has proved that it is possible to market clean, germ-proof meat, free from any fear of infection. His salesmen are clad from head to foot in spotless white tunics, very much like those worn by surgeons. On their hands are antiseptic rubber gloves. The salesmen and meat are enclosed in a huge glass chamber in which the air, continually renewed and filtered is always at a temperature of 45 degrees F. No customers are allowed in, but they can see, distinctly, everything that is going on inside. They are furnished with complete price lists, and communicate with the men inside through microphones and loud-speakers. The owner is now collaborating with the inventor of a patent "skin." This is a liquid which, when applied over any article, forms a "skin" which prevents contamination from germs and foreign matter. It provides the second line of defense to the germ-proof paper bags in which the meat is packed.—Montreal Herald.

Illicit Drug Profits

The most profitable business in the world today is the handling of illicit narcotics. The manufacturer of heroin, for instance, makes it for $25 a pound and sells it to his distributors for $1,225, which is a profit of 4,800 per cent. The distributors in turn sell it in small quantities to consumers at the rate of $125,000 a pound, which is a profit for them of more than 10,000 per cent. The cost to the user consequently is one-half million per cent of the manufacturer's cost price.—Collier's Weekly.

Progress of Mankind Shown in Odd Manner

The faltering line of the forward progress of a man was recently brought out in sharp detail by the discovery of a village dating back 6,000 years. It is made more interesting by its proximity to the ancient Persian city, Persepolis. Riding to magnificent heights with the rise of the Persian empire the latter city with its beautiful marble buildings magnifies the ugliness of the streets of its ancient neighbor. Lying side by side they give a clear picture of the strides made by man over a 5,000-year period.

Very little, of course, is yet known of the recently discovered village. Persepolis, on the other hand, is quite well known. Beginning its existence about 2000 B. C., it reached its height about the Fourth century B. C., when Alexander the Great descended upon it and partly destroyed it. It did not end there, however, but lingered on until about 1000 A. D. Absorbing much of the splendor of the age the city shows the heights to which man at that time had risen.—Pathfinder Magazine.

No Mending at Home

Little Sadie, visiting a neighbor, was carefully watching the preparation of a chicken for the Sunday dinner. She quite approved of the procedure until the neighbor began sewing up the fowl; then, shaking her head, she declared: "Goodness me! we never have to mend our chickens like that."

Very soon cold weather will be with us. Cold mornings bring on cold motors and difficulty in starting the engine.

Truck drivers especially those using trucks without self-starters, are subject to this hazard.

Every year thousands and thousands of men receive broken arms when the crank handle hits them while cranking their vehicles. Here are a few points that will prevent these accidents:

1. Do not advance the spark too far.
2. Pull upward with short pulls.
3. Place thumb alongside of crank handle - - not over it.

It pays to be careful.

1935 Motor Tax Rate

As indicated by letters coming to the office of the secretary of state, people are vitaly concerned in respect to the rate of the motor vehicle registration tax. Much misunderstanding appears to be developing. Articles in the press have stated tnat Mr. Holm is recommending a gradual return to the old higher rate level.

"Such statements are presumptious," says Mr. Holm. "I am preparing my report to the legislature as prescribed by law, but until it is ready to hand to them I will not make any statement to any one as to what my reccommendations will be in regard to rates. Any one quoting me on that subject before that time will be basing his statements on creation of his own imagination."

The facts are that under the present law the rates go back to the old level beginning January 1. The legislature of 1933 provided for a reduction of the rates for passenger vehicles and farm trucks in amounts varying from 20 to 50 per cent, depending on the age of the vehicle. The reduction provided, however, was effctive only for two years, 1933 and 1934. The rates for passenger vehicles in 1935 therefore automatically return to the 1932 level of 2.4 percent of the base price.

The great volume of letters dealing with the subject coming to the office of the secretary of state, and articles appearing in the public press, indieate that the legislature will be called upon to give serious consideration to the question of rates again this year. Under existing law, however, the secretary of state has had no choice but to prepare the rate book for passenger vehicles on the basis of the rates in effect in 1932. These rates will prevail unless and until the legislature amends the law.

MERRY CHRISTMAS

WHAT two words on human tongue are more heart-warming than those! They not only represent a friendly greeting, but in them are summed up the whole spirit of the Yuletide—brightness and laughter, joy of living and joy of giving, health and happiness, peace on earth and good will to all men.

It is a greeting which we will hear often in this community of ours during these happy days of the Christmas season. We will hear it on our streets, in our stores, along our country roads and in our homes. For ours is a friendly community and nowhere is that friendly greeting more sincere. It is not possible, however, for each of us to say "Merry Christmas!" to everyone and thus complete the happy circle of Yuletide good cheer.

But there is one who has that rare privilege, one who has been a welcome visitor at the firesides of the homes in this community throughout the year and who now claims the right to be the first to wish you joy at this joyous time. That one is your Home Paper.

So your Home Paper carries from you to all the community and from all the community to you this friendly greeting:

MERRY CHRISTMAS!

Pioneer Laid To Rest

Funeral services were conducted from the Free Mission church on Monday afternoon for Reier Reierson Tildem's Haugen Jr., who passed away at his home here on Thursday evening, December 13th at 7:40 o'clock, after an illness that had kept him in bed most of the time for the past five months. Cancer being the direct cause of his death. Mr Reierson was horn in Vestre Sledre, Valders, Norway, on February 17, 1858. His parents were Marit Olson and Reier Reierson Tildem's Haugen Sr. He immigrated to this country in 1883 and settled near Ada, Minn., in Norman county where he farmed for six years. On November 16, 1884 he was united in marriage to Anna Gjorgina Anderson Sundet of Ada and they made their home on a farm there for five years before they moved to Holt.

Left to mourn his loss are his six daughters and one son: Mrs. Henry Bjerk, Strathcona, Mrs. Ludvig Munson, Mrs. John O. Johnson and Mrs. Walter Sandberg of Holt; Mrs. Andrew Ness of Thief River Falls and Mrs. Raymond Halvorson of Viking, and Selmer E. Reierson of Velva No. Dak., and sister, Mrs. Beret Hamerness in Norway, thirty-five grandchildren and twenty-three great grand children.

One infant son and two infant daughters and one grown up son, Reinhart who died in the Army camps in 1918, have preceeded him in death. Also Msr. Reierson, who passed away in 1929.

Mr. Reierson come to Marshall county on July 2, 1890 and settled on a farm in Excell township a mile and a half southeast of town here. There he spent fifteen years farming before moving to Holt where he started a general merchandise store which he opearated for twenty years. He retired from the store business in the spring of 1924. While in the store business he saw this country rise from a vacant wilderness and become one of the best farming communities in the county. He was one of the pioneers who liked to see everybody get a start and helped many to get going. He has these last years enjoyed the appreciation from many people here for what he did for them.

Mr. Reierson was a member of the Lutheran church and also an active member of the Free Missisn church the past few years.

Rev. Thv. Myhrer of Newfolden spoke the funeral sermon. The honorary pallbearers were Paul Olson, Chas. Heinze, C. O. Saastad, O. C. Brenna, Aslok Langlie and Edwin Erickson.

The active pallbearers were his six son-in-laws, Andrew Ness, Ludvig Monson, John O. Johnson, Raymond Halvorson and Walter Sandberg. Henry Bjerk was unable to be present so his place was filled by Johnny Nelson, grand-son-in law.

A very large crowd of friends and relatives from out of town were here to pay their last respects to the aged pioneer.

Interment was made in the Holt cemetery and Carlson Funeral Service had charge of the arrangements.

Card of Thanks

We wish to express our thanks and appreciation to our relatives and friends, who so kindly and willingly rendered help during the last illness and death of our beloved father.

Especially do we wish to thank Rev. Myhrer for his visits and comforting words, the quartette for the beautiful songs and also for the memory wreath and flowers.

To Make "No Passing" Zones

In a new effort to reduce accidents on sharp curves, bad hills and other places of unusual hazard, the state highway department will soon establish "no passing" zones on trunk highways.

Such danger zones will be indicated by a double center stripe in the middle of the highway, as contrasted with the single center stripe in general ues. Signs at the roadsid will carry the "no passieg" message.

Engineers are now making a survey of locations on the main routes where passing restrictions are needed. In general, such locations will be on approaches to the crest of a hill where the clear view ahead is less than 500 feet, and on all curves with a radius less than 900 feet or where the clear view ahead is less than 500 feet.

At places of extreme hazard, special reflector button markers may be placed between the double center lines to emphasize the danger at night.

Many head on collisions result from cars attempting to pass others while the drivers cannot see far enough ahead to insure safety.

Nearly 40 million pounds of sand and cinders and many tons of calcium chloride will be used by the state highway department this winter on slippery roads. Supplies have been kept in stock piles since fall, and are drawn on as occasion demands.

Say folks! There is going to be a big show and dance here on Tuesday evening, December 22. Take in this show. Mr. Davidson is giving good pictures here.

Merry Christmas

And we thank you for your patronage during the past year

Davis Warns Japan Against Scrapping Naval Treaty—Peaceful Agreement for Saar Plebiscite—Moley and Richberg to Industrialists.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© by Western Newspaper Union.

NORMAN H. DAVIS, American ambassador-at-large and our chief representative in the naval limitation conversations that have been going on in London, has given plain warning to Japan that if that nation insists on scrapping the Washington naval treaty, security will be endangered, suspicion created and the world forced into a costly naval construction race. Mr. Davis was addressing the American Correspondents' association in London, but his words were meant for all the world to hear, and as his speech was the first comprehensive statement of the American position since the opening of the conversations, it was regarded as of the greatest importance. He also announced, for the first time, that President Roosevelt has proposed "a substantial all-around reduction in naval armaments."

N. H. Davis

Mr. Davis said that, since no agreement for armament reduction has been reached, the United States advocates the continuance of the Washington and London treaties with their assurance of "equality of security." Asserting that the Washington pact put an end to a ruinous naval race and established "a sound basis for peace in the Pacific and the Far East," he continued:

"Only by maintenance of the system of equality of security, with proportionate reductions downward of naval strength if possible, can there be maintained the substantial foundation for security and peace which has thus been laid.

"Abandonment now of the principles involved would lead to conditions of insecurity, of international suspicion, and of costly competition, with no real advantage to any nation."

Unofficially, it is said that when Japan gives formal notice that she is denouncing the Washington treaty, probably on December 20, the United States will immediately withdraw from the discussions in London. Officials in Washington consider that to continue the conversations would be tantamount to acquiescence to Japan's demand for modification of the ratios on which the treaty is based.

No more than any other nation does the United States wish to see the revival of the race in naval construction, but the government will not tolerate the decline of our navy to a subordinate place. Recent utterances of cabinet members and of congressmen who especially have to do with naval affairs make this plain.

In his annual report to the President, Secretary of the Navy Swanson says that although the United States may reduce its naval strength proportionately with other powers, it is imperative that a navy second to none be maintained. He warns also of the dangerous shortage of personnel in the navy, saying that "ships are valueless unless manned by adequate crews of trained, experienced officers and men."

THE government of Jugoslavia has decided to expel all the 27,000 Hungarians now living in that country. The process will be gradual but relentless. Already more than 2,000 have been deported and more are being sent away daily. Hungary called the action of Jugoslavia to the attention of the League of Nations.

PEACEFUL solution of the Saar plebiscite problem seemed assured when the council of the League of Nations unanimously and gladly adopted the report of the Saar committee embodying the Franco-German agreement for payment for the mines in case the region votes to return to the reich. Leading up to this settlement were two announcements of utmost importance. First, Foreign Minister Pierre Laval of France promised that French troops would make no attempt to enter the Saar territory before or during the vote on January 13. "I desire to announce," said he "that France will not participate in any international force which it may be found necessary to send into the Saar. We cannot participate in such a force because Germany cannot participate."

Then Capt. Anthony Eden, British lord privy seal, told the council that Great Britain would contribute troops to the proposed international force, provided Chancellor Hitler of Germany were willing that such an army should be sent into the territory. When Berlin was informed of this, a foreign office spokesman announced that Hitler's government would raise no objections to the plan.

All this was in effect a victory for the policies of Col. Geoffrey G. Knox, the league commissioner of the Saar, for he has long advocated the creation of an international police force for the territory.

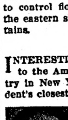
Delegates of Italy and Czechoslovakia declared their countries would send troops, and Maxim Litvinov, Soviet foreign commissar, said he believed Russia would be willing to supply a part of the league force

DISPATCHES from Warsaw said the Poles were amazed and alarmed by the Franco-German agreement because they feared the understanding between those two nations would be extended to include Great Britain and Italy. The foreign office hinted that in that case Poland's relations with Russia might be made closer. Poland resents being left out in the cold, for she is determined to be recognized as one of the great powers, and to play her part in the stabilization of peace in Europe.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT returned from Warm Springs to his reconditioned executive offices in Washington with the greater part of his winter program completed. It will be presented to congress in his annual message on January 3. The major items have to do with expansion of the public works administration to provide work relief, revision of the NRA and the AAA, extension of power developments, social security insurance and low cost housing, and the paring down of the budget.

MEMBERS of the Mid-Continent Reclamation association, representing 19 states, met in Chicago and perfected plans for a soil erosion and flood control program, to cost $900,000,000, which the association will recommend to the federal government with a request for a survey to determine its practicability. The plan, which was developed by A. B. Hulit of Chicago, involves the construction of canals and dams over an area extending from northern North Dakota through Texas to control flood waters originating on the eastern slopes of the Rocky mountains.

INTERESTING statements were made to the American Congress of Industry in New York by two of the President's closest advisers, Raymond Moley and Donald Richberg, director of the national emergency council. Professor Moley declared there is no workable substitute for the present capitalistic economic system. "Basically," he said, "the New Deal was an effort to save capitalism and, by spreading the range of opportunity under it, to enable the average man to regain a measure of control over the conditions under which he lived. It seemed to me in 1933, as it seems to me now, that this effort to save capitalism was wise and just.



Donald Richberg

"By no stretch of the imagination could the vote of November, 1932, have been interpreted as a mandate for the abandonment of the capitalistic system. Finally, even had there been such a mandate, there was and is no workable substitute for our present system."

Moley expressed much optimism regarding business. He told the industrialists, in effect, that they need have no fear of any radical change in the present economic and social order, that industry was needed to stimulate trade, bring about recovery, and that in the last analysis it would be the business men who would distribute the wealth of the nation.

Mr. Richberg admitted the NRA had not achieved all its aims in its effort to bring about industrial self-government, but insisted that its fundamental principles must be preserved in permanent legislation for codes of fair competition.

He warned the manufacturers that the permanent law must be written in co-operation with labor and consumers, as well as private business and government, so that there should be neither work-consumer regimentation by business nor business regimentation by government.

He hinted that if employers consented to legal restriction in return for increased power under the codes, organized labor would be called upon to do likewise in submitting to legislative control.

Organized labor was soundly berated by C. L. Bardo, president of the National Association of Manufacturers. He said its contribution to national recovery had been "the most widespread inauguration of strikes, coercion, intimidation, and violence that the United States has ever seen, as evidenced by strikes in Minneapolis, Cleveland, textile industries, and the general strike at San Francisco."

Bardo pledged the united opposition of the National Association of Manufacturers to the efforts of the American Federation of Labor to obtain through congress legislation imposing a 30-hour week on industry, or any other effort to "fix a rigid and arbitrary work week for all industry."

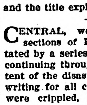
Industry's platform for recovery, which was proposed at a meeting of the national industrial council, urging return to the gold standard, a balanced budget, and other orthodox economic measures, was adopted.

LORD RIDDELL, who during the World war was Lloyd George's chief liaison officer with the press of the world, is dead in London. He gained fame and great wealth as a newspaper publisher. As a reward for his war work Riddell was made a peer in 1918. His voice over the telephone carried the first news to England of the signing of the Versailles treaty. For some time after the war he continued to be a friend and confidant of Lloyd George. Later there were political differences, but while the close liaison ceased the two men never ceased to be friends. Lord Riddell leaves no heir and the title expires with him.

CENTRAL, western and northern sections of Honduras were devastated by a series of earthquake shocks continuing through two days. The extent of the disaster is unknown at this writing for all communication systems were crippled, but it was reported that at least three towns of considerable size, Copas, Cabanas and Santa Rita, were nearly destroyed.

PRESIDENT MUSTAPHA KEMAL of Turkey has become the idol of all the women of his nation, for, after giving them such social rights as emancipation from the harem, he has given them political rights. At his instance the national assembly unanimously decided that any Turkish woman more than thirty years old is eligible to election to the chamber of deputies, and that all women over twenty-two years of age can vote in the national elections. Thousands of women telegraphed their "deepest gratitude" to Kemal.

SERGEI KIROV, one of the most prominent members of the Russian Communist party's political bureau, was assassinated in Leningrad, and as he was a close associate of Stalin his death was the occasion of public mourning. The government announced that the assassin was Leonid Nicolieff and that he "was sent by the enemies of the working class." But it appears there is something more to the event than a mere murder. A dispatch from Warsaw said ten Red army officers had been executed as the result of a plot to assassinate all Soviet leaders at the same time.



Sergei Kirov

The Moscow government denied this story, but at the same time it was putting under arrest scores of White Guards, enemies of the Soviet regime, accusing them of "terroristic action." They were tried by a military collegium of the Supreme court and sixty-six of them, including one woman, were found guilty and immediately executed.

The names of those executed were officially announced. Among them apparently were none of the leaders who had figured prominently with the White armies during the civil warfare following the Bolshevist revolution. Nor were there any names of men who have had national prominence subsequently in Russia.

The executions were carried out while Kirov's body was being cremated. He was given a state funeral and his ashes were placed in the Communists' Valhalla beside the wall of the Kremlin where rest the remains of Lenin, John Reed and other heroes of the Red revolution.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S aviation commission, having concluded its hearings on national defense began drafting its report, and it was authoritatively said in Washington that, if congress approves of its recommendations, government airships will surely be operating in a new transoceanic service. Details were being worked out, and it seemed likely the commission would adopt the $17,000,000 plan approved by Ewing Y. Mitchell, assistant secretary of commerce, and the national advisory committee for aeronautics. That plan calls for two huge Zeppelin type airships and one smaller metal clad craft along with necessary modern landing equipment.

The commission also will ask congress in its February report to create a permanent federal agency with supervisory control over all civil aviation. This would comprise five to seven members.

BUSINESS leaders of the country who are members of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States demand a reform of the government's budgetary methods. Through a referendum they have given approval to thirteen proposals to this end.

One step recommended was "a more active centralized administrative control of expenditures." This would be obtained by "broadening the executive allotment system of funds so as to include all expenditures, ordinary and emergency, and strengthening it so as to avoid the necessity of deficiency appropriations."

This recommendation for broader control by the administrative branch of the government also suggested that "when feasible" expenditures be reduced below appropriations.

IN LINE with this budget "revolt" is the opposition the business men are demonstrating to the ten billion dollar work relief program proposed to the President by his brain trust advisers.

As outlined by Secretary of the Interior Ickes and Relief Administrator Hopkins this is an undertaking to terminate federal direct relief and put all able bodied unemployed persons at work on government financed projects, while the states continue to afford relief to those persons not able to work

MINNESOTA NEWS

Duluth—The men who cut Christmas trees are having a hard time of it this year on account of the heavy snow.

Austin—Fourteen contractors entered bids here for construction of 44 homes in federal subsistence homestead project here.

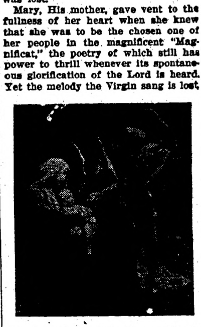
Music at Christmas Time

By Alice Eversman

THE first Christmas night was God's special benediction on music. By His divine sanction it was the means of proclaiming the advent of a hope and happiness hitherto not considered ordained for humanity. On the night when the Christ child was born, heavenly singers were sent forth and the music of celestial choirs was heard for the first time by human ears. The melody of that glorious hymn came and passed into the harmony of the spheres beyond our ken and only the message of peace was handed down to the generations to come. How different the destiny of music had the pattern of celestial harmony and the melody the angels song been preserved for us. It was left for man to find within himself the heavenly music.

No event in the history of the world has set vibrating the finest chords of music in the hearts of the gifted ones equal to the festival of the birth of the Christ child. The supernatural messengers announcing His coming, the loveliness of character of His mother, the heavens themselves exulting at His birth are subjects which to contemplate but a moment awakens music in the heart and forms a song in the stillness thereof that is the echo of that song that rang through the universe that starry night 2,000 years ago. Yet the melody the angels sang was lost.

Mary, His mother, gave vent to the fullness of her heart when she knew that she was to be the chosen one of her people in the magnificent "Magnificat," the poetry of which still has power to thrill whenever its spontaneous glorification of the Lord is heard. Yet the melody the Virgin sang is lost.



Tender Lullabys Were Crooned by the Young Mother.

The lullabys crooned by the young mother in the stillness of the moments when the divine child was lulled to sleep have had no listener who passed them on to an eager world. What could have been the burden of the intimate things of which the mother sang when the restless world was shut away and the two, closely entwined, communed together, with the knowledge of their destiny hovering about them. Did she sing Him tender baby songs that made no reference to His divinity or did she praise Him as her God and sing her fidelity as she held Him close and soothed His earthly weariness? Did she beg of Him to spare her the suffering she knew awaited them or did she encourage Him in tender human fashion to bear the terrible human agony foreordained for Him? The lullabies that soothed the sacred child were never heard by profane ears.

In the life of Christ there must have been much music. Descended from the greatest singer of all times, the psalmist David, and His advent into the world proclaimed by the singers from His heavenly home, there was a human and divine heritage of music woven into the scheme of His existence on earth. In the childhood years of the Lord, what were His childish pleasures, what were His childish songs? Was the soul of the young Saviour too sad for singing or did He fashion Himself songs from a heavenly source whispered by angels or did He sing the songs of His people heard on the lips of His companions? In the synagogue did He praise His Father after the manner of David and to the tune of the lute and was His sacred voice heard when He read from the scriptures. The songs the Saviour sang have vanished.

Yet the music of that sacred time is not lost, for it is born again in the hearts of the great composers. Bit by bit the melody that was heard the first Christmas night has come back to us distilled from the pens of the specially chosen, and who is there to say it is not akin to the music of the celestial choirs? The inexplicable urge of melody, the grandeur of musical thought, the loftiness of inspiration must surely be from the same source as was the music that was heard but once on earth.

It was not without intent that the message of peace was sent out on the "wings of song," for that is the power of music—to bring peace. Nor was it by chance that the melody came from the heavens, for ever the inward eyes of the soul turn heavenward under the influence of great earthly music. The radiance of the star shines in the heart under the touch of melody and the soul expands to a fuller comprehension of the promises for eternity.—Washington Star.

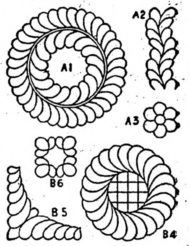
PERFORATED DESIGN FOR QUILT MAKERS

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



Quilt makers realize the beauty of a finished quilt depends upon the patches used, the beauty in the patchwork design, and, most important, the quilting. If the quilting design is not accurately reproduced on the material it is impossible to quilt neatly and clearly. Many quilts are never finished, because the worker has no pattern or means to transfer all the quilting lines accurately. There are several ways of transferring quilting patterns to cloth, but the most approved and successful method is stamping the design through a perforated pattern, with stamping powder. This is the simplest and most economical way, and produces results that make quilting interesting. Each stamping is the same, and perfect. These patterns are already perforated on bond paper, and good for many stampings. Each stitch is indicated on the lines of the design, and the stamping can can be brushed off when quilting is finished, leaving the work neat and clean.

Grandmother Clark's package No. 33A contains perforated patterns of the designs shown, also stamping powder and full directions how to use them. Sizes of patterns are as follows: A1 Feather Circle, 12 inch; A2 Feather Border, 3 inch; A3 Motif, 3½ inch; B4 Feather Circle, 9½ inch; B5 Feather Corner, 7 inch; B6 Feather Square, 4 inch.

If you want your quilting to look right, send 15 cents to our quilt department and receive all of these, Lot 33A six perforated patterns by mail postpaid.

Practical Idea

While the British road authorities have been road paving with cast iron, their neighbors across the channel have also been giving the subject serious attention. French engineers have seriously considered a proposal to build a cast-iron highway from Paris to Marseilles—500 miles away. They figure that about 3,000,000 tons of iron would be used—the total cost being 256,000,000 francs.

And herein lies one of the most unique yet sound arguments put up for this road, reports Mr. Davis. Those in favor say that in case of war, when the country is short of iron, these cast-iron block roads could be torn up and be converted into guns, trains, battleships and armament, while for a few years at least the concrete base alone would do for roads.—Milwaukee Journal.

CAP AND BELLS

IGNORANCE IS BLISS

At one golf course there had been some talk of standardizing tips to caddies, and one day the secretary explained his ideas to a group of members.

"We feel," he said, "that a caddie should not receive a tip of more than one shilling and sixpence per round. You'll agree that's reasonable."

They did agree, all except one Aberdonian, who, looking up with an expression of innocence, said, "Excuse me, Mr. Secretary, but what is a tip?"—Tid-Bits.

Sweeping

Full of enthusiasm, she had gone in for politics and was out of the house most of the day. The other night she returned at nine o'clock and sank into an armchair.

"Everything's grand," she said. "We're going to sweep the country."

Her husband looked around wearily and said: "Why not start with the dining room?"

JUST LIKE HOUSES

"Read a good one today—flappers are like houses, both shingled and painted."

"Good! And there're bats in the garrets of a good many of them, let me say."

Shipshape

"Are you going to assist in steering the ship of state?"

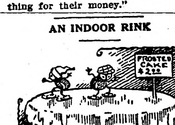
"I'll be ready to give a hand, if requested," said Senator Sorghum, "but all the ship of state seems to desire from me at present is to refrain from attempts at back-seat driving."

Value Received

"Politics causes a great deal of debate," said the plain citizen.

"Of course," answered Senator Sorghum. "There has to be a certain amount of brilliant oratory so as to make the campaign contributors feel that they're getting something for their money."

AN INDOOR RINK



"Come on, the skating's fine!"

The Merry Minstrels

"You know Joe, the great base runner who went lame?"

"Yes, I know Joe, the great base runner who went lame. What about Joe, the great base runner who went lame?"

"He got a job as an ump."

"How is he now?"

"Now he's going blind."

Speed Regulation

"Has Crimson Gulch any speed regulations?"

"Yes," answered Cactus Joe. "When a suspicious stranger looms up we warn him to keep goin' and get out of town as fast as possible."

Personal Viewpoint

"What are you going to do about the coming election?"

"Not much, I'm afraid," said Senator Sorghum. "The question in my mind is what the coming election is going to do about me."

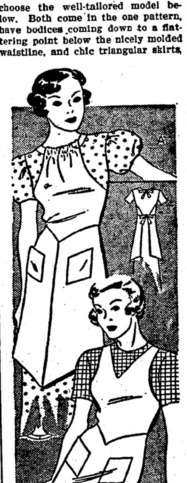
TWO CHIC APRONS IN ONE PATTERN

Pattern 9171

The young housewife who is tired of her stock of aprons will certainly perk up at the sight of the novel aprons sketched here. See the cunning halter neck which ties in the back. It's certainly a new and becoming idea in aprons. Or if you feel a little more conservative, choose the well-tailored model below. Both come in the one pattern, have bodices coming down to a flattering point below the nicely molded waistline, and chic triangular skirts, with conveniently large patch pockets. Both will give ample protection to your pretty house frocks.



Pattern 9171 may be ordered only in sizes small, medium and large. Apron A, small size, requires 1¾ yards 36 inch fabric; apron B, small size, requires 1⅝ yards 36 inch fabric.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

HOMESICK

"Shut that door! Where were you brought up—in a barn?"

The man addressed complied meekly and silently. The first speaker observed that he was in tears, and going over to the man, he apologized.

"Oh, come," he said, soothingly, "you shouldn't take it to heart because I asked if you were raised in a barn."

"That's it, that's it," sobbed the other. "I was brought up in a barn, and it makes me homesick every time I hear an ass bray."—Tit-Bits.

—21—

"Janet and Arthur are staying?"

"Yes, luckily."

He saw Arthur next day. The young men discussed the situation at the academy. "He hates you, Wilton, as I suppose a disappointed and by no means noble lover can hate his rival. Remember, this man had known Berenice all her life; you come in and sweep away his little air castle in a moment."

"Thank God!"

"Don't tempt fate! Leave this region—leave Berenice for a time. You can write to each other. He would not surely intercept your letters."

"Oh, wouldn't he!"

"Send them under cover to me."

"That's a good idea! If I ever need to do that."

"Take my advice and get out. I never yet went uninvited into a yard where there were bulldogs," Arthur said philosophically. "Balder's a mean, sulky fellow—and that's the best can be said of him. I think he would do anything for Haskell, though whether in a rage or devotion it's hard to tell."

"What harm could Balder do me?"

"Don't get in his way—that's all!"

After that the days became a waiting for Berenice in the farmhouse over which the blue-black clouds of winter were now driving. Wilton kept at bay his fears and doubts by as hard manual labor as Jerry was willing to let him do. Every day he went to the oak, and at last his hand closed on the promised letter. He shut himself in his bedroom to read it:

"Dear Wilton:

"I haven't written before because I have been nursing Mother Martha. She refused to go to bed, poor dear, and died very quietly in her chair this morning. The servants are very much afraid. Janet will move up to Mother Martha's room soon, and even Gordon Haskell approves of this. He is afraid I will be nervous, though how he could expect us to be very lively in that huge place I don't know. I have not mourned for dear Mother Martha. She was old and tired and wanted to go. Cook has her usual story—of her waking up in the night and seeing a boat with children in the moonlight—rowing Mother Martha. How can a place prosper under such a reign of superstition?"

Arthur, arriving later, told him the hour of the funeral, and the next day but one he watched the procession from a nearby hill winding a black course through the bleak air. Jerry had gone to be one of the mourners, and spent the rest of the day rather grandly in black, square-looking clothes. "The old place will breathe its last some time, just as Martha did," he said comfortably. "And, oh, Berenice asked me to give you this."

It was another little note, saying that she had gone down to see if the figures were safe, and to tend them a little as Mother Martha had.

". . . though I did it more in memory of her than to satisfy any feeling of my own—those poor symbols are nothing now! Maybe poor Mother Martha has found her charges in that other world. I like to think of them holding out their hands to her. The cook, of course, was dreaming and romancing—but it was a pretty idea—their rowing her across the lake. She went so quietly—almost as if some one had stopped at the door and beckoned her."

Wilton poured out his heart in a long letter—wondering at the inadequacy of words, their nimble, elusive ways of refusing to carry burdens of emotion. On his way to the oak he met Sally Welford, who had been to the funeral.

She nodded brightly to him. "You are still around these parts, Mr. Payne?"

"Yes, Sally. You left the academy of your own accord. But I didn't. You see, I am engaged to be married to Miss Bracebridge."

"So I've heard, sir. We're all glad. We wish it could be soon. He might as well give her up first as last."

"I agree with you."

She went on a few paces—turned back. "Mr. Wilton, I wouldn't stay up here too long."

"Why do you say that?"

"Oh—I feel trouble," she answered.

Wilton looked after her wonderingly until the dip of the hill hid her from his sight.

CHAPTER VIII

Janet and Arthur had announced their engagement to Berenice, but not to Gordon Haskell, suspecting him of having little sympathy with engagements between young and impecunious people. Mrs. Denver was also admitted to their confidence, and one dark December night the four gathered about the library and talked in whispers, though listeners could not be many. Only one servant remained in the kitchen—the others having yielded to their fears. Mrs. Denver welcomed her own additional duties as an outlet for her pent-up emotions. She had odd little disputes with Gordon over what she considered foolish things—the packing away of table linen, the ordering of certain things in abundance while others on the list were left out altogether.

To Arthur she confided her suspicions that Haskell was getting ready for some move which should make a radical change in their existence. "I believe he doesn't want the day scholars," she ventured her opinion. "I think he's just as glad they are dropped off. Then the heft of the winter is ahead of us, and many of those boys and girls couldn't come far through the snow anyway. I don't relish the thought of being beseiged through the long winter months. Do you think he means to murder us all?"

"He hasn't courage enough for that. The man is an arrant coward—afraid of his own shadow really—though he does bluster so! Cheer up, Mrs. Denver. There would always be a way of getting out of this place. Maybe he'll send us out as he did poor Wilton."

"Well, I hope it won't be at night—think of waiting at that station at Blade for the down train."

This night the four heard the splashing of heavy rollers against the rocks of the shore, and knew it portended storm. Haskell came to the door once. "There's a door slamming somewhere, Fleming," he said; "if there is anything I abhor it's a slamming door. Won't you go look for it?"

Arthur went obediently. Outside of his creaking room, to which he had never become accustomed, the old academy had lost most of its terrors for him. Upstairs and downstairs he went. In the corridor of the basement he saw Balder gazing through the glass peephole.

"Mr. Wilton, I Wouldn't Stay Up Here Too Long."

"Aren't you well enough acquainted with those figures?" Arthur queried.

Balder shambled off. "Now Mother Martha's gone," he muttered, "they might be forgotten."

"Can you locate that slamming door?"

"Yes, top floor—east wing—Mother Martha's—always did slam unless it was bolted."

Arthur went with this information to Haskell. "Lock your door when you come out," Haskell commanded Janet, who now occupied Mother Martha's room. Then he went on down into the basement. A single lamp lit the corridor, the dimness broken at one point by the red glow from the kitchen fire. From a dark recess Balder stepped suddenly in front of his master, and Haskell started violently.

"Why are you always hanging around? Go to your room; or go out to the barns. You are always under foot."

"I am—am I—well, you'll need old Balder again some day."

"What do you mean?"

"I want some money."

"I haven't any! This mad freak of Miss Bracebridge to revive the school has taken everything."

Balder grinned. "You can always get money, Boss, for Balder."

"Look here, what you do—is on your own responsibility."

"Always on my own responsibility. I'm tough. You're tender! A bit of a scholar, as they say—a white-handed scholar."

Haskell aimed a stinging blow at him; Balder dodged and waved a paw as if a mosquito had come after him. "You'll never get Wilton Payne out of this neighborhood. That man knows what he wants and means to have it. They have a regular rural free delivery. Miss Bracebridge sends her notes by Mr. Fleming; that old tree near the cross roads. You know her writing well—don't you? You've seen it often enough?"

"Of course I know her writing."

"Well! Can't you put two and two together?"

"You talk more, say less than any human being I know. Get out of here."

"I can keep a secret," Balder avowed suddenly.

"I am not so sure of that."

The man shuffled off down the corridor.

"There's only one way to get rid of that brute," Haskell muttered to himself. "Leave this great, rotting pile—and go out into the world! But I can't go without her—I can't. She's all that keeps me sane."

Insect Damage Is Fought in Winter

Stored Seed Grain Should Be Protected From All Bugs; Treat in Bins.

By C. H. Brannon, Extension Entomologist, North Carolina State College.—WNU Service.

Carbon disulphide or carbon tetrachloride may be used effectively to kill insects in stored grain this winter. A barrel or other container which can be made air tight will be suitable, then fasten two thicknesses of heavy wrapping paper on the barrel top. If the seed is heavily infested, a full cup of the disulphide or tetrachloride may be used.

After two or three days, examine the seed. If any insects are still alive, repeat the process. The seed should be kept in air tight containers, until ready to plant, or insects will reinfest it. When ready to plant, spread out on the floor and the gas will evaporate in a short time.

Storage bins may be used to treat seed in large quantities if the bins are fairly air tight. Twenty pounds of the disulphide will be enough for each 1,000 cubic feet of space in the bin. After pouring it on the seed, cover with sacks to help hold in the gas. The treatment should be applied in the middle of the day when the temperature is warmest.

Air slaked lime may also be used in treat grains for insects. In treating quantities of seed, equal parts of lime and seed may be used. For small amounts, the ratio of lime should be larger than that of the seed.

Drouth Corn Not Likely to Hurt Farm Live Stock

There is little danger of poisoning live stock by feeding drouth-damaged cornstalks if samples tested at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, are typical of corn throughout the country, says Dr. Robert Graham, chief in animal pathology and hygiene.

Innumerable inquiries have been received by the University of Illinois pathology laboratory relative to the possible poisonous properties of drouth corn, as well as sudan grass, and apparently many stockmen are afraid to feed either of these roughages.

Of the many samples of suspicious drouth corn that have been tested in the laboratory, not a single specimen has proved to be poisonous, Doctor Graham said. Although it is known that sorghum plants can develop fatal amounts of hydrocyanic acid under arrested growth, the danger in the case of corn seems to be rather doubtful.

The poisonous properties of sudan grass have also been recognized during certain stages of growth, but here again bona fide evidence of injury when fed to live stock was not obtained in one instance. An experimental horse was fed the grass for a period of three weeks without showing any ill effects.

Illness which may be mistaken for food poisoning is sometimes caused by too sudden change in rations, Doctor Graham points out.

Huge Wheat Crop in Canada

The 1934 wheat crop of Canada is officially estimated at 277,304,000 bushels. This is an increase of about 7,000,000 bushels over the unrevised estimate for 1933, but is considerably lower than the average for recent years. Previous to 1933 the smallest Canadian wheat crop in the last ten years was 304,520,000 bushels in 1929; the highest was over 566,000,000 in 1928. The low 1934 production is due mainly to unfavorable climatic conditions in large areas of the western provinces where most of Canada's wheat is grown. The average wheat yield an acre for all Canada in 1934 is placed at 11.6 bushels, compared with a long-time average of 17.1. The estimated production of other principal grains in Canada shows an increase over the previous year. Oats are up about 87,000,000 bushels, barley up about 5,440,000 bushels, rye up about 2,200,000 bushels, and flaxseed up about 460,000 bushels.

Save Soy Beans and Straw

Soy beans are likely to be a very good cash crop this year and next, and for this reason an effort should be made to thresh as many of the beans as possible. Although the acreage grown this year was about 50 per cent larger than was grown last year, the chances are that, on account of the drouth, more was cut for hay than was the intention at the time the seed was planted. In this connection, do not overlook the fact that soy bean straw is a comparatively nutritious forage—worth enough to make it profitable to save as much as possible. That there will be an exceedingly strong demand for soy bean seed next spring cannot be doubted, first for the reason that it is a most excellent crop to grow on land contracted to the government, and, second, that it is one of the very best crops to grow in chinch bug infested areas.—Wallaces' Farmer.

Damage by Meadow Mice

The common meadow mouse is a harmless looking little chap, but he is bad medicine for the farmer. A meadow mouse eats about 30 grams, or a little over an ounce of green food every day. That runs up to 23 pounds in a year. A hundred mice will stow away over a ton of green grass or clover in a twelvemonth. A hundred mice to an acre is not an unusual number in meadows favorable to their habits, while in "mouse years" the number has been estimated at thousands.

SEES CHEMICALS RAISED ON FARM OF THE FUTURE

One expert who believes that a "chemical revolution" soon is to bring about world-wide change is Dr. William J. Hale, research consultant of the Dow Chemical company. In his book, "The Farm Chemurgic," he gives significance to many relatively little-known processes for the industrial utilization of farm products recently developed by research chemists of the United States Department of Agriculture, Iowa State college and other governmental and industrial institutions. The book has received the indorsement of the Chemical foundation.

Doctor Hale believes that from the farms of the nation will come the raw materials of the chemical factories, instead of from mines, wells and other irreplaceable sources. Rather than produce food almost exclusively, as at present, the farm of the future must devote a major portion of its acres to the raising of crops from which can be made, by synthetic chemistry, the nation's clothing, its structural and building materials, its fuel and other necessities.

When that time comes, there no longer will be any need to worry about the falling income of the farm. There will be a scramble of city folk back to the soil. Profound changes in government, taxation systems and economic structures inevitably will result. The chemical revolution will make a new world as surely as the industrial revolution made the old.—Literary Digest.

Tires of "Seclusion"

At one of the busiest subway stations in downtown New York the change booth during daylight hours is in charge of a woman. She is middle-aged, but is animated by the spirit of inextinguishable youth. Of the many thousands who daily pass and repass her booth, hundreds know her by name, and for all she has a cheery word. Very evidently she likes her job.

She lives alone in a large cottage in a sparsely settled part of Westchester and commutes daily. "But isn't it very lonely for you there?" "Of course, it is, thank heaven," she answered. "After seeing all these thousands of people daily I crave loneliness. But after some 12 hours of it I'm eager to be on the job and see human beings again."—New Jersey Bulletin.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

The "go" sign does not always mean "go" regardless of circumstances. There are certain qualifications to these signals.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania recently declared that the "go" signals is not a command to the motorist but is a qualified permission to proceed lawfully and carefully in the direction indicated. "It does not mean" says the decision, "that the person receiving the signal may proceed without a care or thought as to the safety of those who may be in his path." Interpreted broadly, the decision means that motorists must drive carefully at all times, regardless of what the signal says. It means that pedestrians who have started across while the sign read "stop", have a right to continue, and the motorists must wait until they have passed and then proceed.

Do not rush the light. Take your time. The pedestrian has some rights.

School Notes

HOME RAMBLES

There has been a lot of pushmobiles in town the past week. That is you know the kind that it takes for one car to start the other.

Wednesday was the quietest day we have seen in Holt the past few months. We did not care to be out much so we could not expect others to be out when it was so cold.

The Weather

Saturday morning the weather decided to change from the warm fall weather that we have had here the past three months and let us have the real winter weather in full force with a real northwestern snowstorm and blizzard that threathened to tie up everything all at once. The wind quietened down on Sunduy and it was not so bad, but Monday itstiffened up again and since then it has been on the freezing order with the thermometer reading forty-two on Wednesday morning.

Given Wedding Reception

A wedding reception was given in the church basement of the Lutheran church on Fri- evening, December 14th for Mr. and Mrs. Edgor Wegge. The newlyweds received many beutiful and useful gifts from their friends and relatives. The evening was spent playing games after which a bounteous lunch was served.

Important Farm Census

Among the important Governmental activities undertaken primarily for the benefit of the farmer is the Census of Agriculture, which will be taken beginning January 2, 1935. The Fifteenth Decennial Census Act, approved June 18, 1929, directed the Census Bureau to make this farm enumeration in 1935. The reports will be for the calender year 1934.

The accuracy of the information procured will be directly reflected in the statistical work carried on in the farmers behalf. Intelligent business methods must be applied in the successful operation of farms in this day and age and these methods will fail unless farmers and farm organizations have accurate knowledge of actual conditions in various sections of the country. For example, it is useless to increase the production of any crop if the figures show there is overproductions of that crop. Every farmer and rancher should write immediately to the Bureau of the Census Washington, D. C., for one of the sample schedules so that they will have an opportunity to study the questions and be prepared to give full and accurate information when the enumerator calls at their home in January.

Mr. and Mrs. Jim Peterson called at the Gust Peterson home on Christmas Day.

Mud Lake Survey Is Ready

Final survey reports covering the Mud Lake migratory game sanctuary and reserve project which is scheduled to get under way early in 1935 were completed Friday and submitted by mail that evening to U. S. Senior Engineer McKinley at Minot N. Dak., according to I. E. Quist, of this city, who headed the survey during the past fall.

Condemnation proceedings to acquire 50,000 acres of land surrounding the Mud Lake area in Eastern Marshall county are expected to be under way at an early date, E. V. Willard, commissioner of conservation for Minnesota, announced last week. The state will condemn the lands after which the Federal government will refund the expenses incurred by the state.

The survey shows that 512,000 cubic yards of dirt will be moved in building dykes and dams necessary for impounding the water which, it is estimated, will cover at least 20,000 acres. The deepest part of the lake will be five feet, this deep point being in the Thief River valley, while the water in the old lake bottom will reach a depth of approximately three feet, said Mr. Quist.

Earthen dams and control works will be constructed in the Thief River and old Judicial Ditch No. 11 with which to help impound the water. Gates will also be constructed by which water may be let out in wet seasons.

A new highway will also be constructed by the government to take place of a section of SAR "E" which is now built across the old lake bottom. Construction work on this highway will start at the Thief River bridge east of Holt and along the south part of the lake project for a distance of seven miles, with the county completing the road of three additional miles to the Blue Grove. This will give a total of ten miles of construction.

The big dyke will start along County Ditch 35 in Section 10 in East Valley and will run diagonally to the middle of Section 14 and then angles along the west side of the old lake and continuing east bordering the section lines of 31, 32 and 33 in Mud Lake township.

With 20,000 acres under water in the new lake and an additional 30,000 acres subject to swamp marshy land, an ideal duck breeding ground is expected out of the project, which has been designated as Project NO. 1 of the U. S. Biological survey under the direction of J. N. "Ding" Darling. The land will be taken over under the Federal government sub-marginal land purchase program.

Since the surveys were started last summer, Mr. Quist has headed a group of from five to seven men making surveys and plans necessary before construction work can be started. Headquarters for the surveying crew have been maintained in Middle River.—Warren Sheaf.

A Winter Thrift Idea

SAVING money in winter is more difficult than in summer—fuel bills, light bills, druggist bills, winter coats. Consult your budget and you'll see. There is, however, an excellent way to cut down on the food budget, and have just as good food.

Have you watched the margin between canned and fresh food in summer and compared it to the winter margin? Fresh fruits and vegetables are often as cheap in mid-summer as canned vegetables, and if they are a bit more expensive we are tempted, anyway, by the first fresh peaches in the market, the first home-grown tomatoes, etc. Perhaps we indulge ourselves to some of the fresh luxuries on the market.

Cut down in winter, then, when these fresh foods, shipped in, are almost out of reach, by laying in a supply of canned foods—which, after all, are these same fresh home-grown fruits and vegetables put into cans when they are at their ripest and best.

A Good Suggestion

Make different dishes of them by combining two or more canned fruits or vegetables. Here is a suggestion:

Fruit Rice Parfait: Press out all the syrup from a No. 2 can of crushed pineapple, drain a No. 2 can of apricots and combine the syrups. Bring to boiling, add one-fourth cup rice, boil five minutes, then cook over boiling water until the rice is very tender and the liquid all absorbed. Add one-fourth cup sugar, the drained pineapple and the apricots pressed through a sieve. Chill thoroughly and just before serving fold in one cup of beaten cream. Pile lightly in glasses and garnish with a bit of preserved ginger. This serves eight persons.

Jobs To Help Farmers

Farmers in some twenty drought counties in Minnesota will be able to work out all or part of their government feed and hay loans this winter by helping the state highway department regravel state roads, according to a state highway department announcement.

In co-operation with the national Public Works Administration and the State Emergency Relief Administration, the highway department has developed a work relief program for the winter months which contemplates the regraveling of nearly 200 miles of roads.

It is estimated by the department that this program will provide about 200,000 team-hours for farmer's teams, an equal number of work hours for the teamsters, and probably 100,000 hand labor hours for men without teams. This is in addition to work to be done by small, locally owned trucks.

Part of the program also will provide work for relief labor where there are no government loans to be repaid. However, all the work will be in primary drought counties.

Team and hand labor methods will be employed to as great an extent as practicable.

The financing of this program will be handled through a PWA allotment of 30 per cent of labor and materials, the balance of the cost to be met by the SERA and the highway department.

Every effort is being made by the highway department to get work started the first week in January, it was said by N. W. Elsberg, highway commissioner.

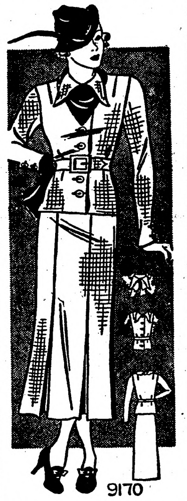
JAUNTY LOOK IN THIS TWO-PIECE MODISH DESIGN

PATTERN 9170

No wonder the young lady sketched here is so jaunty! With buttons up the blouse-front in a military manner, neat sleeves carrying out the button motif in their unusual cuffs, and a slenderizing paneled skirt—who wouldn't be in a high mood? The tabs at the neck are the latest idea in what a snappy neckline should be. So is the triangular scarf which slips underneath them and ties in a perky knot at the back. The small view shows a scarf and bow of ribbon. Make it up in ribbed or nubby wool and wear it with a Tyrolean felt hat. It's a high-spirited frock for a high-spirited girl—or woman.



Pattern 9170 may be ordered only in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, and 42. Size 16 requires 2¾ yards 54-inch fabric and ¾ yard 36-inch contrasting.

"Ain't got one, teacher."

"How many times have I told you not to say that? Listen: I haven't got one, you haven't got one, we haven't got one—"

"Well, who has all the pencils?"

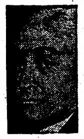
President Roosevelt Moves to Take the Profit Out of War—Wallace for Continued Federal Control of Agriculture.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© by Western Newspaper Union.

WHILE the senate committee headed by Senator Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota was still investigating munitions makers and their profits and methods, President Roosevelt named another committee charged with the duty of preparing legislation that would authorize the Chief Executive, in time of war, to assume absolute power over industrial profits, prices and wages and over the operations of all industries. Bernard M. Baruch, New York financier who was head of the war industries board, was made chairman of this committee, and Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, former head of the NRA, was selected as Mr. Baruch's assistant. Others on the committee are Secretaries Hull (state), Morgenthau (treasury), Dern (war), and Swanson (navy); Undersecretary of Agriculture Tugwell, acting for Secretary Wallace; Assistant Secretary of Labor McGrady, acting for Secretary Perkins; Assistant Secretary of the Navy Henry Latrobe Roosevelt; Rail Co-ordinator Eastman; Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff; and Foreign Trade Adviser George N. Peek.



Bernard M. Baruch

The President told newspaper men gathered at his press conference that "the time has come to take the profit out of war." He declared that not only the war profits of corporations would be under inspection but the wages of individuals as well. He pointed out the disparity between the soldier's pay of $1 a day and that of the munitions worker at $10 a day, and declared this unequal mobilization, as he called it, had led to the veterans' demands for a soldiers' and sailors' bonus.

Legislation will be asked of the new congress meeting in January, Mr. Roosevelt said. He added that he regarded the subject as one of the most important of any to be laid before congress.

The President insisted that his move at this time was not prompted by any threat of war. The war horizon, he said, is cloudless. Neither should the proposal be considered one for war preparedness, the President added.

Senator Nye and others of his committee, fearing this move might prevent the appropriation of funds for the continuance of their investigation, were rather caustic in their comments on the President's action. It was pointed out that the entire field of inquiry suggested by the President was covered by the war policies commission, appointed under congressional authority three years ago. This commission made recommendations, but congress took no action.

In order that he may aid in handling expected War department legislation, General MacArthur is retained as chief of staff indefinitely, by direction of the President. This does not mean that he will serve another four-year term.

ALL Michigan was thrown into mourning by one of the worst disasters that ever occurred in that state. The Hotel Kerns in Lansing, crowded with legislators gathered for a special session of the assembly, was destroyed by an early morning fire, and probably as many as forty persons were killed by the flames or by leaping to the street or into the Grand river on the bank of which the hotel stood. The exact number of victims may never be known, for the register was burned. At least six members of the legislature lost their lives.

"BALANCED abundance" is the keynote sounded in the program offered by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace in his annual report. Convinced that agriculture should be brought under permanent federal control, he will ask congress for drastic new legislation. This will include broad amendments to the AAA, great extension of the grain futures act and passage of the Tugwell food and drugs bill. While he insists on continuance of crop control, Mr. Wallace advises against falling into the pit of "scarcity economics"; nevertheless, he defends the working of the AAA reduction schemes to date.

He sees "the end of our period of emergency adjustments, of drastic reduction in farm output coming into view." Hereafter, the task may include adjustment of production to a rising demand, he says. To this end, as a safeguard against the effects of crop failure in the future, the secretary develops his proposal for "an ever normal granary." Larger reserves against crop failure would be maintained. These, he believes, should remain in the control of the farmers, through storage and government loan arrangements, coupled with an obligation to participate in continued crop adjustments. By co-ordinating storage with crop adjustments, farmers would have the beginning of means to control live stock production cycles, it is held.

The secretary defends the proposed amendments to the AAA on the ground that they really did not enlarge his powers but merely "sought to remove uncertainties in the law and to specify more clearly the secretary's powers to enforce these marketing agreements against the recalcitrant few."

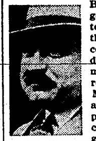
The Tugwell amendment to the food and drug act is defended by Wallace on the ground that it would remove from the government "the formidable obligation of proving that claims made in the labeling of patent medicines are both false and fraudulent" and provide more drastic penalties, including jail terms for violations.

"I'M IN. I have more than enough votes to win," said Representative Joseph W. Byrns of Tennessee; and this ended the contest for the speakership of the next house, for a count of noses proved Mr. Byrns was right. The President remained neutral, and one after another the state delegations fell into line for the Tennessean. There remained the race for the floor leadership which was sought by a number of men, including John W. McCormack of Massachusetts, John E. Rankin of Mississippi, James M. Mead and John J. O'Connor of New York, William W. Arnold and Adolph J. Sabath of Illinois.

INVITED by the League of Nations council to name the commander of the international force to preserve order in the Saar before and during the plebiscite of January 13, the British government gave the post to Maj. J. E. S. Brind, a soldier of considerable experience in and since the World war. The British contingent will comprise 1,500 men. The Italians will number 1,300, the Swedes 250, and the Dutch 250, bringing the total to 3,300.

The governing body of the Saar is authorized to exempt "the international force," as it is called, from "all responsibility for any acts accomplished in the performance of its mission and confer on itself, in case of need, power of requisition, accommodation, maintenance, and transport of said force."

FOR a few days it seemed that Jugoslavia was determined to provoke another European war as an aftermath of the assassination of King Alexander. Bogoljub Yeftitch, Jugoslav foreign minister, appeared before the League of Nations council in Geneva and denounced the government of Hungary as responsible for the Marseilles murder, and his government pressed him to obtain concrete action in regard to the complaint. At the same time Jugoslavia was deporting thousands of Hungarians from within its borders. Hungary, denying any responsibility for the killing of Alexander, protested bitterly against the deportations, and was supported by Italy in its position. France stood back of Jugoslavia, as did Czechoslovakia and Rumania.



Bogoljub Yeftitch

Yeftitch told leaders of the major European powers he preferred to withdraw the matter from the hands of the league and deal directly with Hungary rather than accept a mere "platonic" condemnation of terrorism.

"Our moderation has mistakenly been conceived to be weakness," he asserted.

The situation was genuinely threatening and the representatives of the great powers began to get busy. Pierre Laval, French foreign minister, told Baron Aloisi of Italy about the Serb threat, and a spokesman for the little entente admitted that the Belgrade government might be forced by public opinion to act unless the council's action was satisfactory.

Then Laval proposed to the league a plan involving an invitation to Hungary to conduct a careful inquiry into the murder of Alexander and to punish anyone found guilty of connection with the crime. This scheme was presented to Hungary and the little entente by Capt. Anthony Eden, British lord privy seal, and was accepted by them, to the great relief of the statesmen.

Meantime the tenseness of the situation was lessened by the sudden cessation of deportations of Hungarians from Jugoslavia, which action, it was said was due to the intercession of other powers, chiefly Great Britain and France. The Serb government probably realized that its cause at Geneva would be prejudiced by the continuation of the expulsions.

WHEN December 15, war debt installment day, came around, it was found that Finland was again the only nation with enough decency to pay. It deposited the amount due, $228,538, in the New York Federal Reserve bank. All the other debtor nations repeated their defaults, and Great Britain rejected a suggestion for another conference on the ground that world conditions had not altered since last June and negotiations now would be "useless and unwise."

CONSTITUTIONAL guarantees were suspended by the Cuban government in the provinces of Havana, Santa Clara and Camaguey in order to cope with threatened uprisings. Authorities are thus enabled to search homes without warrants; hold prisoners without bringing charges against them and inspect personal mail. Matanzas is the only remaining province where citizens are assured constitutional rights, since the guaranties were suspended in Pinar del Rio and Oriente provinces some time ago.

The secretary of state in Havana announced that "squatters" on some thousands of acres of land in Oriente province, where a miniature Communist state has been set up, will be evicted.

POLAND'S foreign policy was clearly set forth to the press by Prince Radziwill, chairman of the foreign relations committee of the Polish parliament, the statement being meant primarily for the French. The prince said the Franco-Polish alliance was still the basis of his country's foreign policy, but France's lack of consideration for Poland's independence and the attitude of French capitalists who regard Poland as a fit object of exploitation have developed serious differences.

Radziwill said Poland wishes to avoid becoming involved in Danubian and Balkan problems and at the same times wishes to be consulted on problems directly affecting it, such as the proposed eastern Locarno security pact and questions concerning its relations with Russia, Germany, and the Baltic states.

Poland is not the "yes man" of France, and it cannot permit action to be taken in northeastern Europe without being consulted, Radziwill continued.

HENRY FORD believes, as do many others, that recovery can be brought about by reviving industry and creating employment, and he is acting on his belief. The motor magnate announces that he will spend an additional $8,000,000 for further expansion and improvement of his company's thousand-acre plant at River Rouge, near Dearborn, Mich. This is in addition to the recent letting of contracts for nearly $12,000,000 for two steel mills and power units for the plant, so the company will spend a total of about $20,000,000 within a period of ten months for the development of the River Rouge plant.

Henry Ford

The new units now under construction and the cost of each are the steel finishing plant, $3,460,000; the hot steel strip mill, $6,111,923; the stripper building, for handling ingots, $230,000; new steam and electrical units for the power house $4,599,888; new blast furnaces and foundry equipment, $2,120,460, and additional equipment of many kinds, costing $3,144,250, made necessary by the shift from 24-hour to 16-hour daily production.

Evidently Mr. Ford has no fear for the future economic stability of the country.

UNION labor, like President Roosevelt, is heartily in favor of legislation establishing unemployment insurance, but it proposes, through President Green of the A. F. of L., that the insurance be financed wholly by a 5 per cent tax on pay rolls. Opposing any direct levy on the workers, Mr. Green says they would pay most of the cost any way. Employers add their cost to prices and employees buy 85 per cent of all goods, he argued. If workers shared the direct cost of insurance, he adds, they would be paying twice.

Representative Connery of Massachusetts, chairman of the house labor committee, says that sentiment in favor of the 30-hour week measure as a means of reducing unemployment is increasing. This also is warmly urged by union labor, but the administration seems to think the time for it has not yet come.

ATTORNEY GENERAL CUMMINGS held a four-day crime conference in Washington with some five hundred delegates, and President Roosevelt and Henry L. Stimson made speeches at the opening session. Criminologists, judges, lawyers and sociologists joined the government officials in devising a program to make the nation more law-abiding.

H. J. Anslinger, chief of the narcotic bureau, discussed the recent raids in many large cities in which his agents seized hundreds of dope peddlers, addicts and their equipment, and said the raids showed the need of more drastic laws against the dope evil. The matter of shady lawyers was taken up and Mayer C. Goldman of New York suggested that private counsel in criminal cases be abolished and a system of state defense lawyers be established. Treasury officials urged that their police authority against bootlegging should be broadened. These and many other topics were thoroughly discussed.

BOLIVIA, badly beaten by Paraguay, announced her acceptance of the League of Nations' plan for ending the war in the Chaco; and, although at the same time an order was issued for a general mobilization of all the country's available man power, it was believed the long struggle was near its ending.

The league plan provides for an armistice while a neutral international commission works out details of a settlement of grievances. Paraguay has not acted finally on the league's offer.

If you have a bottle-fed baby in your home, it is well to follow this suggestion: Write out the formula. Keep it mounted in a prominent place in your kitchen. Mother may be able to remember it, but suppose she is called from home or is ill—who will know the formula if it is not in a prominent place?

Toad Hatches Robins

A strange case of foster motherhood has been reported from Prospect, Conn., where a tree toad is said to have hatched out a nest of young robins.

The incident was related by Lester Green, a local resident, who says his first intimation that something unusual was happening was when he found a dead robin on the ground under an old apple tree. Looking around he found a nest and on examination found a tree toad sprawled over three eggs. For several days Green kept the nest under observation and during this time the male robin kept busy catching insects for the toad. Finally the eggs hatched and produced three healthy young fledgings and the toad was found guarding them.

Hands Would Swell and Crack with Eczema

Healed by Cuticura

"Eczema started on my hands in blisters and then spread to my face. My hands would itch and I would rub them and they would get inflamed and burn terribly. They would pain and crack open and would swell until my hands were almost twice their size. I could not sleep.

WATCH YOUR KIDNEYS!

Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering impurities from the blood stream. But kidneys get functionally disturbed—lag in their work—fail to remove the poisonous body wastes.

Then you may suffer nagging backache, attacks of dizziness, burning, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains; feel "all worn out."

Don't delay! For the quicker you get rid of these poisons, the better your chances of good health.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They tend to promote normal functioning of the kidneys; should help them pass off the irritating poisons. Doan's are recommended by users the country over. Get them from any druggist.

That night Berenice and Janet discussed the future over the fire in Berenice's bedroom. They sat there, too conscious of the recent death in the other. They had locked both doors, even secured the windows.

"Do you blame me, Janet, for wanting to marry Wilton at once? After all, what could Mr. Haskell do if I did marry without his consent?"

"What does the will say?"

"Simply that I must have his consent. But, Janet, I don't think my father ever really knew Gordon as we know him—or else he has changed terribly with the years. My father trusted him absolutely. In the event of my death he inherits everything."

"Ah, in the event of your death!"

"Why do you look at me like that, Janet?"

"My dear, I want you to live!"

"Of course! I have everything to live for! Do you feel danger here—"

"No premeditated, plotted danger, perhaps, but something sudden; the outbreak of a smoldering fire. I believe Gordon Haskell would stop at nothing to force you to marry him."

"It is not the day of marriage by capture. What I am fearing is that he will dismiss Mrs. Denver and you and Arthur suddenly as he did Wilton, and I shall be left here with him—and not even Mother Martha to protect me."

"Berenice, when that day comes you'll go with us. There's something savage in Gordon Haskell's nature. I can quite understand why your high-spirited brothers and sisters resented the man."

Berenice laid a hand on Janet's. "Listen—do you hear some one in the passage? I thought I heard some one breathing at the door."

Janet glanced fearfully toward it. "The wind, probably—what is that bit of white?"

Against the dark sill was outlined a tiny white triangle. Janet cautiously drew it from under the crack—a little three-cornered note without address. "Berenice, it must be for you."

"Some one knows our secret"—she passed the note to Janet, who read: "'A tree is not a safe letter box.' Is that Mr. Haskell's printing—you can't call it writing!"

"I can't tell—it's either Balder's or Gordon Haskell's. But how foolish—and how detestable. Janet, I'm sorry! I've tried for years to feel that Haskell was kind and generous and fine—but I never quite reached the point. Sometimes I almost reached it, then he would do or say something to upset my ideals. I'm sorry. I wish we could go at once—but it seems cowardly, too, to run away!"

"We won't go until the situation is desperate."

"No more notes! They've probably read everything—not that I care!"

"No, dear—why should you care? He's wrong—not you."

While this conversation was in progress, Arthur was at his desk in his own room, resigned at last to its curious noises and creakings. His wood stove was glowing hot; and he might have felt a certain cozy contentment had he not been worried over the situation of affairs in the school. That Haskell was preparing a coup seemed quite within the bounds of possibility.

The rustling of his papers sounded very loud in the silence of the room, and he desisted from this attempt to clear his desk, and lit his black pipe. "Poor old Wilton," he thought, "out there on the moors with Jerry, and psychology gone to glory. If he takes my advice he'll steal Berenice and run with his prize to Onteaga—the rest of us after him—wild arms out, eyes popping! Lostland behind us like a nightmare! We might have known when we arrived at that station called Blade that something was wrong. Hear that mouse! I wonder what Mrs. Denver is doing?"

As if in answer to his question there came a knock at the door. It was Mrs. Denver with a lamp in her hand. "He and Balder are quarreling again," she whispered. "I heard their voices. I couldn't tell what they said. I felt afraid."

He took the lamp from her hand. "Don't be frightened. We'll move down the corridor a bit, and if we hear anything violent we can go up to protect the girls."

It was cold and draughty in the halls, and even the runner of carpet was lifted and moved by intermittent gusts. Open doors on black bedrooms added to the gloom. They paused and listened. Far off they heard a peal of diabolic laughter, like a man plunging into the night with a jest, or into a cauldron with a quip.

"What is that shadow on the wall?" Mrs. Denver gasped breathlessly.

"Just the high-backed chair! Listen! Keep very still."

Again the laughter, which Arthur thought the most unpleasant he had ever heard—a black, dancing cadence of notes; imps leaping up and down and pulling faces at appalled eyes. Another sound from another quarter of the building—this time a pounding, a wild beating of fists on a hard substance.

Then the laughter died away—a door slammed. "I wouldn't for all the riches in all the banks go downstairs now. Suppose a hand reached out and dragged you—"

The pounding continued. "Maybe somebody is locked out," she ventured.

"Or locked in. Go to your room, Mrs. Denver—and lock the door. I am going down to investigate."

"I'll go with you. I'd feel safer."

Arthur felt safer himself for her company, and they went cautiously down the main staircase, the lamp casting a circle ahead of them whose edges Mrs. Denver viewed fearfully. In the lower hall they paused.

"That pounding comes from the basement." Her voice was faint.

"Listen!—some one's calling—as if for help."

Muffled imploring sounds reached them. Once they thought they made out the word "Balder."

"Oh, well, there's nothing for it but to go down to the basement."

"These sounds seem to come—from where the figures are!"

She grew white. "Mr. Fleming—you don't think he's—killed!"

"A dead man couldn't make such a racket."

He moved toward the basement stairs and began to descend, his companion close beside him. At the foot they paused. "Yes—it's down that way!"

Some one was pounding on the inside of the door which guarded the figures. As they neared it—a singular spectacle met their eyes. Gordon Haskell's face, over which the blood was running from a cut on his forehead, was framed in the circular inset of glass. His eyes, wild with fright, glared out at them for an instant. Then he shouted: "Let me out of here."

"Where is the key?"

He called directions. Arthur went on to the next room, found the loose brick and the key. Mrs. Denver was close at his heels, very pale, but she said nothing. Arthur unlocked the door and Haskell stepped out panting, growling, wiping the blood from his forehead.

"That brute Balder locked me in here for a practical joke, I suppose. I was looking—for something I dropped here yesterday;—and he slammed the door to. I was helpless. One can only open it from inside—with the key. In my haste—I fell—cut myself. Fleming, will you bring that candle?"

Arthur went into the schoolroom. The candlestick stood on the old desk, imparting to the old place the appearance of a school in which the pupils had been kept too late. Mrs. Denver glanced at the figures apprehensively. The golden heads were bent. How terrible if they should look up, all of them! Haskell, in slipping, had evidently hit his head against the iron leg of a desk; for there was blood on the floor close to the feet of the little waxen Isabel.

He had disappeared when they came out—and they heard his footsteps echoing off toward his own quarters. Arthur and Mrs. Denver looked at each other with mutual inquiries as to the significance of this so-called practical joke.

"He was afraid," she uttered solemnly. "He was nearly dead of fear!"

"Of course! That's why he slipped. He scarcely knew what he was doing!"

"Why did Balder lock him up?"

"To pay him off for something—I suppose."

"Why is he so afraid of the figures?"

"Perhaps he didn't treat the Bracebridge children as he should. They certainly hated him. I think the night will be quiet from now on, Mrs. Denver."

CHAPTER IX

Wilton had not seen anyone from the academy for several days, and he was all the more anxious because the notes in the old tree had ceased. The end of a morning's impatience was the mile walk to the tree through the nipping air.

"I am on a fruitless errand," he muttered. "If there's no note I am going on to the academy. He couldn't do more than shoot me!"

But there was a note and he opened it greedily. It had neither beginning nor ending—only the few lines:

"Meet me Thursday afternoon at three, just above the whirl—on the dangerous side. We're not likely to be followed there."

He went back to tell Jerry that he would be gone all afternoon in case any of his pupils conceived the holiday to be at an end. Jerry, half asleep over the fire, raised himself, viewed his lodger benevolently and nodded again. Wilton went into his bedroom and made ready for a cold afternoon out of doors.

He had to make a long detour around the shores of the lake to reach the entrance to the ravine, but a cart road opened between the pines; and in the heavy silence of the winter landscape he trudged, brushing by evergreen boughs and shaking off their weight of snow in a powdery cloud. He saw the dark waters of the ravine creek between the white banks, and found the path that skirted "the dangerous side" without much difficulty. The wild and lonely gorge was magnificent. Icicles hung from monstrous black boulders; the dark water seemed to be churning up ice-like cream. The air stung as if full of invisible frost needles.

Advances Cosmic Rays Theory

Exploding stars that burn with a fire equal to 100,000,000 suns for six days and then are reduced from a diameter of 500,000 miles to little spheres fourteen miles thick are the cause of cosmic rays, an authority states.

"Forgotten Sire" Dairy's Drawback

Large Group of Young Bulls With Unknown Ability as Breeders.

By W. W. Yapp, Chief in Dairy Cattle, University of Illinois.—WNU Service

The "forgotten man" has his champions, but too little has been said and done about the "forgotten sires" of dairy herds.

By the "forgotten sires" reference is made to that large group of young dairy bulls whose breeding ability is still an unknown quality but whose progeny will wield a potent influence on dairy returns in years to come. These progeny will produce more than 90 per cent of all milk and dairy products consumed in the five years from 1937 to 1941 inclusive.

Most progressive dairymen would rather use a "proved" sire, as determined by the number of pounds of milk and butterfat the bull's daughters will produce in a year's time. This is as it should be. However, under the present system of proving dairy bulls, only one in fifty is likely to become a proved sire, and all those not in this select group are "forgotten."

More attention needs to be given to the physical appearance of these bulls and to the performance of their dams and sires if the future of the dairy industry is to be safeguarded. The physical characteristics of the young bull should, of course, be considered carefully, if he is to sire the future producers of the herd. In addition the dairyman should investigate the characteristics of the bull's sire and dam. If obtainable, the records of full brothers and sisters, and even of half brothers and half sisters, will furnish valuable evidence in determining the transmitting ability of a young sire. If a dairyman can find a young bull whose sire has ten or more unselected daughters that are highly productive and whose dam has three or more good daughters, he can feel reasonably assured that the young sire will make a satisfactory breeder.

Corn Stover Low Protein Feed and Needs Balance

The loss in dry matter in corn stover approximates 24 per cent while the loss in ensiling corn need not be more than 10 per cent. This emphasizes the value of ensiling in so far as possible this year, says Hoard's Dairyman. However, bright corn stover that has been properly shocked can be made a valuable part of the ration this winter. Shredding, grinding, or cutting may be advisable in order to get the cows to eat the entire plant. Also the conservative use of molasses mixed with water and sprinkled over this roughage may add to its palatability and feeding value slightly.

Corn stover is a low protein feed and to balance it we must feed a high protein grain mixture. We recommend 1 to 2 per cent of the grain mixture be ground limestone, marl, oyster shell, or special steamed bone meal. Bone meal and salt mixed half and half and fed as salt alone is usually fed, will also give the necessary mineral protection. The analysis of corn stover is 2.1 per cent digestible crude protein; 46.1 per cent total digestible nutrients.

Chinch Bug War Hard

Congress in the last session voted an appropriation of a million dollars to halt the ravages of the chinch bug in the corn belt and this money was used to build barriers totaling 30,000 miles along which creosote halted the advance of the insects. The chinch bug, however, has two generations in a single season, the first generation being a crawling insect which can be controlled by the creosote barriers, but the second generation, flying, is not halted by this form of control. Experts estimate that the million dollars spent on control measures saved at least $4,000,000 worth of corn.

Hops for Fertilizer

Hops from a brewery are excellent as a source of introducing humus to the soil. Any form of vegetative growth, even weeds supply this necessary matter. Manure is another form in which humus is supplied. The best time to apply it is in the fall, digging it into the soil, and if the soil is a clay loam it can stand heavy applications of such material which will help considerably in keeping the soil more open and spongy and render it less liable to bake and dry out during dry weather. Applications up to 50 tons to the acre may be used.—Montreal Herald.

Farm Chatter

Spain recently passed several laws to regulate its wheat trade.

Germany has fixed maximum grain prices at slightly above those of 1933.

At average rate of consumption of corn cereals, one year's corn crop would produce enough cereal to last the people of the United States 470 years.

In the years following the last seven drouths, corn production has risen an average of 49 per cent. Acreage has increased 7 per cent and acre yields 39 per cent.

Writer Sees Advantages in Fingerprinting All

The plan of California's American Legion to push legislation requiring every resident of the United States to carry an identification card bearing his photograph and fingerprints has a good deal to commend it, though it may be that a less drastic measure would accomplish all that is really necessary. The plan smacks somewhat of regimentation, and American instinct will tend to oppose it. But it has a number of undeniable advantages, aside from those particularly applicable to the present crime emergency, and the objections to it are more sentimental than real.

Save for the fact that few fingerprints, other than those of criminals, are taken now, there would be and could be no real feeling against the plan; and once fingerprinting was made universal, this feeling would swiftly disappear, since no stigma could attach to the process.

It is hardly necessary to point out the great advantage to the authorities, including the police, of being able to identify quickly and positively every person with whom they may have relations, whether those persons are criminal suspects or not. Police officers sometimes make serious errors in identifications, with tragic consequences, as did the Los Angeles officer who, with the best of intentions, swore out an insanity complaint against a mother because she would not accept a spurious child as her own.

Had this boy's fingerprints been on file, the woman would have been spared a harrowing experience and the officer a lawsuit which is still a source of trouble after several years.

There is, in fact, as much reason for filing fingerprints of every individual in the country as for filing birth certificates, and possibly more utility. The keeping of birth, death and marriage records is so commonplace and so obviously reasonable that no one ever objects to it. To carry the same idea a few steps further and make the record complete would add very much to its value.

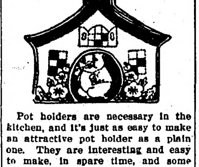
As for photographs, no one objects to them when they appear on passports, libelous as passport photographs often are.

Not only the carrying of identification cards, but registration at a police office of every newcomer to any community, is required in various parts of Europe, and universally accepted without complaint. To be sure, the expense to the average American city of registering all visitors would be quite an item, but such registration is not an essential part of the plan and need not be considered for the present.

As an aid in the war on crime, universal fingerprinting would be of immense value. That does not need to be argued. It would repay its cost many times over in the time saved to police officers.—Los Angeles Times.

POT HOLDER SET IN THREE PIECES

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



Pot holders are necessary in the kitchen, and it's just as easy to make an attractive pot holder as a plain one. They are interesting and easy to make, in spare time, and some should always be worked up ready to take as a gift when a trifle is wanted in a hurry and you know it will be appreciated.

Package No. A-8 is composed of three pieces. Two pot holders and one container. When made up, the holder is visible through door, as shown above. The holders are placed in pocket through top opening. The material is stamped and stenciled in colors, ready to be made up, and the lines may be outlined if desired. Directions are also given how to put it together.

Send 15c if you want the set.

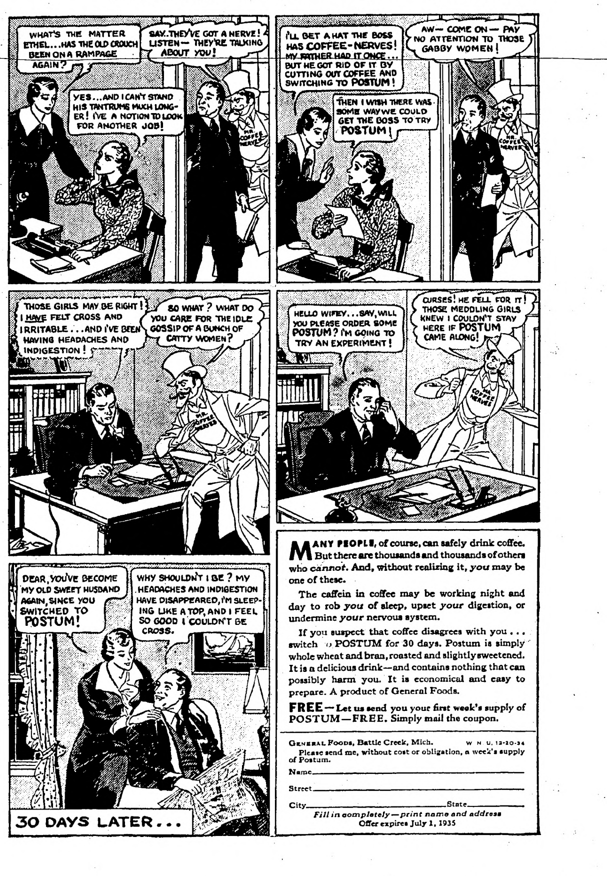
Mr. Coffee-Nerves finds out who is boss



WHAT'S THE MATTER ETHEL... HAS THE OLD CROUCH BEEN ON A RAMPAGE AGAIN?
SAY.. THEY'VE GOT A NERVE! LISTEN— THEY'RE TALKING ABOUT YOU!
YES... AND I CAN'T STAND HIS TANTRUMS MUCH LONGER! I'VE A NOTION TO LOOK FOR ANOTHER JOB!
MR. COFFEE NERVES
I'LL BET A HAT THE BOSS HAS COFFEE-NERVES! MY FATHER HAD IT ONCE... BUT HE GOT RID OF IT BY CUTTING OUT COFFEE AND SWITCHING TO POSTUM!
AW— COME ON— PAY NO ATTENTION TO THOSE GABBY WOMEN!
THEN I WISH THERE WAS SOME WAY WE COULD GET THE BOSS TO TRY POSTUM!
THOSE GIRLS MAY BE RIGHT! I HAVE FELT CROSS AND IRRITABLE... AND I'VE BEEN HAVING HEADACHES AND INDIGESTION!
SO WHAT? WHAT DO YOU CARE FOR THE IDLE GOSSIP OF A BUNCH OF CATTY WOMEN?
HELLO WIFEY... SAY, WILL YOU PLEASE ORDER SOME POSTUM? I'M GOING TO TRY AN EXPERIMENT!
CURSES! HE FELL FOR IT! THOSE MEDDLING GIRLS KNEW I COULDN'T STAY HERE IF POSTUM CAME ALONG!
DEAR, YOU'VE BECOME MY OLD SWEET HUSBAND AGAIN, SINCE YOU SWITCHED TO POSTUM!
WHY SHOULDN'T I BE? MY HEADACHES AND INDIGESTION HAVE DISAPPEARED, I'M SLEEPING LIKE A TOP, AND I FEEL SO GOOD I COULDN'T BE CROSS.
30 DAYS LATER...

MANY PEOPLE, of course, can safely drink coffee. But there are thousands and thousands of others who cannot. And, without realizing it, you may be one of these.

The caffein in coffee may be working night and day to rob you of sleep, upset your digestion, or undermine your nervous system.

If you suspect that coffee disagrees with you... switch to POSTUM for 30 days. Postum is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. It is a delicious drink—and contains nothing that can possibly harm you. It is economical and easy to prepare. A product of General Foods.

Better Breakfasts

A GOOD breakfast is worth fighting for. Or at least that's the way the squirrel and the bluejay sometimes feel about it. If your mate has fought the battle and won the booty while you've sat back in the feathered nest, be sure that you make the most of the spoils.

Here is a breakfast that you, too, can gloat over, for, although he has masterfully brought home the bacon, have you not broiled it to a golden crisp and turned the pancakes to perfection? The big moment of this breakfast, however, comes at the start—so we'll give you the simple recipe for mixing the fruit drink.

A word, first, about the coffee. It must be freshly [illegible], and you will find the drip method gives the best results. If it is vacuum-packed it has retained that fresh coffee flavor and that enticing aroma which makes breakfast the most inviting meal of the day—and sends us forth to conquer.

HOME RAMBLES

We had another little snow fall here last Friday.

We can already notice that the days are getting a little longer.

The local school will open its doors next Tuesday for the second half of this school year.

We are this week adding a new feature to our paper. 'The Almanac'. Watch for it every week and clip it out and make a historical scrap book.

The annual ice harvest on the Red Lake river at Thief River Falls has started this week. Several of the business places here get their ice supply from there.

Thief River Falls had two bad fires last week. The house on the Stuart McLeod farm northwest of that city burned down on Wednesday and the O K One Stop Service Station burned to the ground on Thursday afternoon.

The Weather

35 below zero here yesterday morning. Cold and snappy all week except Wednesday when it almost thawed here.

20 Years Ago

The merchants in Holt went on a cash basis. They claimed that they had over $75,000 outstanding according to their books.

Farm Census Supervisor

Clifford W. Bouvette, Hallock newspaper publiseer and prominent Ninth Congressional Democrat, has been named supervisor of the District No. 1 Farm census covering Northwestern Minnesota which got under way on January 1, according to an announcement by Congressman Einar Hoidale, who makes all the bum appointments up this way.

Minnesota is divided into seven districts for the purpose of taking the Federal Farm census, the territory covering the entire Northwestern part of the state being included in the district under Mr. Bouvette's supervision. He will have as his chief assistant Arnold L. Fredrickson of Dilworth and both will maintain their headquarters at Crookston.

2-Cent Check Tax Ended

Uncle Sam said "Happy New Year" to Minnesota bank customers on Tuesday to the tune of $132,000 a month.

Customers will save approximately that much through lifting of the Federal 2-cent nuisance tax on bank checks, effective January 1.

In the eighteen months since the tax has been effective, A. R. Knox, acting collector of internal revenue in St. Paul, said that approximately $2,390,000 has been collected in Minnesota.

A number of boys and girls were entertained at the S. Lorentson home on Tuesday the occasion being Howard's birthday.

Holt Rates Reach New High

In spite of general lower assessed valuations throghout Marshall county, 67 school districts, 13 townships and one village were able to cut their operation expenses to lower their Tax rate for 1935, according to a summary of the tax rate sheet released recently from the office of P. E. Kvikstad, county treasurer.

The village of Stephen is the only village in the county which was able to cut its village tax rate, the rate for village purposes being decreased from 24.6 mills to 14.6 mills. The villages of Grygla and Oslo held their rates to the same figure as a year ago with 25 mills for Grygla and 26 mills for Oslo.

State tax rates will show a slight increase for the coming year with a total of 11.95 mills as compared with 11.6 mills this year, while the county rate will also show an increase, the rate this year being 24.34 mills, while for next year the rate will be 27.97 mills.

During the coming year tax rates in 83 school districts, 36 townships and eight villages, including Warren, will have an increase in their rates, while six school districts and two villages will have identical rates for the coming year.

Residents of the village of Holt will have the highest rate in the county for the coming year with a total rate of 261.12 mills. This rate includes 153.4 mills for schools, 67.8 mills for the village and the combined county and state rate of 39.92 mills. The Holt rate is 22.62 mills over this year which is 238.5 mills.

Viking village will again enjoy the lowest village rate in in the county with a combined rate of 88.62 mills. This is an increase of 5.82 mills over a year ago. The Viking rate includes the state and county rate of 39.92 mills together with 27.3 mills for the school and 16.4 mills for the village.

Strandquist and Oslo show the biggest decrease in total rates over this year, Strandquist decreasing 39.78 mills and Oslo 35.18 mills. The new Strandquist rate will be 97.22 mills which includes the state and county rate of 39.92 plus 31.4 mills for the school district and 25.9 mills for the village. Last year's combined rate for Strandquist was 137 mills. The Oslo rate was decreased from 175.3 mills to 140.12 mills, the new rate including 74.2 mills for school, 26 mills for village and the state and county rate of 39.92 mills.

The total rate in Stephen decreased 1.88 mills, the rate being 101.1 mills this year and 99.22 mills for the coming year. The new rate will include 44.7 mills for the school and 14.6 for the village plus the usual state and county rate.

Middle River again will have a high rate, the total reaching 202.22 mills whereas for this year the rate totaled 161 mills making an increase of 41.22 mills. The new rate includes the 39.92 mills for state and county plus 105.1 mills for the schools and 57.2 mills for the village.

In Argyle the new rate will total 174.42 mills an increase of 43.82 mills over this year, which is 130.6 mills. The new rate includes state and county and 51.1 mills for schools and 83.4 mills for village purposes. In Newfolden the rate will increase 13.82 mills, the old rate being 161.3 mills and the new rate 157.12 mills. The rate includes state and county together with 85 mills for the school and 29.2 mills for the village.

Warren's rate climbed 26.52 mills, the new rate being 135.72 mills against 109.2 mills this year. In Grygla the new rate will be 91.62 mills, while this year the rate was 87.2 mills. The new Grygla rate includes 20.7 mills for school purpcse and 25 mills for village puposes together with the combined state and county rate.

Townships in Marshall county which decreased their rates include Alma, Augsburg, Boxville, Eckvoll, Linsell, Middle River, Moose River, Mud Lake, Rollis, Oak Park, Vega, Veldt and Viking.—Warren Sheaf.

Frozen Cream

In the past month there has been more or less frozen cream. This is a point that should be watched very carefully as frozen cream is not fit for Land O'Lakes and also is injurious to the test.

Use enough blankets to cover it well while coming to town.

Snow Plow Has Right Of Way

"Don't dispute the right of way with a snow plow", is the warning of the state highway department in an appeal to motorists to exercise unusual caution when meeting plows at work on the trunk highways.

" Drivers will save themselves much inconvenience and some danger if they will make it a habit to slow down or stop when they meet a plow", says a department bulletin. "They should pull as far to the side of the road as possible and give the snow plow the right of way.

" In order to throw snow from the highways and keep them open for public use, it is necessary for the big V plows to travel 25 to 30 miles an hour and maintain a steady pace. They cannot dodge, jump or stop for every approaching car if they are to do an effective job.

"Many pleasure car drivers will approach a plow without slackening speed, expecting the plow to get out of their way. When it does not, they try to turn out at the last moment, but are going so fast they run into the ditch. If these drivers would slow down and turn out for the plow, they would seldom have any difficulty. Snow plows carry brilliant blue lights for night warnings."

Hall-Ness

Johnny Ness, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nils Ness and Eleanor Hall daughter of Mrs. O. B. Hall were united in marriage at the Lutheran Parsonage here on New Year's Eve. Rev. Redal read the ceremony.

Another New Year

Oh, the ragged Old Year slips by with a frown
And we're glad when the First sees him go-
And the little New Year comes skipping to town
With a smile for the Old year's woe.

For the New Year comes popping with promise and cheer
With a twinkle of feet on the snow,
For he's anxious to grow to a much better year.
Than the one that came growling a winter ago.

Hunting Mule Lie Wins

"Whoa!"

That word, uttered in the nick of time, saved his life, claims Verne L. Osborn of Centralia, Washington, which makes him the new world's champion liar.

Osborn's ascendancy to the title was announced recently by Otis C. Hulett, president of the Burlington (Wis.) Liars' club.

The winning lie was chosen from more than 5,000 submitted from persons all over the world.

Here's the yarn the judges liked best:

"I was hunting one day with a mule that I had trained especially for trailing jackrabbits. The chase led to a 1,000-foot precipice. The rabbit was going so fast it plunged over the brink.

"My mule was so well trained that without stopping to reckon the consequence he followed right after it, with me aboard. I was non-plussed, for the nonce, but when we were within ten feet of the bottom I recovered my wits.

" 'Whoa, there!' I shouted.

"The mule was so darned well trained he stopped dead in his tracks. I got off, dropped gently the remaining few feet to the ground.

GREAT NATIONAL RESOURCES PROGRAM REPORTED—STEEL INDUSTRY'S PLANS.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S national resources board, appointed last June to devise "a plan for planning," with Secretary of the Interior Ickes as its chairman, has submitted a long report offering a program, covering 20 to 30 years, for development of land, water and resources at an expenditure of $105,000,000,000. It surveys projects which presumably include the administration's relief and public works program for the immediate future, these being:

Harold L. Ickes

1. Improvement of highways and the elimination of grade crossings.
2. National housing, including slum clearance, subsistence homestead, rehabilitation, and low cost housing projects.
3. Water projects, including water supply, sewage treatment, flood control, irrigation, soil erosion prevention, and hydro-electric power developments.
4 Rural electrification.

Secretary of Labor Perkins, a member of the board, has said that if its recommendations are carried out, all unemployment will be eliminated for the next 25 years. These, she says, are the results that might be expected:

1. Provide a much greater development of water resources.
2. Stop menace of floods.
3. Stop soil erosion.
4. Remove all marginal or submarginal lands from attempted production.
5. Stop waste of mineral resources and substitute a national policy of conservation.
6. Create great new recreational acres.
7. Assemble basic data for mapping, public finance and population, necesary for national planning, with a middecennial census in 1935.
8. Co-ordinate socially-useful federal, state and municipal public works.
9. Provide for continuous long-range planning of land, water and mineral resources "in relation to each other and to the larger background of the social and economic life in which they are set."

The board's report does not suggest that the government spend the $105,000,000,000 involved, but recommends a national plan of co-ordinating federal construction projects with state and local undertakings. It also recommends a public works "reserve" of $10,000,000,000 to take up the slack of construction in periods of depression, but does not suggest where such a fund—more than one-third of the total national debt—could be obtained.

FROM his economic security advisory committee the President received a recommendation for an unemployment insurance system based upon contributions from employers through a pay roll tax; and also three proposed plans for old age pensions submitted for his consideration.

It was recommended that payments to workers who become jobless should be 50 per cent of their pay but payments were not to be less than $15 per week for 25 weeks in the year. States would be permitted to set a higher standard if they wished.

A "waiting period" of from two to four weeks between the time a worker lost his job and the time insurance payments started was provided for.

FIVE years ago it was asserted that the steel industry was far overbuilt. But its general program for 1935 building is now made public, showing that it plans the expenditure of $100,000,000 for new equipment. This includes the Ford Motor company's $19,000,000 program, already described in this column. Other items are: The United States Steel corporation has pledged $40,000,000 worth of modernization in the coming year.

The National Steel corporation has announced a $12,000,000 expansion for its subsidiary, the Great Lakes Steel corporation.

Carnegie Steel is building a 42-inch hot strip mill at Youngstown, Ohio, and Bethlehem is planning a 60-inch hot strip mill for its Lackawanna works at Buffalo.

Youngstown Steel and Tube company is completing a $7,000,000 mill at its Campbell (Ohio) works, and nearby the Republic Steel corporation is spending $500,000 for a new electric weld tube mill building.

"BALANCED abundance" is the keynote sounded in the program offered by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace in his annual report. Convinced that agriculture should be brought under permanent federal control, he will ask congress for drastic new legislation. This will include broad amendments to the AAA, great extension of the grain futures act and passage of the Tugwell food and drugs bill. While he insists on continuance of crop control, Mr. Wallace advises against falling into the pit of "scarcity economics"; nevertheless, he defends the working of the AAA reduction schemes to date.

He sees "the end of our period of emergency adjustments, of drastic reduction in farm output coming into view." Hereafter, the task may include adjustment of production to a rising demand, he says. To this end, as a safeguard against the effects of crop failure in the future, the secretary develops his proposal for "an ever normal granary." Larger reserves against crop failure would be maintained. These, he believes, should remain in the control of the farmers, through storage and government loan arrangements, coupled with an obligation to participate in continued crop adjustments. By co-ordinating storage with crop adjustments, farmers would have the beginning of means to control live stock production cycles, it is held.

The secretary defends the proposed amendments to the AAA on the ground that they really did not enlarge his powers but merely "sought to remove uncertainties in the law and to specify more clearly the secretary's powers to enforce these marketing agreements against the recalcitrant few."

The Tugwell amendment to the food and drug act is defended by Wallace on the ground that it would remove from the government "the formidable obligation of proving that claims made in the labeling of patent medicines are both false and fraudulent" and provide more drastic penalties, including jail terms, for violations.

He defends the section of the proposed amendment which would give him czaristic control over all food, drug and cosmetic advertising, a feature which raised a storm of protests in the last session on the ground that it invaded the freedom of the press.

UNION labor like President Roosevelt, is heartily in favor of legislation establishing unemployment insurance, but it proposes, through President Green of the A. F. of L., that the insurance be financed wholly by a 5 per cent tax on pay rolls. Opposing any direct levy on the workers, Mr. Green says they would pay most of the cost anyway. Employers add their cost to prices and employees buy 85 per cent of all goods, he argued. If workers shared the direct cost of insurance, he adds, they would be paying twice.

Representative Connery of Massachusetts, chairman of the house labor committee, says that sentiment in favor of the 30-hour week measure as a means of reducing unemployment is increasing. This also is warmly urged by union labor, but the administration seems to think the time for it has not yet come.

SECRETARY OF WAR DERN is no less insistent on the necessity of strengthening the army than is Secretary of the Navy Swanson in the case of our naval defenses. In the first section of his annual report Mr. Dern asks that the officer and enlisted strength of the army be increased to 14,000 commissioned officers and 165,000 enlisted men. Other recommendations include:

Secretary Dern

Purchase of 600 airplanes over a period of three years to give the air corps 2,320 serviceable planes, as urged by the board headed by Newton D. Baker, which investigated the air corps and its needs.

Allocation of sufficient funds to complete the army housing program at home and abroad.

Construction without undue delay of a War department building to house all its activities under one roof instead of in 17 buildings, as at present.

Enactment by congress of legislation to improve the promotion system, so as to give a more uniform and satisfactory flow of promotion without necessitating heavy additional expense.

Increasing the pay of officers, particularly in the lower grades, when the condition of the treasury warrants.

RUSH D. HOLT, the young radical who was elected United States senator from West Virginia, may have a hard time getting his seat, for he will not reach the constitutional age of thirty until next June. The Republican senators are determined to exclude Holt if possible, but they have not yet decided on the method to be pursued. McNary of Oregon, Republican leader, says he will challenge the West Virginian's eligibility when the latter appears to present his credentials to Vice President Garner, asking that the credentials be submitted to the committee of privileges and elections.

Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, a constitutional authority, differs with Senator McNary but merely on the point of procedure. He will take the same position as he took in the case of Frank L. Smith of Illinois and William S. Vare of Pennsylvania, and if he is successful Holt will be seated but later expelled by resolution after the investigating committee makes its report.

THIRTY-ONE years ago, on December 17, 1903, the Wright brothers made at Kitty Hawk, N. C., the historic first flight in a powered airplane, and the anniversary was handsomely celebrated throughout the United States and its possessions. Everywhere that weather conditions permitted, all available airplanes took to the air to honor Orville Wright, the surviving brother, and to demonstrate the extraordinary progress that has been made in aviation. Army and navy air fields, airport managers and owners of planes all co-operated in this celebration of National Aviation day.

PORTUGAL, under the leadership of Dictator-President Carmona, has gone Fascist. A new corporate state, modeled after the system established in Italy by Mussolini, has been created; Carmona's dictatorship is assured and a new constitution replaces that of 1933 which restored in some measure representative government. The first of the two chambers provided for has just been elected, and only one list of candidates was permitted in the field. Republicans and Socialists, not being represented, generally refrained from voting. Three women were chosen members of the chamber, which has 90 members. The other chamber, of 79, is appointive.

ITALY is having a row with Ethiopia because of an affray at Ualual between two bodies of their troops. Both have reported the affair to the League of Nations, each blaming the other. Premier Mussolini personally presented the Italian side and characterized the fight as "a sudden and unprovoked aggression against Italy's native garrison." He demanded an apology and indemnities, and flatly refused arbitration of the quarrel.

WHILE the senate committee headed by Senator Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota was still investigating munitions makers and their profits and methods, President Roosevelt named another committee charged with the duty of preparing legislation that would authorize the Chief Executive, in time of war, to assume absolute power over industrial profits, prices and wages and over the operations of all industries. Bernard M. Baruch, New York financier who was head of the war industries board, was made chairman of this committee, and Gen. Hugh S. Johnson was appointed to be Mr. Baruch's assistant. Others on the committee are Secretaries Hull (state), Morgenthau (treasury), Dern (war), and Swanson (navy); Undersecretary of Agriculture Tugwell, acting for Secretary Wallace; Assistant Secretary of Labor McGrady, acting for Secretary Perkins; Assistant Secretary of the Navy Henry Latrobe Roosevelt; Rail Co-ordinator Eastman; Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff; and Foreign Trade Adviser George N. Peek.

Bernard M. Baruch

The President told newspaper men gathered at his press conference that "the time has come to take the profit out of war." He declared that not only the war profits of corporations would be under inspection but the wages of individuals as well. He pointed out the disparity between the soldier's pay of $1 a day and that of the munitions worker at $10 a day, and declared this unequal mobilization, as he called it, had led to the veterans' demands for a soldiers' and sailors' bonus.

Legislation will be asked of the new congress meeting in January, Mr. Roosevelt said. He added that he regarded the subject as one of the most important of any to be laid before congress.

The President insisted that his move at this time was not prompted by any threat of war. The war horizon, he said, is cloudless. Neither should the proposal be considered one for war preparedness, the President added.

In order that he may aid in handling expected War department legislation, General MacArthur is retained as chief of st ' indefinitely.

ALL Michigan was thrown into mourning by one of the worst disasters that ever occurred in that state. The Hotel Kerns in Lansing, crowded with legislators gathered for a special session of the assembly, was destroyed by an early morning fire, and probably as many as forty persons were killed by the flames or by leaping to the street or into the Grand river on the bank of which the hotel stood. The exact number of victims may never be known, for the register was burned. At least six members of the legislature lost their lives.

"I'M in. I have more than enough votes to win," said Representative Joseph W. Byrns of Tennessee; and this ended the contest for the speakership of the next house, for a count of noses proved Mr. Byrns was right. The President remained neutral, and one after another the state delegations fell into line for the Tennessean. There remained the race for the floor leadership which was sought by a number of men, including John W. McCormack of Massachusetts, John E. Rankin of Mississippi, James M. Mead and John J. O'Connor of New York, William W. Arnold and Adolph J. Sabath of Illinois.

INVITED by the League of Nations council to name the commander of the international force to preserve order in the Saar before and during the plebiscite of January 13, the British government gave the post to Maj. J. E. S. Brind, a soldier of considerable experience in and since the World war. The British contingent will comprise 1,500 men. The Italians will number 1,300, the Swedes 250, and the Dutch 250, bringing the total to 3,300.

The governing body of the Saar is authorized to exempt "the international force," as it is called, from "all responsibility for any acts accomplished in the performance of its mission, and confer on itself, in case of need, power of requisition, accommodation, maintenance, and transport of said force."

PROMISING

Mr. and Mrs. Penley were honest, hard-working farmer folks. By self-denial they had managed to send their son to Harvard. One day a letter arrived. "I know you will be pleased," wrote the son, "to learn that I have won the squash championship."

"Well, well!" beamed Father Penley. "We'll make a farmer out of that boy yet, mother."

Defined

Wee Betty—Mother, I feel so 'cited!

Mother—Excited, dear? I don't think you know what excited means.

Wee Betty—Why, it's being in a hurry all over.

Diagnosed

"Doctor," said the pest who always was trying to get free medical advice. "I have the queerest noises in my head; what do you suppose causes it?"

"Maybe the wheels in there need oiling," he snapped.

Compensation

Farmer Bentover—That drouth cost us over 6,000 bushels of wheat.

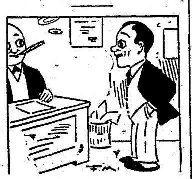
Mrs. Bentover—Yes, but there is nothing without some good. During that dry spell we could at least get some salt out of the shakers!

'Twas Ever Thus

"You look worried. What's the matter?"

"Ding it, my doctor just told me I've got to quit worrying or else."

SLUSH FUND, OF COURSE



City Official—Where are we to get the money for cleaning the streets after these heavy snows?

Assistant—Out of the slush fund, of course.

Case of Necessity

"What was the inspiration for your success?" the rich man was asked.

"Well, frankly," he grinned, "it was the meals my wife cooked when we were first married. I realized right off I'd have to earn enough to hire a cook if I didn't want to die of indigestion."

Woof! Woof!

"This is a retail store, isn't it," asked the old lady.

"Certainly, madam," said the clerk.

"Well," said she, "some friends gave my grandson this pup, and it has had its tail cut off and I want it retailed, please."

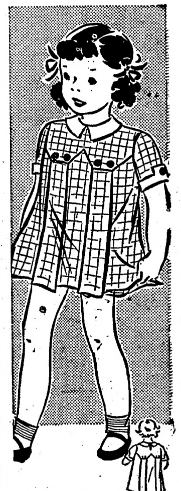
PATTERN 9168

What could be more cunning than this square little dress for a round little girl? And by the way, squares are "just the thing" this year. The yokes, back and front, give the impression of buttoning down over the top of the box pleats. The neck and sleeves are trimmed with demure little collar and cuffs of contrasting material. This model includes a pattern for matching bloomers. Made in a bright gay woolen for colder weather—either plaids or checks are very smart—or in a pretty gingham, for warmer days, it will appeal to the heart of the most clothes-conscious young miss.



Pattern 9168 may be ordered only in sizes 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10. Size 4 requires 2 yards 36 inch fabric and ⅜ yard contrasting.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York, N. Y.

NO JOKE

"Well," the recent bride was asked, "what have you learned since you became a man's meal getter?"

"That there are a lot of things about it besides onion to bring tears to the eyes," she sighed.

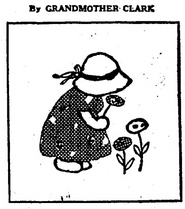
CHARMING QUILT IS "SUN BONNET"

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



Many mothers and grandmothers would get busy and make the "Sun Bonnet" quilt for a home darling if they could see just how cunning it looks when finished. One of the six poses of the baby is shown here. The 18 inch blocks are stamped on white material. The applique patches are stamped for cutting and sewing on many colored beautiful prints. The embroidery is in simple outline stitch.

Send 15c to our quilt department and we will mail you one complete block like the above picture, also picture of quilt showing the six different blocks. Make this one block up and see how it looks when finished. Six blocks, each different, will be mailed for 75c postpaid.

This is another of our good-looking quilts and, like the others, must be worked up to be appreciated.

Address—Home Craft Co., Dept. D, Nineteenth and St. Louis Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

To Remove Lettering From Sacks

Sacks from sugar, flour, etc., make good tea cloths or can serve other purposes if you remove the lettering or color. An easy way to do this is to moisten the sacks in kerosene. Let them stand a short time. Then wash them. You will find that the color and lettering have come out. Dry the sacks and they will be ready for use.

Responsibility

"'A child is the repository of infinite possibilities' and comes into the world a potential asset to society, as it comes in response to a universal call, and in fulfillment of a natural law. If it ever becomes a liability, the fault is more with society than with the parents or the child, as society has the advantage of the accumulated knowledge and wisdom of the ages, to which the child has an inherent right, and society, as well as the parents and the child must suffer and pay for what the child does not get."

This responsibility is one that society must carry. To shirk it is no economy. To pass it on to the child without providing the preparation that systematic early education will give is to fail in our responsibility to the past, the present and the future.

EBONY WATERS

—23—

More than once he paused to see if she were in sight; to see if she were following him up the dangerous path which at times measured its width by inches above the ebony water. Here and there a fallen tree sent the foam high where the impetuous current broke against its bulk.

"Poor children," he thought, and then; "If there had been time to get a message to her I would have forbidden this. Dangerous—much too dangerous."

But he plodded on, thinking frequently that he heard the snapping of twigs behind him. "We can't talk long! We'll have to be out of this place by four o'clock," he thought, "or we'll not see our way back."

He slipped on a bit of ice and caught himself just in time to save him from going over the bank into the welter of hurrying water. His anxiety was very great. Berenice must never venture such a thing again.

The path had become a mere thread at the bottom of a precipice. The great fall hung just ahead of him. At its foot the vortex was in full swing. The whirl was dancing a mad defiance of winter; even zero cold could not harness it.

He did not care to gaze at it too long. "What a place! She must never, never come here again."

Turning too quickly, he slipped, but instantly regained his balance by a violent lurch backward. In the same moment he felt the heavy impact of something against his shoulder—a glancing blow—and wheeled around to find his hands violently and instinctively clutching the square green base that he knew very well indeed; the base to which was attached the old tree.

At the other end of the tree was Balder's dark and angry face, watchful, keen and sly. Wilton had a cinema flash of events converging to and diverging from this encounter. Moving across this screen were figures both familiar and strange—Berenice in her patient beauty; Haskell roaming the old academy like some were-wolf; the immobile waxen children. That glancing blow on his shoulder—was it an accident? He would soon know—and along the avenues of his mind approached another figure—himself, tragically snared.

"See here, Balder," he tried to speak with friendly indifference. "Be a little more careful when you're throwing rubbish into the whirl. You might hurt somebody."

"What are you in the way for?"

The words conveyed more than their obvious meaning, and were accompanied by a sound, half laugh, half snarl. Nature in framing Balder on a great scale had perhaps for the warning of others presented him without disguise of the inner man. Over his broad, blank countenance something passed like a cloud, obliterating even his purpose; but Wilton instinctively felt that he was in greater danger than he had ever been in his life. Life! It might be measured only in moments now.

Then a terrible fear. Had this man been sent to kill them both—had he already killed Berenice?

He tried to think calmly and to decipher the black shadows on that huge face.

Balder said: "Let go that end. I'll give it another throw."

"You let go your end. I am nearest the stream."

For answer Balder's hand gripped the tree trunk tighter. Wilton noticed the bits of tinsel still wound about one dry stump of a limb.

"It's time that Christmas tree is thrown away," he said, realizing in the same instant that such comments could not but make his situation worse.

"It's my business, not yours. Turn around now."

"What for?" Wilton asked, trying to speak carelessly.

"Do as you're told," Balder roared.

Wilton's thoughts raced on. To make a sudden dart for liberty was impossible. The fellow could overtake him with three swings of his great legs; only strategy availed now.

Balder seated himself on a fallen limb, and, in this position, so steep was the cliff, he seemed almost hanging above Wilton's head. The latter thought best to drop the base; and he let it down gently so as not to jerk the trunk out of Balder's hand.

"Pleasant spot," Wilton remarked, "though it must have looked different the day the Bracebridge children were drowned."

A grunting voice came from above.

"This ain't an easy place to leave!"

"I mean to leave it."

"You do—do you?"

"Certainly. I must get back before dark."

"Suppose you never went back?"

"What do you mean?"

"Suppose you stayed here?"

"I have no intention of staying here." He spoke firmly, but his inner terror revealed to him at last what connection lay between his own imminent danger and a long-ago tragedy. The withered tree was the link—again to be an instrument of death. "Throw in your tree when you choose. I am going home."

Balder's laughter echoed even above the roar of the fall. "I weigh two hundred and ten pounds. I am six feet three in my socks. My muscle is iron. And you—you are just a schoolroom plant. I listened in at one of your teaching times. You said more about nothin' than any man I ever hear talk. You don't deserve to live, you don't!"

"And maybe I don't deserve to die any—more than—" he paused, then hurled his boomerang—"the Bracebridge children. Am I to have the same execution?"

He knew he had signed his own death warrant, but at least he could bring for one instant into stark daylight the suspected crime whose shadow lay along the corridors of Lostland academy and haunted its decaying rooms. The great face above him grew quite livid for an instant, but no rebound of denial came from his lips. When he spoke it was in a matter-of-fact and quiet way.

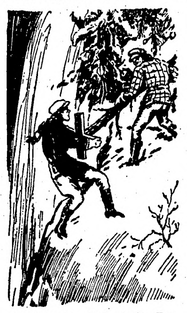
"You are, you know, interferin' with him. Nobody'll ever know what happened. No one saw you go up the ravine. Lord, it's easy to die in this gorge in winter. So many hundreds of ways of slippin' and fallin' that nobody'd think twice of how you cum to do it. You certainly was a fool to believe that note."

Balder was staring at him as if fascinated. "You'll never go back now," he muttered. "I wasn't sure what to do when I come up here. Now I know."

"You didn't dare burn that tree the day we were at the church. You had the key of the belfry room in your pocket; you didn't dare bring it down and burn it before Miss Bracebridge."

"How much is he going to give you for this job?"

The boldness of the question disturbed even Balder's poise. His snarl came slowly, uncertainly. "He don't make no bargains. He ain't open and square like that. He hints—walks all around his design, never comes out bold and free with it. But he pays high for little jobs—moving trunks or books—five hundred for moving his books after—"



At the Other End of the Tree Was Balder's Dark and Angry Face.

"After you struck one of the Bracebridge children with this weapon and cost the lives of the others," Wilton finished deliberately. He knew he had taken away forever his chance for life, but in this last grim hour it was a satisfaction to wring out the truth; and it comforted him to add to the indictment. "Your master, Haskell, never wanted to go with those four young people to protect them, but to steal up behind them as you did. He urged them not to tie themselves together in this Alpine game they were so fond of playing—he urged them—not for their safety; he knew their aversion to him, and knew they'd do exactly the opposite of what he told them."

Balder regarded him with round, ugly eyes in which a tiny gleam of admiration flickered. "You're a psycho—what? Mebbe there's somethin' in it. Mebbe it's gospel truth."

"And maybe it's gospel truth that when Jerry found you in the vegetable garden you had beaten him there by about twenty minutes, I calculate. And maybe it's gospel truth when he said, 'All four drowned,' you knew right away it was children—not sheep! You didn't ask one question!"

"You d—d spy, you! I knew you've been spyin' on us ever since the first afternoon when you walked in the evergreen walk with your cloak flyin'—like a great bat."

Dreaming

The problem of dreams is one concerning which scientists are not entirely in accord. Modern investigation of sleep indicates that special psychic forces do not operate in a dream nor does the entire activity of the brain rest during sleep, but it is always, perhaps with the exception of sound sleep, which lasts only a short time, only a part of the brain that rests. Some parts of the brain do not go to sleep but continue to work, especially after over-stimulation. There have been numerous instances where persons claim to have dreamed solutions to problems, which on awakening they found to be correct, but upon investigation it is believed that in such instances the subject was only in a partial state of sleep.

Cornstalk Fields May Kill Horses

Rotten and Molded Ears Are Dangerous as Feed for All Live Stock.

By Dr. Robert Graham, Chief in Animal Pathology and Hygiene, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Heavy death losses among horses and mules threaten the farmer who tries to save feed this winter by turning work stock out on cornstalk fields. It is true that feed supplies are the shortest on record. Unfortunately, however, it will be especially dangerous this year to try to get horses and mules through the winter by pasturing them on stalk fields. Some of the worst corn-ear-worm damage that the state has ever had, coupled with heavy rains, has caused much rotting and molding of the ears.

Reports are reaching the University of Illinois animal pathology laboratory of the widespread occurrence of a disease resembling the old-fashioned cornstalk disease so prevalent about 15 years ago. The malady, however, is not caused by eating the cornstalks but by consuming the low-quality corn. Cattle also seem to be susceptible to the disease, although not so much as horses and mules. Even horses pulling husking wagons have been known to develop the malady. Thus, farmers might well play safe by using nose baskets on the horses while they are being used in cornfields.

If cornstalks are used for feed, as they must be on many farms, hogs and cattle can be pastured in stalk fields with less danger than any other farm animals. Even then, the cattle should be pastured only a part of each day and thoroughly inspected each night for possible symptoms of the disease. When feeding the low-quality corn, farmers should hand-select the ears for horses, mules and cattle.

The first symptoms of the disease are likely to be nervousness, sluggishness or sleepiness on the part of the horse, although the symptoms are not easily detected without careful observation. When these mild symptoms do appear, however, a veterinarian should be called immediately, for only by prompt treatment in the early stages of the disease can the affected animals be saved. As the disease develops, the horses begin to walk in circles, stagger and press against their mangers or fences. These symptoms indicate a brain disturbance that is much easier to prevent than to cure.

This disease should not be confused with hydrocyanic acid poisoning which some farmers feared might develop from feeding drouth-damaged cornstalks, or from feeding frosted millet, sorghum or sudan grass.

Dairymen Take Interest When Records Are Kept

Dairymen members of the New York dairy record clubs make profitable use of their club records, says Prof. C. G. Bradt of the New York State College of Agriculture.

Returns from 165 club members indicate, he states, that the records lead to culling unprofitable cows, to more efficient feeding, and to the selection of the best calves for herd replacements. Sixty-five per cent of those who reported said that the milk they delivered at milk plants had shown, by tests there, a higher content of butterfat.

Club members also said they took greater interest in their cows because they kept records, and that the service saves waste on grain feeding, since cows are fed according to the amount of milk and butterfat they produce. The records of the clubs also helped dairymen to avoid the raising of calves from cows which were low in milk and butterfat production.

Sheltering Insects

"The farmer who shelters insects throughout the winter has only himself to blame if these pests board with him next summer," says J. H. Bigger, assistant state entomologist for Illinois. Burning fence rows on dry days, gathering up plant refuse and burning it, and in other ways destroying sheltering places will cut down on crop injury next year. In central Illinois there are large numbers of chinch bugs, and unless the winter is severe many of these are likely to live over if hiding places are available.

Proteins in Soy Beans

The live stock feeding value of soy beans is determined to a large extent by the type of protein which they contain and varies substantially for different varieties, chemists of the United States Department of Agriculture find. Preliminary tests showed, for example, that the Illini variety of soy bean has a protein which makes it valuable as a supplement for such feeds as corn and oats. To supplement such feeds as cowpeas, lentils, and peas, the Chiquita and Manchu soy beans contain the best protein.

Feeding Potatoes to Cattle

It makes little difference whether potatoes are cooked or fed raw to cattle. It is well to take the precaution, however, of slicing them to avoid the danger of choking, as cattle are apt to swallow potatoes or roots whole. Potatoes will not be quite as useful as turnips, though in small amounts they may replace the latter feed. Cows in milk should not be fed over 20 pounds per day, larger amounts tend to make poor quality of butter. Potatoes are not usually satisfactory horse food.

Introduction of Table Fork Aid to Cookery

We are told that not only fingers but knives and spoons were made before forks. While the use of the spoon and knife dates far back into antiquity, it was not until the early Sixteenth century that forks appeared upon the tables of the nobility of Italy.

The story goes that a woman of very dainty tastes, the wife of the doge of Venice, who would not soil her fingers with meat but conveyed bits of food to her mouth with a golden two-pronged fork of her own invention, was responsible for the first fork known to history.

From Italy forks were then introduced into England by a gentleman, Thomas Coryate, who had been favorably impressed by the Italian use of forks while on a visit to that country. The English, however, did not at first take kindly to the innovation, but looked on forks as an affectation of superiority. And there came a saying: "Who would make hay of his food and pitch it into his mouth with a fork?" But finally its very usefulness won for it a permanent place at the table.

Surely the fork has done a great deal to simplify and advance the art of cookery by encouraging the taste for solid foods and natural flavors. It has also made possible the serving of delicate slices of meat, and furthermore it promotes cleanliness at the table in contrast to the days when finger bowls were a dire necessity. It has also encouraged the use of finer table linens.

Some of the very first forks were really works of art. The three which Queen Elizabeth kept as curios were described as "one of crystal garnished with gold and sparks of garnets—another of coral slightly garnished with gold—and a third of gold, garnished with two little rubies, two pearl pendants and a coral."

History tells us that the first forks to be made in America were made by John Noyes of Boston, about 1705. These forks, which have silver handles and steel prongs, are now in the Boston museum. From these have evolved the common table forks which we today consider practically indispensable.

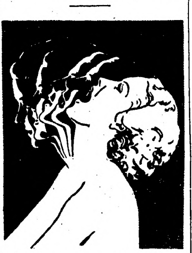
Chew for Beauty, Models Advised



Rythmic chewing, combined with exercises of the head and neck, was revealed recently at New York to 2,000 models, members of the Models' Guild, as the newest beauty formula. The advice came from a well-known specialist in response to a request from the guild for information regarding the system.

A dozen exercises are included in the complete routine. The instructions for the one illustrated: "Start with chewing gum—one or two sticks. After a few seconds, begin the exercise by tossing the head from side to side. Then open your mouth as wide as you can. Close it gradually, and all the while endeavor to chew your gum."

This exercise is designed to tone the muscles of the chin and lower jaw. Others promote a fine neckline and beautiful cheeks.

Concrete Corduroyed

Even in these days of progress, state road builders are forced to make concessions to the horse which still plays a leading role in the activities of some farmers. In Herkimer county, New York, for instance, in the construction of concrete roads, provision has been made for horse traffic over the roads. Much of the milk is drawn from the farms, high up in the hills of the Mohawk valley. The concrete, especially near the crest of hills where the pitch is steep, requires special treatment to prevent slipping. For the benefit of the horses, the concrete is scored for fairly long distances to provide a foothold for the animals. The appearance of the concrete in these sections is somewhat like corduroy.

FILM'S VALUE, IN RECORD OF LIFE, IS BEYOND PRICE

When a race or tribe dies out, the record of its habits often dies with it. There may be left buildings or pottery or drawings, if not writings, from which archeologists can piece together some picture of what these lost peoples were like in their daily life. But the picture is incomplete, perhaps fragmentary. The lost races remain remote and unreal. The archeologist is now to find a new ally in the film—or, rather, archeologists in days to come will find themselves served by films made in our time of peoples who are now disappearing and who will soon be beyond record. The congress of anthropologists which has just been meeting in London has decided to set up a permanent committee to supervise the "film documentation" of races which are in danger of dying out. The committee will have two main duties. First, it will try to bring together what materials of the kind already exist—often, as they say, "in the most unlikely places, news reels, tropical films, etc.," as a sort of central film reference library. The second duty is to send out expeditions to places where the native inhabitants are in danger of disappearing or of being absorbed in other groups, or to advise travelers visiting such places on the way to make a film record of scientific value. One must not expect too much from the idea, attractive as it is, of sending out special expeditions in search of suitable material. The committee's resources will no doubt be small, and it might vitiate the scientific value of the pictures taken if they had to pay for them themselves by sale for popular exhibition. But there is sound work to be done on less exacting lines. One might add the suggestion that it is not only the manners of vanishing peoples which should be recorded but the many vanishing customs of peoples whose survival depends on their adapting themselves to new ways of life.—Manchester (Eng.) Bread and Butter 8¢
Maple Chocolate Ice Cream 32¢
Demi-Tasse 3¢

Chili Bean Pot: Melt one tablespoon fat in a heavy pot, add one-half pound stewing beef cut in very small cubes, and cook until well browned. Add one-fourth minced clove garlic, salt and pepper to taste and one and one-half teaspoons chili powder. Add two cups water, cover and simmer gently for an hour and a half, or until tender. Smooth one tablespoon flour with a little water and add to slightly thicken. Add the contents of one 15½-ounce can of red kidney beans, and simmer for about fifteen minutes longer.

Maple Chocolate Ice Cream: Beat two eggs and add one-half tablespoon flour mixed with two tablespoons sugar. Melt one square of chocolate, add four tablespoons cold water and stir until smooth. Add one cup of evaporated milk which has been scalded and pour into the egg mixture. Cook slowly in a double boiler until thick, stirring constantly. Cool, add one-half cup maple syrup and one-half cup of cream which has been whipped. Freeze in refrigerator trays.*

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

The bath room is one of the most dangerous rooms in a home In it we have a combination of hazards that invite accidents and many times fatal injuries.

I call your attention to the following hazards. Slipping and falling while getting in and out of the bath tub, burns and scalds from hot water, and electric shock.

The hazard of electric shock is the most important one. Never touch electrical equipment while the body is wet. When using electrical equipment be sure that the wires do not come in contacn with the bathtub. Electrical fixtures should be properly installed, should be of high grade material, and should be inspected frequently.

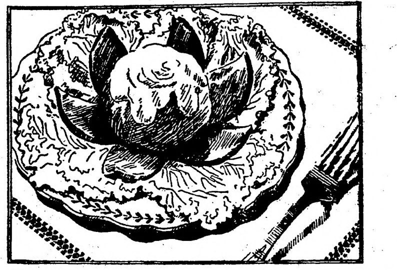
Party Peas

PLAY-BOYS and party-girls are these familiar peas which you have probably been accustomed to think of as home-bodies. True they are at home on the every-day dinner table, but they are equally dashing and debonair in party guise. Serve them, then, in some of these attractive dishes at your various Christmas week parties.

Christmas Candle Salad: Cut tops from six very small tomatoes, or six canned Love Apples, remove centers, drain well and dust insides with salt. Mix one-half cup finely chopped celery with one-fourth cup mayonnaise and mix one-half cup canned peas with one-fourth cup mayonnaise. Choose firm, sturdy asparagus tips from a 10½-ounce can, and stand one upright in each tomato candlestick, packing around first with celery, then with peas to make it steady. Have the green peas on top to show. Put a small piece of pimiento on the tip of each stalk to resemble the flame. Place in the center of watercress wreaths on salad plates and serve with tiny lemon sandwiches. This serves six persons.

Trusty Tomatoes



TRUSTY tomatoes are old friends—tried and true—and the longer one knows them the more fine things one discovers about them. That is the reason the tomato canning industry has grown 100 per cent. in the last twenty-two years.

Long ago, people found out tomatoes were appetizing and good. Then they found out they were healthful. When decorative tables came into vogue, tomatoes were discovered to be one of the most decorative of foods. And, recently, science has discovered an additional health value to the many already established ones in tomatoes—the fact that they not only contain an abundance of iron but they contain a vitamin which aids in getting iron from other foods.

And, every day, dietitians are discovering delectable new ways to serve tomatoes.

A Tested Recipe

Tomato Rarebit with Eggs: Stew three cups of canned tomatoes, one-fourth teaspoon soda, one and one-half teaspoons salt and one-fourth teaspoon pepper for five minutes. Press through a sieve. Add three tablespoons of flour and three tablespoons of cold water smoothed together, and stir until it thickens. Add one and one-half cups of grated cheese, and stir until melted. Slice eight hard-cooked eggs over buttered toast and pour over the sauce. This serves eight persons.*

Better Breakfasts

BREAKFAST mustn't be dull. Most anything else is countenanced today, in a person, a play, a book, a meal—but it must not be dull. And that goes particularly for the morning meal, when we are anything but bright and dazzling, anyway. We need foods as gay and stimulating as possible in a breakfast.

Good coffee is one of the chief requisites for a stimulating breakfast. You will find vacuum-packed coffee makes a delicious brew.

Plan these attractive breakfasts, then. Keep a little book in your desk to jot down bright ideas—and then combine them as you choose. Here is a suggestion worth adding to your collection:

Orange Juice
Oatmeal with Cream
Soft Boiled Eggs
Apple Cornmeal Muffins
Coffee

Apple Cornmeal Muffins: Beat one egg well and add one-half cup diluted evaporated milk. Add the following sifted dry ingredients: two-thirds cup cornmeal, one-half cup flour, two and one-half teaspoons baking powder, one-half teaspoon salt and two tablespoons sugar, then two tablespoons melted butter. Beat well and add one-half cup finely chopped apples. Bake in greased muffin pans in a hot oven—400 degrees—for twenty to twenty-five minutes. Makes about seven muffins.*

Look out! That is all we can say in giving the people here a warning against getting run over by some of the large trucks that are speeding thru town here loaded to the limit with ice which they are hauling thru to other towns from Thief River Falls. Warn your children to be on the lookout for them when they cross the highway on the way to school.

The recounting of ballots in the contest of state auditor will be finished shortly. Thus far the recount has given State Auditor King a small gain. Farmer-Labor faithful, it is said, are giving their services in the recount in the hope of receiving a small pittance for their work but it is doubtful if even that will be forthcoming.

The way the new tax rates read for Holt and Middle River for the coming year, you would think that the two places were running some kind of a contest to see which one of the two was going to have the highest rate in the state. Holt has a tax rate of 261.12 mills and Middle River has 202.22 mills.

To Give Radio Talk Monday

Clifford W. Bouvette, Supervisor of the Census, in charge of the 9th Congressional district, has been authorized to speak in behalf of the Administration over KSTP of St. Paul at 12:30 noon, Thursday, Jan. 10th and over WDAY of Fargo at 7:10 p. m., Monday, Jan. 14th.

Commenting with Mr. Bouvette concerning the nature of his address, he advised a representative for this paper that his talk would deal entiirely with census matters, the reason for taking same and would otherwise dispense facts concerning the census which is of vital and important interest to farmers.

It is suggested that all farmers living in this county keep the hours of these broadcasts in mind and tune in to hear what Mr Botvette has to say.

There are approximately ,2000 applications on file for appointment, whereas the field force requires approximately the appointment of 300 enumerators. Under the terms of a ruling established by the Census Department, enumeaators must be actual residents of farms, Mr. Bouvette said. Other rulings do not permit the appointment of farmers who hold positions as town clerks, assesors or members of county boards. He stated appoinement would have to be made adhering strictly to these rulings.

The Legislature In Session

The Legislature meets only in the odd numbered year. This is the state's forty-ninth, although it had eight other legislative sessions as a territory. It is limited by law to 90 legislative days which will draw out the session for four calendar months and bring final adjournment late in April. The Legislature consists of 131 House members and 67 members of the Senate, all of whom, strange as it may seem, are entitled to be called Honorable. Each member gets $1,000 for the two year period; believe it or not, that's all he gets; being a member of the Legislature isn't what it used to be. About 3,000 bills will be introduced of which perhaps 400 will get to be laws; if we may believe what many critics of law-making seriously say, this is about 390 too many. Some six or seven, maybe a dozen, state-wide laws of major importance will come out of the session; most of the rest will be local bills or minor amendments of existing laws. The session, if it follows recent precedent, will cost between $400,000 and $500,000. If this distresses any taxpayer, let him consider the New York Legislature which has the same number of members, sits for the same length of time, costs $2,000,000 and will repeat the performance next year when the Minnesota Legislature is taking a complete rest; praise the Lord.

500 Drivers Get Tags

Nearly 500 motorists driving on state highways with improper lights were tagged by the state highway patrol in the past week, says a highway department bulletin.

Three hundred drivers were given tickets for having only one headlight, and 140 others were nabbed because their tail lights were out. Of the 440 total cases for the week, the following disposition was made:

350 were required to go directly to garages and have their lights put in proper condition.

35 cases resulted in immediate arrest of the drivers.

55 were given 48 hours in which to have lights corrected.

The Weather

The weather the past week has been on the mild order. We have had a few snow flurries and a little wind. Wednesday we got another snow fall and we are now hoping that it will thaw before it gets a chance to blow and pile up in drifts.

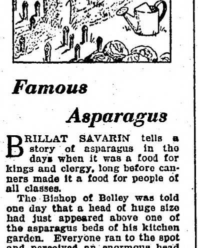
Support For Schools

During the campaign last fall, and since, demands were voiced for state school support to the amount of $25 per public school pupil. Those who made the demand may have thought that they were hitching their wagon to a star, but were they? On the basis of 560,000 public school children this demand would require state aid to the public schools to the grand amount of $14,000,000 annually.

The Legislature is now appropriating aprroximately $6,500,000 to the public schools of the state. Interest on the state school fund, distributed pro rata, amounts to about $2,500,000 per year and is steadily increasing. The public schools received in 1934 a total of $1,900,000 from the new income tax. These amounts total almost $11,000,000. In a normal year, receipts from the occupation and royalty taxes will add another $2,000,000, bring the total almost to the $25 per capita asked for.

It is even possible that the $25 per capita will be exceeded in 1935, for many business men confidently predict that income tax returns, all of which go to the public schools, will be doubled this year.

Few states in the Union have mude such strides toward equalizing educational opportunity and the burden of educational support as has Minnesota.



Famous Asparagus

BRILLAT SAVARIN tells a story of asparagus in the days when it was a food for kings and clergy, long before canners made it a food for people of all classes.

The Bishop of Belley was told one day that a head of huge size had just appeared above one of the asparagus beds of his kitchen garden. Everyone ran to the spot and perceived an enormous head that gave promise of an asparagus the size of a column. For days the asparagus continued to grow and the bishop gave order to the cutler to make a knife big enough for cutting the monster stalk.

Came the Day

When the appointed day for cutting came, a feast was held, after which the bishop advanced, knife in hand, and followed by the guests. To the surprise of everyone the knife would not cut. The asparagus was a wooden one. The joke had been played by a wood turner in the village, who carved the asparagus and each day stole into the garden and lifted up the imitation asparagus little by little to imitate the nocturnal growth.

Today canners have found a way of packing even mammoth asparagus tips, so they come to us even more tender in the can than from the garden. And dietitians have devised these delicacies.

Asparagus in Lemon Rings: Remove asparagus carefully from two tall cans of asparagus, and place in a large flat skillet. Heat in its own juice. When ready to serve, slip four or five stalks through lemon rings and pour Hollandaise Sauce over the tips. This serves eight persons.

French Asparagus Salad: Drain and chill the contents of a 15-ounce can of asparagus tips, then arrange on crisp romaine. Chop finely one-half of a 4-ounce can of pimientos and add with two tablespoons [illegible] to one-third cup French dressing. Pour over the salad and serve very cold. This serves six persons.*

To Start Work Next Spring

"Work on the 75,000 acre Mud Lake restoration project in north western Minnesota with the aid of Federal funds is assured this spring as soon as weather permits," E. W. Younghahl, Engineer for the Division of Game and Fish, said. Surveys of the area are now practically completed, according to Mr. Youngdahl.

Members of the Minnesota Conservation Commission are cooperating with officials of the United States Bureau of Biological Survey in pushing the project to as early completion as possible.

"Mud Lake is a great breeding ground for migratory waterfowl," John R. Foley, Commission Chairman, pointed out. "It once had the three requisites for waterfowl existence. Prairie grasses offered the highest type of nesting cover. Many nearby lakes and potholes formerly afforded unlimited food and security. Isolation was sufficient with natural enemies few and casual. Man and weather have combined to destroy the conditions which once attracted wild waterfowl by the thousands.

"We are gratified that this area is being included in the Wild Life restoration program of the national government."

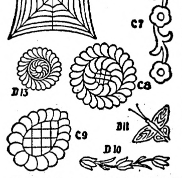
Get Perfect Quilt With This Design

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



The quilting on a patchwork quilt may make or ruin the entire work, if the design and work is not done neatly. Beauty in the design is necessary, but the needlework and evenness of the stitches bring out the design, and if done right the result will be perfect and always admired. Needleworkers know the best way to transfer a design to cloth is through a perforated pattern. The design is perfectly drawn and perforated so that each stamping is alike and requires very little time. The stamping powder can be brushed off when work is finished, leaving no lines or marks.

Package No. 33B shown above contains seven actual size patterns, perforated on bond paper, also blue powder for stamping and full instructions just how to do it.

Pattern D 12—10 inch Spider Web is suitable for the center of the Wedding Ring Quilt. The outer lines may be omitted if a smaller size is wanted. D 11 is a 4 inch Butterfly Motif suitable for corners. D 10 is a 1½ inch Tulip Border. D 13—5 inch Feather Circle. C 7 a 2¼ inch Floral border and corner. C 8—7½ inch Feather Circle. C 9—6½ by 8 inch Pineapple motif. These patterns can be used singly or in combination, and can be used many times. If they interest you, send 15c to our Quilting department, and these seven patterns will be sent you by return mail.

Grasshoppers Increase

One result of the years of depression has been to increase the grasshopper population. Three species have been entrenching themselves in the West during the past years when state finances were too low to fight the pest. Last year in North Dakota alone the damage amounted to more than $10,000,000.

Towns Have Many Autos

It has been found that it is in small towns of 1,000 to 5,000 people that the largest number of cars is owned in proportion to the population. The percentage is least in towns of 50,000 to 100,000.

INTERNATIONAL ARMY IN THE SAAR—COLD SHOULDER FOR ELECTRIC POWER PEOPLE.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

SOLDIERS from Great Britain, Italy Sweden and Holland, to the number of 3,300, under the command of Maj. J. E. S. Brind, a British veteran of several wars, marched into the Saar from north and south with flying colors, and were stationed at strategic points throughout the area, prepared to maintain order until after the plebiscite of January 13 which will determine whether the Saar shall again become a part of Germany or remain under control of the League of Nations. The arrival of the troops was watched by the league authorities with considerable anxiety for there had been fears that Nazi enthusiasts there might cause trouble. But the inhabitants of the basin remained quiet, none of them showing either enmity or enthusiasm for the league's armed forces.

Major Brind

Under the terms of the treaty of Versailles any person living in the Saar at the time of the signing of the treaty is eligible to vote in the plebiscite, and the Nazis of Germany made great efforts to gather as many of their adherents as possible from other lands to which they had migrated. From the United States 352 Saar Germans traveled back to their old home aboard the liner Bremen, and were welcomed with feasts, as was another large contingent from South America. The German government denied that it was paying the expenses of these voters from abroad, asserting they were financed by private donations.

PEACE in central Europe was promoted by two events. The Jugoslavian cabinet resigned and a new cabinet was formed with Bogoljub Yevtitch as premier. As foreign minister he had conducted the case of his country against Hungary before the League of Nations and accepted the compromise decision, and he is a close friend of Prince Paul, head of the regency, who is inclined to a moderate course.

The Austrian government refused the extradition to France of Colonel Perchevich, Croat exile, who was accused, along with Dr. Ante Pavelich, of instigating the assassination of King Alexander in Marseilles. Italy had previously refused the extradition of Pavelich. It is said in informed quarters that further examination of these two men would have revealed facts that would have endangered peace in Europe.

IF ANY doubt existed that Japan would denounce the Washington naval treaty, it was dissipated by the action of the privy council. That powerful body of statesmen, meeting with all ceremony, unanimously recommended abrogation of the pact to Emperor Hirohito, whose speedy approval was given.

Baron Kiichiro Hiranuma, vice president of the council, read the report to the emperor and afterward said to the press: "The imperial government desires continuation of clauses of the Washington treaty relating to limitation of fortifications and naval bases in the Pacific ocean, but, if such clauses are terminated, the government is prepared to cope with the situation."

In plain words, then, Japan wants equality on the high seas with the United States and Great Britain, but wants the United States to remain restricted as to its Pacific ocean defenses.

SENATORIAL investigators of munitions and the War department clashed when Clark of Missouri suggested, in a committee hearing, that the war mobilization plans of the department, long held secret, should be laid before congress in peace time to be debated at leisure. He held that, under the army's plan, the eight bills embodying the scheme to mobilize the nation's resources would be rushed to congress to "pass under whip and spur" without proper consideration.

War department witnesses replied that the war policies commission believed certain legislation might be held unconstitutional in peace time but legal in a war emergency.

Senator Clark also sought to learn what degree of control was contemplated by the "censorship" plan of the army. This calls for an administrator of public relations who would mobilize "all existing mediums of publicity so that they may be employed to the best possible advantage." He also would be charged with co-ordinating publicity, combating disaffection at home and enemy propaganda, "establishing rules and regulations for censorship" and "enlisting and supervising a voluntary censorship of the newspaper and periodical press."

Lieutenant Colonel C. T. Harris of the army said he never heard of a plan to license the press.

The eight bills which the army has ready for presentation in case of war would authorize a military draft, permit government control of material resources and speedy condemnation of property needed in the war, set up a system of marine and war risk insurance and create an administration over war trade, a war finance corporation and a committee to supervise capital issues.

COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH, by his flights across Arctic regions in 1933, has enabled the Department of Agriculture to demonstrate conclusively that the spores of plant disease can be borne on remote air currents.

With a spore trap of his own devising, which he called "the skyhook," Colonel Lindbergh obtained specimens which confirmed the previous theories of government experts that plant diseases may be carried even across continents by air currents.

That was announced by Fred C. Meier, the department expert who interested Colonel Lindbergh in the work.

Colonel Lindbergh devised his "the skyhook," a light, strong contrivance, easy to operate and well adapted to protecting sterile glass slides from contamination except for the time they were exposed. Mr. Meier prepared the slides and has examined and photographed them. He credits Colonel Lindbergh with careful work.

JOSEPH BROWN SANBORN, wartime commander of the One Hundred Thirty-first infantry, formerly the Illinois "Dandy First," and wearer of six war decorations from four nations, died in Chicago at his home. He held the rank of lieutenant general, retired, in the Illinois state guard.

As commander of the One Hundred Thirty-first regiment Sanborn was extraordinarily active, though then sixty-three years old. He distinguished himself on the British front.

AFTER winning the handicap prize in the England-to-Melbourne air race, the giant American-built plane Uiver, pride of the Royal Dutch Air Lines, started on a speed flight from Amsterdam to Batavia, Java, with seven persons aboard. During a thunderstorm it crashed in the desert ten miles from Rutba Wells, Irak, and burned to cinders, all its occupants perishing.

ELECTRIC utility companies of the United States, worried by the power program of the New Deal, appealed to President Roosevelt to abandon the movement toward public ownership which threatens, they say, to deprive millions of security holders of their savings. The plea was presented to the President personally by Thomas N. McCarter, president of the Edison Electric institute. That gentleman promised that the utilities would effect the reforms in financing that Mr. Roosevelt has called for, and then requested that the government join with the institute in a suit to test the constitutionality of the Tennessee Valley authority.

T. N. McCarter

In the memorial he handed to the President, Mr. McCarter gave it as his own opinion that the government in the TVA experiment is exceeding its constitutional powers and infringing the sovereign rights of the state. He cited the joint opinion of Newton D. Baker, Democrat, and James M. Beck, Republican, that TVA is unconstitutional and the "similar conclusion" of Unietd States Judge W. I. Grubb in a recent decision.

Mr. Roosevelt turned the memorial over to Frank R. McNinsh, chairman of the federal power commission, and he and his aids speedily prepared a sharp reply rejecting the proposal of co-operation in carrying the matter to the Supreme court.

"In all the history of the American people," it said, "no parallel for such a proposal can be found. . . . The call is not for the government to halt, but for the industry to catch step and move forward along progressive lines."

"The Edison Electric Institute has, of course," it continued, "a legal right to promote litigation to test the act creating the Tennessee Valley Authority or any substantial progress toward placing the industry on a sound and permanent basis until it cleans its own house, reduces excessive rates to consumers and eliminates the malpractice and abuses which are responsible for its present condition."

Attacking McCarter's contention that rates are reasonable, Mr. McNinch said Canadians pay on an average 2 1-5 cents for a kilowatt hour, while Americans pay 5½ cents. He said the Canadian figures cover public and private plants, the latter supplying "46 per cent of the consumers."

"It is the purpose of the administration," he set forth, "to narrow this excessive gap between what the consumer pays for electricity in this country and what Canada has proved it can be generated and sold for. This program does not involve either 'destructive competition or strangulation'."

DR. HUGH S. MAGILL, president of the American Federation of Utility Investors, entered the utility controversy with a hot attack on the federal trade commission, charging that it is throwing out a smoke screen to befog the public mind in its desire to win approval for the entry of the federal government into the electric light and power business through such efforts as the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The smoke screen, he declared, was the pronouncement of the commission to the effect that public utility companies had boosted pre-depression prices in a market in which investors afterward lost millions of dollars.

BUSINESS leaders of the country who met in conference at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., drew up a long list of things they want the government to do or not to do, and then created a "business conference committee" that will have headquarters in Washington and maintain "liaison" with the administration.

The conference's recommendations to the government are phrased in inoffensive language and the idea is conveyed that the business men earnestly desire to co-operate rather than criticize. The things they ask are substantially the same as those sought by the National Association of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, previously summarized in this column. The essence of it all is that government should attend more to its traditional functions and permit business to put men and capital back to work.

CHRISTMAS in the White House was a season of jollity and noise, especial attention being given to the entertainment of the younger members of the large house party. First, on Christmas eve, the President lighted the community Christmas tree in Lafayette park, and then he read Dickens' "Christmas Carol" to the assembled family. Early next morning the children gathered in Mr. Roosevelt's room and opened their gifts, and then had a frolic around the tree in the upstairs corridor.

Mrs. Elizabeth Donner Roosevelt of Philadelphia, former wife of Elliott Roosevelt, was a guest at the White House with her small son, William Donner Roosevelt.

MARTIN J. INSULL, brother of Samuel, was given a Christmas present by a Chicago jury in the form of a verdict of not guilty of embezzlement from the Middle West Utilities company. The money, $344,720, was used, according to the prosecution, in a desperate effort to recoup Insull's personal losses in the stock market.

FOR the first time the RFC has undertaken the management of a railroad. John W. Barriger, chief examiner for the interstate commerce commission, announced that nominees of the RFC would be placed in charge of operation of the Denver & Salt Lake railway, which has received large loans from the government agency.

The railway is a short road which has leased for 50 years the railroad bore of the Moffat tunnel from the Moffat Tunnel Improvement district.

GOVERNMENT ownership of the arms and ammunition industry was vigorously opposed by the War department in a prepared statement submitted to the senate munitions committee.

Several of the committee members have proposed such a course as a means of "taking the profit out of war." The War department contended that such a policy would fail in war and therefore does not appear logical in peace, but its statement added that it does not oppose in any way a program of licensing the munitions industry.

CARRYING on its anti-crime campaign, the Department of Justice caused the indictment and jailing of two attorneys on charges of complicity in the kidnaping of C. F. Urschel, Oklahoma oil magnate, in 1933. The two men represented the defendants in the kidnap trial. They are James C. Mathers of Oklahoma and Ben Laska, veteran member of the Denver bar. The men are charged specifically with handling part of the $200,000 ransom loot that went to Albert Bates, one of the actual kidnapers, who is now serving a life term at Alcatraz island prison.

ARMY and navy officers are concerned by the attempts of Communists to spread dissatisfaction, mutiny and rebellion among the armed forces of the nation, and have asked the house committee on un-American activities to approve a law permitting punishment of those who urge any soldier or sailor to violate his oath of allegiance.

Commander V. L. Kirkman of the navy told the committee that the Communists' campaign was planned and supervised from headquarters in New York city, and he submitted a number of pamphlets and leaflets circulated in the navy which, he said, "actually incite to mutiny, sabotage and assassination." He described how the propaganda work is carried on, good looking girls taking an active part.

FINAL estimates of this year's crops, just released by the Department of Agriculture, show that agricultural wealth, based on farm prices December 1 of the five leading grain crops, exceeded that of last year by $314,000,000, despite the fact that total production of these crops was 1,248,000,000 bushels less than in 1933 and the smallest in 40 years.

MRS. MARY HARRIMAN RUMSEY, who fought valiantly but not altogether successfully to protect the interests of the consumers against the contentions of industry and labor, is dead in Washington. Always interested in sociology and public affairs, this daughter of E. H. Harriman and inheritor of some of his millions, took an active part in promoting the New Deal and was made head of the National consumers' board of the NRA.

Two men of note who died were Eugene R. Black, former governor of the federal reserve board, and Martin W. Littleton, New York lawyer, who appeared in many sensational cases and for a time served as congressman.

Substitute for Oranges

If you want to make a delicious marmalade but find that oranges are too expensive, substitute carrots. Grate the carrots and use the pulp the same as the orange pulp. Any good marmalade recipe can be used. There is only one thing to remember: If a large proportion of carrots is used, use a little less sugar.

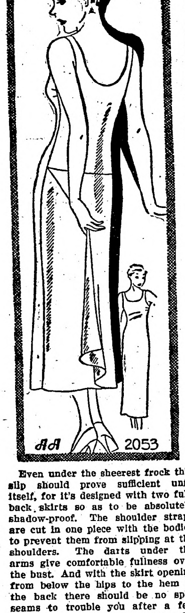
TRIM SLIP HAS SPECIAL POINTS

PATTERN 2053



Even under the sheerest frock this slip should prove sufficient unto itself, for it's designed with two full, back skirts so as to be absolutely shadow-proof. The shoulder straps are cut in one piece with the bodice to prevent them from slipping at the shoulders. The darts under the arms give comfortable fullness over the bust. And with the skirt opening from below the hips to the hem at the back there should be no split seams to trouble you after a few weeks' wear. It's a lovely design for satin or heavy crepe, and if you would like something a little more feminine, why not add lace edging at the hem and the neckline?

Pattern 2053 is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, and 48. Size 34 takes 3⅝ yards 39 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

—24—

"You talk as if the establishment down there wouldn't set anybody spying." The psychologist in him was uppermost now, obliterating even his sense of danger in the effort to track down the curious states of mind of Gordon Haskell and his confederate. "And when I find an old Christmas tree in its stand carefully preserved behind a locked door, I know that fear is back of its being there. You were afraid to burn it! Somebody might be looking on, and you were afraid they would see in your face that this tree is 'a horrible tree—a tree of death.' Oh, a murderer is always seeing trifles as huge signposts. The universe is one great eye, and the eye is on him. You bring it down with its flag on—because you don't dare not to notice it when Jerry is with you. If you're careless toward that tree—if you leave it up here, its very look will tell some passer-by there's something wrong with it."

Balder grunted. "You know a lot—you do!"

"Yes—I know that undiscovered murderers can poison the very air about them. The infection of smallpox would be light in comparison, People weren't afraid of those figures. They were afraid of what they stood for—horror and a strange, hidden killing, and a wrecking of all the joy and innocence of life."

"Ya-ah! You've talked too much! You'll never talk again!" He rose slowly; then, with a spring like a jungle beast, he leaped for his prey. Wilton had already calculated that he had but one chance for life—to face his foe, never taking his eyes from him, and, when he sprang, to dodge him with the hundredth chance of himself hurling Balder into the whirlpool. As the huge creature jumped, Wilton dodged. Balder had over-calculated the width of the ledge and landed on its extreme ice-covered edges. He slipped, and for a fraction of time performed a strange, wild piroutte, his long arms like the huge wings of a sawmill in motion. Then, with a shriek that echoed and re-echoed between the black walls of the gorge, he plunged into the whirl. His great body was swung around and around like a cork for a moment, then disappeared. Shouts at the same moment reverberated above the roar of the fall.

"Wilton! Wilton!"

Wilton had suddenly sunk down on the rock, feeling faint, not really sure that Balder had been gulped down the black, icy throat of the whirl. He turned his head and saw Arthur and Jerry hurrying up.

"Thank God, we're not too late."

"Too late!" he pointed to the whirl. "He's gone—there's no getting him out of there now!"

"You don't want him out, do you?"

"He sprang at me—he meant—to throw me in."

"That's plain enough. We saw it all! We came up like mad—nearly fell in ourselves once."

"How on earth did you track me up here?"

"You dropped this," he held out the note. "I missed you by five minutes. This bit of paper was lying near the gate. Looked to me like Berenice's handwriting—and I couldn't help but read it. I went in and asked Jerry if you had gone to the whirl, because it seemed strange to me! Berenice is sick in bed with a cold."

"'The whirl!' I says," broke in Jerry. "'No man in his senses would go up that ravine in dead of winter—It's known to be dangerous.'"

"'A man in love might,' I told Jerry, but as it happens Miss Bracebridge couldn't keep this appointment, if it's a genuine one."

"I knowed it wasn't when I read the bit of paper. It had a queer, fishy look to me. I says to your friend, 'Miss Berenice never wrote this note.'"

"Who did, then?" Wilton broke in.

"I asked that same question," said Arthur. "Jerry wanted to know if I had seen Balder anywhere, and then we both agreed that, whoever wrote the note, only Balder could keep an appointment at the whirl. Haskell has never been up the ravine since the Bracebridge children were drowned there, Jerry tells me. We decided at once to come to the mouth of the gorge and look for footprints. We both felt that if Balder had decoyed you up there with a fake note, it was for nothing short of murder. We found the prints at once—Balder's huge footsteps, and the smaller ones we knew were yours. Then we hurried like mad."

Wilton grasped their hands. "God bless you! I made him know I knew—that he had killed the Bracebridge children!"

His two companions gasped.

"There's his weapon! He never denied the charge. There's his weapon!" He pointed to the tree. Jerry and Arthur gazed in horror at it.

"I always knew somethin' was wrong," Jerry muttered.

"He struck me first with the base—against the shoulder; but I slipped on the ice and the blow glanced off. You can picture him when all the foliage was on these trees, darting out against those innocents with all his great strength to shove them over! Well—he has paid. The man—back of Balder—hasn't paid."

Jerry took a step toward Arthur. His kindly face was stern and solemn. "Is his name—Gordon Haskell?"

"Who else—unless Balder lied? He told me."

"Come straight back to the farm," Jerry commanded, cutting him short. "We've got to talk. And we can't talk against this fall. No use lookin' there," he added as Wilton glanced fearfully down at the whirl. "They never come up under twelve or eighteen hours—he can swing around and around until mornin'. I'm the sheriff of this lonesome county, and the coroner of this neglected township, and I'll take down your deposition by a hot fire. . . . Balder," he added solemnly, "You jumped too far and too fast."

It was twilight when they reached the farm. Jerry made some steaming coffee, and over a red-hot stove, Wilton told the whole story from his first suspicions of Haskell to the conversation with Balder above the whirl. "Now," he concluded, "is there the slightest chance of bringing this man to justice?"

Jerry, rocking in his chair, the big gray cat on his lap, pondered the question. "No, there ain't!" he answered at last. "Not the ghost of a shadow. First place, he's probably—just what Balder says—an evader. He was angry with those children; he wanted power, money."

"Great Caesar!" Wilton ejaculated suddenly, "Arthur, do you remember what I told you about the diary; and the sums of money stolen—and Doctor Bracebridge suspecting Balder?"

"Why, yes—"

"Suppose it was not Balder after all—Haskell was the doctor's secretary, had constant access to the desk in the library, where money had to be kept for the servants' pay and other expenses."

"What's this—what's this about a diary?" Jerry asked.

Wilton related what Berenice had requested him to do, and of his reading of her father's journal. "And the thief was never found," he added.

He Plunged Into the Whirl.

Jerry was looking from one to the other in astonishment. "Things come risin' up in my memory—things I'd clean forgot; I heard about them robberies at the time. I remember now—an incident just before the accident—murder, we'll call it."

"And what was this incident?" Arthur asked.

"I was down with a load of apples to the academy. Little Norman was in the kitchen, and I remember sayin' to him, 'Caught the thief yet?' He answered up right bright and smart, 'I caught him red-handed this mornin'. We'll have fun with him now. We're goin' to keep him on the rack a bit, before we tell!' Then he laughed and ran off. I says to the servant, 'Is it true Norman's caught the thief?' She laughed and said she guessed Norman was stringin' me. Haskell was passin' the kitchen entrance, and I says to him 'Norman says he caught the thief red-handed.' I remember he gave me an awful stare. 'He's a little liar,' he says, his face queer and white. The girl she looked after him and laughed. 'He hates 'em. He'd like to kill 'em—all four of 'em!'"

A profound silence followed this reminiscence—then Wilton spoke. "Do you think he—did this awful crime because he was afraid, saw his finish when Norman found him—if he did find him—with his hand on the money till? Even so, the child might have been very much mistaken as to the meaning of the incident. Doctor Bracebridge probably sent Haskell as his secretary many times to unlock the money drawer in the desk. We can't say certainly that Haskell was the thief and had four children killed to protect himself."

"No more than we can prove," Arthur interposed, "that Balder committed the murder at the instigation of Haskell—and not for his own terrible satisfaction."

Fireless Cookers Not Now

Pits which had been used as fireless cookers some 25,000 years ago by the inhabitants of what is now Arizona were uncovered by an expedition from the University of Arizona. They were five feet deep and the same in diameter. Evidently a fire was built in the bottom of the pit and after it died down hot rocks were placed on the bottom. A layer of greens came next followed by the food to be cooked with a final layer of greens for a covering.

Insect Smugglers at Work

Parasites That Prey on Plants, the Foundation of Some of Our Great Agricultural Interests, Deliberately Introduced Here.

A new and terrible—perhaps to be finally disastrous for man—kind of warfare has begun, with weapons more heinous than lethal gases or saw-edged bayonets. The armament consists of deadly insects and plant diseases deliberately introduced into the United States by, in most cases, interests callously unconcerned about final effects on the country and the world, and in at least a few instances by others intent on injuring certain successful American agricultural industries.

Recently, an inspector of the United States Department of Agriculture's plant quarantine service found in the mail from Europe a parcel containing half of a round cheese, destined to an address near an important American vineyard. Noting some unusual round paraffin spots on the exterior, the outer portion of these areas was removed, disclosing a cavity stopped by paraffin plugs. Within were seven grape cuttings, themselves well coated with paraffin, presumably to protect the noxious living things within.

This instance is only one of a number in which either ignorant or designing persons or interests have attempted to introduce into American vineyards insects or plant diseases which might, the entomologists assert, result in seriously injuring the American wine grape vines.

With mankind already fighting a battle against insects, and only succeeding at best in holding certain insects in check, never really eradicating them when once they are established in a country, inspectors of the United States plant quarantine service are inclined to classify as traitors to the human race both those who deliberately attempt to smuggle infested or infected plant materials for pecuniary gain and those who, as cranks or representatives of insidious "interests," have as the objective the injuring of specific agricultural industries.

Naturally, there are many "innocent" attempts to pass the protective plant quarantine system. But through the year, almost every week, there have been interceptions in which there was incontrovertible evidence of deleberate intent to injure American agriculture.

There recently arrived at the post office in Boston from St. Kitts, a British West Indian island, a peculiar-looking package which aroused the suspicions of the inspectors, who called in the quarantine officer. The package was opened and a single sweet potato was found in it. Since the United States does not need to import sweet potatoes, and certainly not in single potato lots, the suspicions of the inspectors led them to cut the sweet potato open. It was literally a living hotel for sweet-potato weevils!

Why should a person, granting he or she is in possession of a normal mind, wish to turn traitor to humanity in this way and give aid to an enemy far more bitter than any human enemy a nation could fight. It is beyond the powers of the inspectors to answer this. Theirs but to meet the peril as best they can with a force limited by governmental economies.

Some of the Agricultural department staff entomologists are convinced that this is our real battlefront, and that within a comparatively few years the inspection service will have to be expanded to the proportions of an army, if we are to continue to hold insects and plant diseases in check.

Dr. Harold Compere, entomologist of the University of California, who found the parasite-insect which conquered the citrus mealybug in California and Florida, states that every one of our really serious insect enemies was an import.

All California frontiers, by sea and by land, are manned with its plant quarantine inspectors, and California today is perhaps the hottest insect battlefield in the world. Even the alfalfa-filled mattresses and sleeping bags of transients must be emptied upon entering California territory, to avoid introduction of the alfalfa diseases into the state.

The United States has become an important rice-growing area, with the rice production in California, Texas and Louisiana. There are many innocently attempted introductions of rice pests, but a number of deliberate attempts have been discovered.—Detroit News.

Soviet Bees Scorn Cold

Bees are humming in the hotbeds and hothouses of three state farms situated north of the Polar circle, reports a recent issue of the Moscow News. Oblivious of the sub-Arctic temperature, the bees gathered 16 kilograms of honey per hive in six days, and at the same time, through their activity, eliminated the need of hand pollination of cucumbers. The yield of cucumbers was consequently increased by 50 per cent in the hothouses and 200 per cent in the hotbeds. The successful introduction of bee culture to the Far North came on the initiative of Demidenko, director of the beekeeping station of Timiryazef Agricultural academy, who spent three years working on the problem.

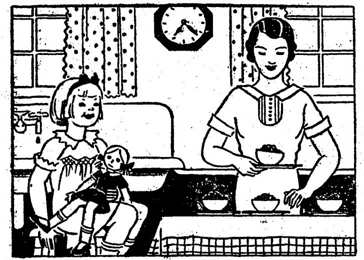
Better Breakfasts



LITTLE people get up early. And they like breakfast. You may have been out playing bridge until all hours, and the bed may look better to you than breakfast. Not so with Mary Jane. She went to bed early so that she would have nice dreams—and she's up early to have a nice breakfast.

It's simple, if you prepare something good the evening before, and tuck it away in the refrigerator. Let her bring Raggety-Ann to breakfast with her, and start with the exciting preprepared fruit dish which leads this menu:

Orange and Cherry Shells
Cereal with Cream
Liver and Bacon
Toast Preserves
Coffee Milk

Orange and Cherry Shells: Cut two large California oranges in halves and remove the pulp carefully so that the shells remain in perfect shape. Discard all white pulp and fibre from the orange and sweeten slightly if necessary. Return the orange and juice to the shells. Remove pits from one cup of canned black cherries and cut in halves or quarters. Spread these over the orange in the shells so that only the black cherries show. Have this well chilled. It serves four persons.

Have This Hot

The best possible pick-up, after being out late the night before, is a steaming cup of really good coffee. If it is vacuum-packed coffee in cans you will find the flavor as delicious as the aroma.*

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

Electricity when properly used is one of the safest means of home lighting, heating and power. When improperly used it may become a swift instrument of injury or death.

The safe use of electricity in the home demands only one thing - - an intelligent installation and use of the proper electrical appliances.

It is a good safety practice to use standard electrical equipment. Badly worn electrical installations are dangerous and should be repaired. When a fuse blows out, call an electrician and let him find the reason for it blowing out.

Don't take chances. Be safe and enjoy the use of electricity.

Several farmers in this vicinity report that they have seen two wild geese flying around here the past week. We saw the geese ourselves on Monday and they are a couple of large white Canadian honkers. Some offered to believe that it was a sign of an early spring and others stated that it was just two geese that had decided to spend the winter here instead of wearing themselves all out by flying down to Florida.

We believe that the geese stayed here because they knew that we had a good crop here this year and that their chances for something to eat during the winter was greater here than any other place.

A $1.00 Dinner for 4

FOR kittens, it's simple—this matter of meals. A dollar goes a long way when you buy milk. You can make a dollar go a long way, too, if you plan your meals carefully. Here, for example, is what a dollar will do for four persons:

Hot Broth 18¢
Liverwurst and Swiss Cheese Platter 30¢
Potato Salad Loaf 24¢
Bread and Butter 8¢
Floating Island 17¢
Demi-Tasse 3¢

Hot Broth: Heat together the contents of one 10½-ounce can of consomme, one-half the contents of one 12½-ounce can of chicken broth with rice and one-half cup water, seasoning to taste. Just before serving add a tablespoon of heavy cream.

Potato Salad Loaf: To one and one-half cups of finely-cut hot boiled potatoes add one-half tablespoon finely chopped onion, one tablespoon finely chopped green pepper, one-half teaspoon salt, and paprika to taste. Sprinkle with two tablespoons vinegar, mixing in gently to avoid breaking the potatoes, and let stand until the potatoes are cold. Meanwhile soften one tablespoon gelatin in one-fourth cup cold water, and dissolve in the contents of one 12½-ounce can of tomato juice which has been heated. Season to taste with salt, pepper, a little sugar and onion juice. Pour half of this mixture in a loaf pan and let stand until it begins to thicken. Then put in the potato salad, pressing down evenly. Pour the rest of the gelatin on top and set away to chill and harden. Unmold carefully so that the tomato jelly layers at the top and bottom are not broken. Serve in slices.*

The Weather

The weather the past week has been of a mean nature. Cold and stormy with heavy snowfall Saturday and cold and windy on Sunday. Monday was real cold as the weather broke at 33 below zoro here in the morning. On Tuesday it calmed down for another moderate snowfall that lasted well into the day Wednesday. Most of the sideroads are blocked.

George Johnson Is Speaker

George Johnson of Duluth, independent progressive, elected Speaker of the House, is the first Speaker to come from St. Louis county in 46 years. In the session of 1889 Charles H. Graves of Duluth was Speaker. Today St. Louis county has five Senators and nine Representatives, but in 1889 it had but one Senator and one Representative. The one Representative was Speaker Graves, and he represented in addition to St. Louis county, the counties of Hubbard, Wadena, Cass, Aitkin, Carlton, Cook, Lake and Itasca, or fully half of Northern Minnesota.

Southern Minnesota has monopolized most of the Speakers of the House. The only Speaker that Northern Minnesota has secured in thirty years, outside of Mr. Johnson this year, was L. W. Babcock of Wadena in 1903, unless we regard Henry Rhines, Kanabeck county, 1913, as from Northern Minnesota.

Otto J. Johnson Is Chairman

Otto J. Johnson, Grygla, fifth district representative, was elected chairman of the Marshall County Board of Commissioners at their annual meeting held last week. Mr. Johnson succeeds Ole Bergman of Alvarado as chairman.

J. J. Pagnac, representing the third district, was named vice chairman of the board at the organization meeting. Two new board members, Arthur W. Anderson, Newfolden, representing the fourth district, and Arthur W. Sommers, Radium, representing the first district, were inducted into office at the session.

The commissioners devoted the first day of their meeting to accepting oaths of office for the elected county officials and accepting bonds for the various officials. New county officials included Arnold A. Trost as the county attorney and Oscar C. Toftner as sheriff. Reelected officials included Mr. Johnson and Mr. Pagnac as board members; A. C. Swandby, clerk of court; P. E. Kvikstad, county treasurer; Levi G. Johnson, county auditor; Nels M. Engen, superintendent of schools and L. M. Olson as register of deeds.

The Warren Sheaf was again designated as the official newspaper for 1935 for Marshall county and as such will publish the financial statement, board proceedings, delinquent tax lists and other legal notices.

The Marshall County Banner at Argyle was designated as the second newspaper to publish the financial statement. However, as in previous years through cooperation of the newspapers of the county, the financial statement, delinquent tax lists, and proceedings of the annual and semi-annual meetings of the board will be publisheh in all of the legal newspapers of the county. The purpose of this is to give as wide publicity as possible to the official affairs of the county. The cooperating newspapers include The Holt Weekly News, Stephen Messenger, Argyle Banner, Strandquist Press, Newfolden Clarion, Middle River Record and Grygla Eagle.

Chairman Johnson announced the following committee appointments for the year:

Buildings—Sommers, Pagnac and Anderson.

Health—Bergman, Anderson and Dr. C. H. Holmstrom.

Stationery and Printing — Bergman and Johnson.

Roads—Johnson, Pagnac, Anderson, Bergman and Sommers.

Ditches— Johnson, Bergman, Pagnac, Anderson & Sommers.

Poor Relief — First district, Sommers; Second district, Pagnac; Third district, Bergman; Fourth district, Anderson and Fifth district, Johnson.

Government To Buy Cattle

Marshall county has been given an ollotment of cattle to be purchased by the government under the buying program to assist in cutting down herds where there is not enough feed to carry thru the winter. R. A. Reierson, county exteniion agent, announced today following receipt of official information from F. J. Brown, St. Paul, state drought director.

Under the cattle buying plan farmers will be eligible to sell cattle to the government only if they do not have adequate feed supply to carry through until pastures open up this spring and if they are not in financial position to obtain feed, the extension division announcement stated.

The government will pay from $4.00 to $20.00 a head for cattle, depending upon the age and quality of the cattle. Condemned cattle, two years old and over will be paid for at the rate of $12.00 a head; one year to two years, $10.00 per head and under one year at $4 per head. Edible crttle rates are, two years and over, $13 to $20; one to two years, $11 to $15 and under one year, $5 to $8.

Creditors who have mortgages on cattle will also share in the cattle sold on a definite basis, according to a provision in the government regulations. From cattle two years old and over the debtor will receive $6 while creditors will receive from $6 to $14; one year to two years, the debtor will receive $5 and the creditor from $5 to $10, and from cattle under one year the debtor will receive $3 and the creditor from $1 to $5. All appraisals will be made on even dollars.

Letters will be sent to all the farmers in the drouth area in Marshall county as quickly as possible. Cards with a questionaire for application to the Drouth committee will also be included. These cards will require the listing of the number of animals for sale, lienholders, and closest shippigg point. It is olso important that the livestock and feed survey blank be filled out, giving the number of cattle in possession now, the number a year ago and the amount of feed on hand.

Minnesota Roquefort Cheese

According to an announcement made by Prof. Willes B. Combs, chief of University Farm's dairy division, St. Paul, the caves found in the sandstone bluffs along the Mississippi river in St. Paul, have been discovered as a perfect place to make genuine Roquefort cheese. Roquefort cheese is made in France and the import of it into this country in 1933 amounted to 2,225,000 pounds and was worth $775,000.

Thru this new discovery that the same kind of cheese can be made in the caves at St. Paul, it is believed that a new million dollar cheese trade annually is in store for Minnesota. Roquefort cheese, according to Prof. Combs, must be made in caves with a constant temperature not higher than 50 nor lower than 48 degrees. The humidity must be between 90 and 95 percent.

The caves in St. Paul are the only caves in this country where the temperature and humidity are the same as those in France. Between six and nine months are required for the proper curing of this kind of cheese for commercial purposes. However, it must remain in the caves two to three months. 10,000 pounds of this cheese was made in the caves the past year and those who were able to get a taste of it when it was sold in stores in St. Paul, Rochester and Virginia recently, claim they liked it better than the genuine French product.

Prof. Combs estimated that ten million pounds of cheese, requiring the annual milk production of 100,000 cows, can be cured annually in St. Paul's river bluff caves. There are enough caves in and near St. Paul to make ten times as much Roquefort as imported annually.

The cheese as imported from France sells at 50 and 60 cents a pound while the Minnesota made was sold for 38 cents a pound.

David Sandberg Called Home

Funeral services were conducted from the Nazareth Lutheran church here yesterday afternoon for David Sandberg, 22 year old son of Mrs. C. L. Sandberg. David passed away at the home of his mother here at 11 o'clock Sunday evening after being confined to his bed for the past five weeks with a lingering illness. Cancer was the direct cause of his death. Rev. Redal officiated and interment was made in the Holt cemeteryr.

Complete obituary will be published next week.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Nordgren of Hunter, N. Dak., came here recently for a visit at the home of Mrs. Nordgren's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Elliot. Mr. Nordgren took home a truckload of good Minnesota wood. Mrs. Nordgren remained for a longer stay

SENATOR VANDENBERG PLANS TO TAKE POSTAL DEPARTMENT CLEAR OUT OF POLITICS.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

©, Western Newspaper Union.

SENATOR VANDENBERG of Michigan, liberal Republican, says he will introduce in the senate a bill designed to take the Post Office department out of politics. The measure he has drafted would put all postmasters and postal officials, except the postmaster general, under the civil service, and in the giving out of jobs the post office employees would have the preference. Senator Vandenberg has been persistently demanding that Postmaster General Farley either resign from the cabinet or give up his chairmanship of the Democratic national committee. In line with this his bill would prohibit the postmaster general from holding any political office.

Senator Vandenberg

The Michigan senator said he had written the bill after conferences with the civil service commission and service organizations within the Post Office department. He predicted it would have strong support from the latter quarter.

By taking politics out of the department and establishing a career service, Vandenberg said, "the pavement-pounding letter carriers may look forward to ultimate graduation to the high post of first assistant postmaster general."

"Under this bill," he added, "politics and postal affairs at last are separated as far as is possible in a democracy. All local postmasters are put squarely under civil service with emphatic and effective priorities given to the 'postal grays' themselves.

"Existing postmasters are permitted to serve out their present commissions. Thereupon the vacancies are filled by promotion from the service ranks. Only in the event that no such person is available—and we anticipate that this contingency would not arise other than in some of the smallest offices—can the vacancy be filled otherwise than by promotion."

SEVERAL high ranking officers in the army and War department officials, as yet unnamed, are involved in a scandal concerning the awarding of department claims and contracts, and Secretary of War Dern has ordered an investigation. One officer is suspected of having accepted bribes for swelling claims and another of having supplied valuable contract information in return for a loan from a lobbyist.

This was revealed in the final report of the subcommittee of the house military affairs committee investigating War department transactions.

The report also discloses that its recommendation in a preliminary report last June for the removal of Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, chief of the army air corps, has been turned over to the inspector general of the army. This is the usual step preliminary to placing such a matter before a military tribunal, the report states.

Foulois is not one of the men under suspicion. The preliminary report charged him with "misconduct and gross inefficiency" after an inquiry into the disastrous management of the air mail by the army early in the year.

IN THE opinion of Federal Judge Merrill E. Otis of Kansas City, code price fixing under the NRA is illegal and congress has not the power either to fix prices or to authorize the President to do so, even in transactions undoubtedly a part of interstate commerce. His decision was given in denying a temporary injunction sought by the government against the operators of the Sutherland Lumber company, which maintains yards in Oklahoma, Iowa and Nebraska.

AMBASSADOR HIROSI SAITO handed to Secretary of State Hull Japan's formal denunciation of the Washington naval treaty, and at about the same time the American delegates to the naval conversations in London sailed for home. The treaty remains in effect until the end of 1936, but it is the hope of the Japanese that a new pact will be signed, giving them global parity with the United States and Great Britain instead of the existing 5-5-3 ratio.

STILL hoping that President Roosevelt will take notice of the opinions of business men for which he called, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States now recommends that the national recovery act be replaced by new legislation to take federal regimentation out of business. The expression of the organization followed a tabulation of a referendum vote of the commercial and trade organizations in its membership.

The business group declared itself for revision by the coming congress after a weighing of experiences under the present stringent regulatory laws. By an overwhelming majority members voted that the NRA, the enabling act of the National Recovery administration, should not be continued or extended.

As its foremost declaration members of the association agreed that industry should formulate its own rules of fair competition and that the government's part should be confined to approval or veto.

Further the association's membership expressed itself strongly against intrastate regulation of the NRA as evolved through the various state legislative enactments supporting the NRA.

IT IS reported in Washington that the federal communications commission will recommend to congress a law that will permit the merger of all wire, telegraph, cable and wireless services controlled by American interests, and that it has the tacit approval of the President.

Waiving the antitrust laws, the legislation would make the following companies eligible to join: International Telephone and Telegraph company, which controls the Postal Telegraph company; R. C. A. Communications, Inc., and Western Union. I. T. & T. operates also in both the field of cable and radio, the R. C. A. radio networks spread to about forty countries and Western Union, besides its great telegraph system, has a wide cable service.

GEORGE H. TINKHAM, the bearded and sharp-tongued representative from Massachusetts, has revived the controversy over the League of Nations with an assertion that the United States is being slipped into the league through the back door. He says the joint resolution adopted in the last few days of the Seventy-third congress, making the United States a member of the international labor organization was the first of a contemplated series of moves designed to put the United States openly into the league, contrary to the wishes of the people and of congress, and Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins was the especial object of his attack. Using such harsh words as "fraud" and "intrigue," Mr. Tinkham accused Secretary Perkins of employing "contemptible trickery" in urging adoption of the resolution.

Secretary Perkins

Mr. Tinkham quoted the labor secretary as saying that the international labor organization, "is not even now an integral part of the League of Nations, and membership in the organization does not imply affiliation with the league." He continued:

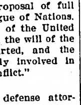
"This statement is the grossest perversion of the truth. It is squarely contrary to the facts—facts established by an indelible record, the treaty of Versailles. The statement contained in the letter of the secretary of labor was intended to deceive. The secretary knew that the congress of the United States was opposed to entry into the League of Nations and would not vote for entry knowingly. Entry was therefore made surreptitiously and fraudulently.

"Article 392 of the treaty of Versailles states:

" 'The international labor office shall be established at the seat of the League of Nations as part of the organization of the league.'

"This audacious intrigue to have the United States enter the League of Nations by way of one of the organs of the league is to be followed by an attempt to have the United States enter another of its organs, the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations, this subsequently to be followed by a proposal of full membership in the League of Nations. Thus, the independence of the United States will be destroyed, the will of the American people thwarted, and the United States inevitably involved in the next European conflict."

PROSECUTION and defense attorneys completed their preparations for the trial of Bruno Hauptmann on the charge of murdering the Lindbergh baby, and the little town of Flemington, N. J., was a busy place. The names of 48 veniremen were drawn for examination as jurors, and the sensation over the mailing of a satire on the Lindbergh case to 150 prospective jurors died down. C. Lloyd Fisher, defense counsel, said he would not ask for a new panel.



Bruno Hauptmann

Betty Gow, the nurse who put the Lindbergh baby to bed the night he was kidnaped and killed, arrived from Scotland on the liner Aquitania and went at once to the Morrow home in Englewood, N. J., to await her call as one of the state's star witnesses. She declined to talk to reporters, but posed for cameramen. There was a report that Miss Gow might remain in this country and take up her former job in the Lindbergh household. She had acted as nurse for Jon, second son born to the Lindberghs, until she returned to Scotland several months ago.

Hauptmann seemed calm as the time for his ordeal approached, and he ate a hearty Christmas dinner. Mrs. Hauptmann, who moved from the Bronx to Flemington to be near her husband, made a radio appeal "to the people of the country to wait until they hear every side of the story before they condemn him."

She reiterated her belief that Hauptmann had nothing to do with the kidnaping of Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr. She repeated her story that Hauptmann had waited for her at a Bronx bakery where she worked the night of the kidnaping and had taken her home.

POPE PIUS XI is not optimistic concerning world peace. In his Christmas eve address, delivered according to custom to the cardinals resident in Rome, the Holy Father said that "the clamor of war spreads ever farther, and he urged the world to pray and work for peace. "We see a constant increase in warlike arms," the pope continued.

"This is a distracting element in which the spirit seems to have no part. We are on the eve of a day when the heavens resound with the hymns of angels calling for peace on earth. Never has the chant had more reason for being than today."

King George, in a radio address to all parts of the British empire, was a little more cheerful. He adjured his "peoples beyond the seas" to remember that they all belonged to one great family.

He made a special effort to reach the restless multitudes in India, whose fate now is in the hands of parliament, by assuring them of his "constant care of them."

President Roosevelt's brief Christmas talk was addressed especially to the citizens of America, calling for "courage and unity," for greater happiness and the improvement of human welfare.

WHEN Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau recently commended "a public spirited citizen" for reporting the activities of income tax consultants, he was alluding to Thomas N. McCarter, president of the New Jersey Public Service corporation and of the Edison Electric Institute. Mr. McCarter gave testimony before a District of Columbia grand jury and that body returned an indictment against four persons, two of them treasury employees. They are charged with conspiracy to defraud the government.

Those named in the indictment were:

John W. Hardgrove, formerly associate chief conferee of the internal revenue bureau, who was dismissed by Secretary Morgenthau after an investigation.

Henning R. Nelson, formerly an auditor in the bureau, dismissed along with Hardgrove.

Frank B. Nelson of New York city, practicing privately as a tax consultant.

Richard E. Callaghan, also of New York, associated with McElhill in the tax consulting business.

SENATOR JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS of Illinois, chairman of the senate committee on foreign relations and a veteran in international conferences, has set forth a view concerning treaties for disarmament or reduction of armaments that will meet with the approval of many of his fellow citizens, though they are sharply at variance with those of the administration. He evidently is glad the Washington naval pact is dying, owing to the action of Japan, and he says that in future the United States must, for its own sake, remain aloof from all such agreements, because they are almost certain to embroil us in war.

Senator Lewis

Addressing the National Forum in Washington, Senator Lewis declared the recent naval conversations in London succeeded only in designing a "chart of death to men, destruction to nations," and he warned against the renewal of the Washington treaty.

"Plain it must be," Senator Lewis pointed out, "that should we enter the deal, and it is disobeyed by any of its parties, the United States must be called on by the nations involved to lend ourselves to enforce the compact. This means war upon the United States by the nations we threaten to force to obedience, or war from the nations we refuse to aid in the enforcement.

"To the United States nothing but evil and danger awaits our entrance into any international contract with foreign nations preparing for war on each other."

America wants no war and wants armaments only for self-defense, the senator said, and America does not recognize the right of any international conference to tell her what arms she needs for that purpose.

"On this right of our own self-defense America stands sovereign in her guarded isolation," he informed other nations. "We deny the privilege of any nation to dictate to the United States the quantity or quality of protection our nation shall adopt."

War can come to the United States only through her foreign entanglements, Senator Lewis explained, and because of the present warlike attitude of the world, America must stand isolated.

SPEAKING of war, it is interesting to learn that the senate mission to the Philippines has discovered that those islands "possess the most important source of war material under the American flag." Senator Tydings of Maryland sent the word from Manila that there are in Zambales province deposits of chromite so large that they have attracted the attention of other nations. John W. Haussermann, dean of the islands' gold mining industry, told the senators these deposits may soon take their place as one of the most important ore bodies in the world, and he added significantly that chromium is the one war material which the United States does not have in ample quantities within its borders. These deposits in the Philippines were discovered after the Tydings-McDuffie independence act was drafted.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Shevlin—Fire caused $600 damage to the Shevlin schoolhouse.

Lester Prairie—The East Camden creamery, near here, was destroyed by fire. The loss was estimated at $6,500.

Ruthton—Thieves raided the local Farmers' Creamery company, carrying away two 65-pound tubs of butter and 72 pounds of cheese.

Fergus Falls—A $10,000 blaze destroyed a downtown building here as firemen braved below zero weather to keep the flames from spreading to nearby buildings.

St. Paul—A net profit of $7,387.76 for the Minnesota State fair last September was revealed by the state agricultural society in its annual report to Gov. Floyd B. Olson.

Belle Plaine—Mr. and Mrs. Carl E. Thompson, operators of a nite club eight miles south, shot two bandits and captured the third as they attempted to hold up the tavern.

Minneapolis—The year 1934 came to a close with a total of 84 traffic fatalities on records of the police department, four less than occured during the year 1933, department records disclosed.

Badoura—More than 2,000,000 tree seedlings were transplanted to state forests and parks from the state nursery during 1933 and 1934, Grover M. Conzet, Minnesota director of forestry, announced.

St. Paul—Taxation of Wisconsin trucks and buses for gasoline purchased in Minnesota but used in Wisconsin does not exempt the purchaser from the Minnesota tax, Attorney General Harry H. Peterson ruled.

St. Cloud—Ending the year 1934 without a traffic fatality, St. Cloud police embarked on another year's effort to keep this city of 20,000 free from auto deaths with an appeal to the public to help maintain the good record.

Glencoe—After 52 years as clerk of District Court here, John Luiten began to take life easy. He retired from public life on completion of his term of office, having been defeated in the last election by Heston Benson of Glencoe.

St. Paul—A state trunk highway system of 20,000 to 25,000 miles costing $66,500,000 and constructed over a 10-year period was recommended by the state planning board in a legislative report opposing reduction of automobile license taxes.

Minneapolis—A reduction in electric rates which will mean a saving of $350,000 a year to residential users of electric power was announced by the president of the Northern States Power company on behalf of the Minneapolis General Electric company.

Duluth—The state of Minnesota has 2,055,446 acres of unsold land, all that is left of its original domain, the records in the office of State Auditor Stafford King show. The majority of this, 1,362,858 acres, is classified as swamp land. The largest holdings are in Koochiching county.

St. Paul—Minnesota is definitely on the map, aeronautically speaking, by virtue of the 21 airports that are virtually completed in various parts of the state through activity of the SERA (State Emergency Relief Administration) Major Ray Miller, chairman of the Minnesota aeronautical commission, said.

Anoka—Free nurseries have been established at Anoka and Marshall as the first steps in the Minnesota extension of the federal shelter belt, which is to extend from the Canadian border to the Texas border. Planting operations in the state are to start next spring after drouth-killed woodlots have been cleared of dead timber.

St. Paul—Thousands of forms have been mailed to owners of money and credits throughout the state in an effort by the state tax commission to obtain payment of taxes back to 1929. Large increases in money and credits taxes which have resulted from a campaign conducted by the commission for the last two years, prompted the commission to begin an investigation covering prior years.

New Ulm—Purchase of $58,000 worth of land for the Cottonwood river conservation project in Brown county was authorized by the state executive council. The flood control-lake project is financed through emergency relief funds. Through the project a lake will be created near here. The council also approved purchase of 2,000 acres south of Windom from the conservation department funds for a game refuge project.

Little Falls—Two projects costing $213,000 and supplying employment to 227 men now on relief rolls were approved by Walter F. MacGregor, state engineer and director of the works division, Minnesota SERA. The projects are a $175,000 addition to the Little Falls high school, which will provide work for all available labor in the vicinity, and construction of a $38,000 dam and dyke at Mankato, providing employment for 87 men. Work will start immediately on these projects.

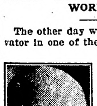
Roseau—Three hundred households will be transferred from isolated farmsteads in Roseau and Lake of the Woods counties to fertile lands in the state, under a plan announced in St. Paul. The fertile lands will be selected by the rural rehabilitation division of the Minnesota state emergency relief administration in a move involving expenditure of $730,000. The plan will be carried out through the joint efforts of the SERA and the regional office of the land policy section of the agricultural adjustment administration.

Let Our Motto Be GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD

Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

THESE "GOSH-AWFUL" HEALTH WORRIERS



The other day when I was in an elevator in one of the tall office buildings in Chicago, the guard stopped at a lower floor to let a woman on. She was in an irate humor, to say the least.

"Why didn't you stop on your trip down before?" she demanded. "You saw me standing there."

"How could I know you wanted to get on?" countered the guard. "You didn't press the button."

"And do you think," said the woman, "that I'll put my finger on that bell with all the germs there are on it? Everybody pushes that button."

The guard shook his head.

"Lady," he said, "you'll have a gosh-awful time going through life if you worry about the germs on bells and door-knobs. How do you think you can escape them?"

Every one, particularly the physician, has met these worrying types of individuals. And the trouble is, that they give not only themselves, but every one connected with them a gosh-awful time. You can have no rest when you are with them. They make life miserable worrying about germs; they crane their necks hunting for drafts, so that some one has to jump up constantly opening and shutting doors and windows; and they're always wondering about their digestions. You can't mention a food in their presence without getting a long harangue about whether it is good or not good for them.

Health officials sometimes think that the indigestion worriers are increasing out of proportion to the increase in the population. Certainly the advertisements in the newspapers and magazines and on sign boards throughout the country that advocate cures for indigestion, sour stomach and dyspepsia, seem to be growing in number, and if these patent medicines did not have buyers, the advertising about them could not be so extensive. Indeed, one might divide the adult population into two groups; those that suffer from indigestion and those that do not.

Most of the digestion worriers are underweight; they have dried, leathery skins, puckered and wrinkled foreheads and a bored and self-sacrificing expression about the eyes; usually they are past the age of thirty-five. In every case they have too much time to think about themselves.

Our bodies are always with us. In the absence of other mental occupations, the worrier makes his body an all-important and ever-engrossing subject of thought. He creates an artificial little world around himself wherein he lives exclusively. He is out of tune with his environment. He doesn't react as other people do to things that happen. His first impulse is to consider the possible ill effect these happenings might have on him. The woman who did not want to push the elevator bell because many other hands had pushed it, thought only of herself. She would be highly offended if a person coming after her did not want to touch a door knob that she had touched. She would always be holy in her own opinion, and no one else could ever be.

The indigestion worriers become food faddists. They cannot eat anything that is fried; they think a combination of milk and fish is poison. They cannot eat starches and meats at the same meal. They believe one thing this month and another thing next month. The errors in diet made by worriers are enough to put them ultimately under a physician's care. Constantly wondering if their food will agree with them is not a healthful pastime. As time goes on, the worrier avoids more and more foods, with the result that his diet become more and more unbalanced, and the consequence is that he worries still more. It is a vicious cycle that often culminates in a hospital bed.

To the physician the worrier is always a health hazard. When his physical resistance is worn down, as it will be, he becomes good soil for bacteria.

And then he not only is apt to get a disease himself, but he is also apt to transmit it to others. Because the worrier, thinking only of himself, is not usually concerned about protecting other people from his disease germs.

If you have a worrier in your family, you are not likely to make him see the unwisdom of his ways by lecturing him. You had best bend your energies in getting him interested in a hobby—something that will make him cognizant that there is a world outside himself.

And if he is the food worrier type, then don't play up to his whims. It is a mistake to say anxiously to the food worrier, "Would you like to have this, dear or would you rather have me fix you something else?" Put a well-balanced meal before him, and then let him take it or leave it. That may seem harsh treatment for "sensitive stomachs," but the World war army life cured many food worriers.

Of course, if the food worrier has really developed an intestinal upset, he will need a diet. But the physician should then prescribe the diet—not the worrier.

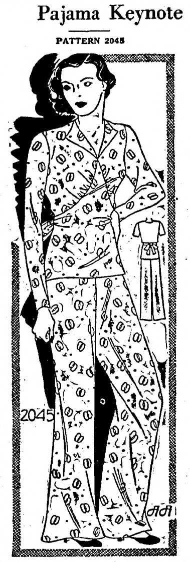
Smartness This Pajama Keynote

PATTERN 2045



There is no reason why pajamas should not be as smart as anything else a woman wears—and every reason why they should. Here are some that are as carefully designed as a suit. Look at the way that girdle business mounts in a becoming V in the front and ties in a clever bow in the back, emphasizing the slender lines of the waist. Those tiny revers are exactly the finish it needs at the neck, and the well-cut trousers are both comfortable and good looking. It is, of course, a two-piece model, nice to make in a neatly patterned cotton or a plain or figured flannel or challis.

Pattern 2045 is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 16 takes 4⅜ yards 36 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

Food and Evolution

Ease in securing food is the greatest factor in the development of a species, declares Dr. C. M. Young of England. Securing food is absolutely necessary to life, and many of the lower forms of life, consisting of only a few cells have scarcely changed in eons because their whole life had to be spent in obtaining food, digesting and eliminating it. Higher forms of life, which digest food outside the body cells, take much less time for feeding and have time to develop.—Pathfinder Magazine.

"Well, here's a man we believe to be a murderer, in intention, at least, and we are leaving three defenseless woman with him." Wilton looked at his companions searchingly. "How are we to proceed? To get Berenice away without accusing Gordon Haskell is to arouse all the engines of the law to support his guardianship. To accuse him is to bring on ourselves the burden of proof. I can't even prove that Balder wanted to take my life. You saw him threateningly above me—but for all you could hear he might have been talking to me on the waste water power in Lostland ravine—or on apple culture. We're in a tight box ourselves."

"Ought we to tell the authorities what we suspect?"

"We can't have him arrested. He didn't push the Bracebridge children into the whirl—and we have absolutely no proof, except the word of Balder, that he was instrumental in the tragery—its initiator, its capitalist, so to speak."

"It may be a strange sentiment," Wilton remarked, "but I have a distinct aversion to Berenice's knowing that her brothers and sisters were killed—the added dreadfulness of realizing that their murderer was her father's confidant—her trusted guardian! We want him to give her up. Yet if we have a weapon strong enough to make him relinquish her, we have one which reacts on our own conscience. We have to accuse him publicly."

There was no gainsaying this.

"It's like looking at a murder out of the tail of one's eye—isn't it?" remarked Arthur. "Knowing some one has passed a window—when you half see him." He glanced through the window, looked again with a blank expression that gradually changed to distinct horror.

"Wilton, Jerry," he whispered, "there's a man—looks like Haskell—coming up the lane. Blow out the lamp."

CHAPTER X

They sat close together in semi-darkness, only the red-hot plates of the stove showing like disks of vermilion in the gloom. "You and Mr. Fleming go into the bedroom," Jerry whispered. "He's comin'. He's comin' right to the door."

"Keep him talking, Jerry—just as long as you can. We'll slip out and go down to the academy, and see if everything is all right there. Keep him talking until we get a start."

"You bet I will! In there with you!"

Behind the door they listened, holding their very breaths in the suspense of the moment. At last came two short raps and Haskell's voice, quite thin and hollow and weary.

"You all alone, Jerry?"

"Here I am all alone in the old kitchen." Jerry evaded with his usual hatred of a lie. "What's the matter, Haskell? You look as if you'd seen a ghost."

"I'm worn out! I've been hunting Balder. Do you know where he is?"

"Do I know where Balder is? How should I know where he is?"

"I thought he might be up here, passing the time of day."

"He is not—where did you see him last?"

"He told me he was going up the ravine to look for an ax he left up there—and he hasn't come back! And I need him!"

"That's a pity," Jerry said dryly. "Maybe he is still up in the ravine. Maybe he thought he'd camp there for the night."

"Are you mad?" they heard Haskell say. "Don't talk folly."

"Other people have camped up there—little camps with flagpoles close to the whirl."

"What are you driving at?"

"Nothing! Take a seat and warm yourself."

"I'm quite warm—the fact is, I've been having a bonfire burning up rubbish back of the old church."

"You don't say! Boxes and the—like?"

"Several things that ought to have been burned long ago. They're gone now, thank heaven. Jerry, I've broken the will; I've burned the four wax figures."

"When did you do that?"

"This evening—I had them carried down back of the church; the old man who drives for me helped. Berenice and Miss Mercer were in their rooms, and Fleming went for a long walk. So it was a good chance. I did right, Jerry. They've been too long a blight over the old house. Now they're gone, maybe the pupils will come back. It will be a relief to walk down that corridor in the dim light and know they're not in that room, and wake up in the morning and know they are not at their eternal study. Always studying! Now that's over."

"Don't be nervous, Haskell. I suppose you done what your conscience told you to. After all, they was only wax figures—wasn't like killin' human beings."

They heard confused sounds—then, "Get me water, quick—it's my heart."

The dipper splashed in the water pail. "I'm better," came a murmur "But I'll rest here, Jerry. I am very tired. Life comes to an end suddenly. All you worked for is like a rope of sand falling from you with every turn you make. It's bleak in the hills, Jerry—and that old academy is like a prison! I'll rest awhile, if you don't mind."

"Rest all you want. The night's long."

In the next room Arthur and Wilton looked at each other and knew the moment had come.

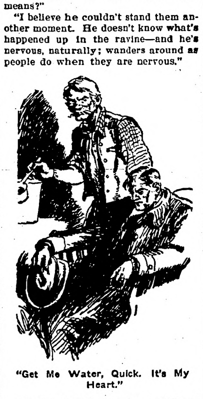
"Does that window go up easy?" Arthur whispered.

For answer Wilton raised it. Arthur stepped through and Wilton followed, reclosing the window softly. Once in the road they breathed more freely.

"You heard him say he has burnt the figures?"

"Yes—what do you think that means?"

"I believe he couldn't stand them another moment. He doesn't know what's happened up in the ravine—and he's nervous, naturally; wanders around as people do when they are nervous."



"Get Me Water, Quick. It's My Heart."

"Shall we tell Berenice and Janet about Balder?" Arthur asked.

"Not tonight—anyway. If we can manage, I am for taking the three women up to Jerry's tonight."

They were approaching the old church. The remains of the bonfire lay like a great red eye sinking into the earth—throwing a light on the stark wall of the building.

"Let us warm ourselves a moment."

"Not at that fire."

But they paused by it, nevertheless, their faces taking on the crimson glow, their weary bodies drooping a little. Around wind fanned a few twigs into temporary life, and the whirling, wild little sparks went by them—went out. "What's this?"

Arthur stooped over. "A bit of blue sash! Here—I'll poke it into the embers. I feel as if I had been witnessing a holocaust of innocence. Let's get away from this horrible place."

"With all my heart. I believe there's wax sticking to my shoes."

They hurried up the hill. As usual, two lights burned on the gate posts of the great entrance gate. This they found securely locked. With the aid of a rail from a near-by fence they scaled the wall, kicking the rail down as they went. "Some one is in the drawing room. Look in, Wilton."

"All three are there—Mrs. Denver and Berenice and Janet. That's fortunate."

Arthur came to the window—and, viewing the picture inside, felt its contrast to the wild events of the afternoon and evening. The two girls were seated by the fire, close together, as if for mutual comfort.

"Ring and knock, both, Wilton. There! they've heard you. Mrs. Denver rises! Good! I hope our revered schoolmaster is still quailing under Jerry's arrows."

The girls ran into the hall—Berenice straight to Wilton—delighted, alarmed, all concern for him.

"You shouldn't be here! He'll be very angry—but I am so glad to see you. Are you very cold? Come in by the fire. I only got up today."

"We know where Mr. Haskell is," said Arthur. "Calling on Jerry. It's very fine and cheerful, Janet, but I don't think Wilton should be so clearly viewed from the porch out there. Mr. Haskell may be back any moment."

They stood irresolute. "Why don't you go down in the kitchen?" Mrs. Denver suggested. "I'll keep watch. The basement door is open. Mr. Payne could slip out that way."

"Will Mr. Haskell come in the front door?"

"He usually does."

"You won't be afraid—alone on this floor?"

"I am only afraid of Balder."

Wilton went closer to her and whispered: "Do not speak of it—Balder was drowned in the whirl this afternoon. Mr. Haskell will be told in the morning when we send men to look for the body."

She gazed at him—for the moment speechless. "How did it happen?"

"He lost his footing."

"So the whirl got him," she murmured, "the whirl got him."

"Why do you say that?"

"He was always saying in the kitchen that the whirl would get him some day. He liked to talk of it. 'But it'll get others first,' he used to add."

TRUE GHOST STORIES

▪ ▪ ▪

By Famous People

Copyright by Public Ledger, Inc. WNU Service.

By RITA WEIMAN

Author.

"RITA WEIMAN is too strong-minded to have a ghost story," cautioned her husband.

"Beg your pardon," he added, "Come to think of it she does have a ghost story, a very real one. She has a knack of foreseeing things. Tell about your 'voltage story,' Rita."

Simultaneously, the author, her husband and I drew our chairs closer to the fireplace, above which burned dim lights from Chinese furniture, which she favors.

"Seven years ago," she began, "I read an obscure notice in the newspaper, about John Hulbert, of Auburn, N. Y., an electrician, resigning as executioner at Sing Sing, because he was being ostracized from society. At the same time he justified his job, saying he was only fulfilling his work as a servant of the state.

"I thought this was a grand idea for a story. I wrote a story about an electrician, who was ostracized by his family and friends, because they found out he was serving as an executioner and who eventually killed himself because of their actions, by seizing a high-voltage electric wire. I sold the story to a magazine.

"A few months later the editor called me to say that the owner of the magazine felt that my story was a plea against capital punishment and that he did not feel that his magazine should take issue on the subject. I should keep my check, but the story would not be published by them; I could resell it if I wished.

"I let the matter drift, although I felt that I wanted to see the story published.

"One morning, two years later, my secretary handed me a paper."

"Look," she cried, with amazement in her voice.

" 'Joins in death the 140 men he slew,' said the headlines. 'John Hulbert, by suicide, answers the question all who knew him asked.'

"How I rejoiced that my story had not been published! I would always have been haunted by the thought that Hulbert had read my story and brooded over it, and had eventually committed suicide.

"In view of the strange finale of events, the magazine then published the story, and I rejoiced that I have been saved from that ghost."

By PERCY CROSBY

Cartoonist.

"I WAS born in a haunted house," related the comic artist, Percy Crosby.

"The first gleam of consciousness which I can remember in my life was seeing a colored mammy under the kitchen table, and hearing my mother say that the mammy was a ghost. All through my childhood I can remember my mother complaining to my father that our house was haunted, until, when I was three, we had to move from it.

"I can remember vividly that first experience—the only time I ever saw the ghost. It left an indelible impression on my mind.

"I had gone into the kitchen to get a cooky. Under the kitchen table I saw a negro mammy; a red bandanna was tied tightly around her head, her two hands were on the floor. She seemed to be backing away from me. I screamed in fright at the strange sight and ran to my mother.

"Mother grasped my hand, and took me back to the scene. The woman was still crouching there.

"I saw my mother slap at her, and her hand went right through her head and struck the wall; and the mammy disappeared.

" 'Ghost, ghost!' screamed my mother. I screamed also, not knowing what the word meant.

"Mother called witnesses who agreed that there was no sign or hide or hair of the mammy in the room. I was with her to testify that she had been there, and that when mother struck her she disappeared.

"After that experience my mother grew more nervous and timid; but, like all small boys, the experience only gave me more courage, and more ideas for adventure. But I have never found a ghost since that time. No doubt since I was born in a haunted house, I'll probably die in one."

Farmers War on Lark

Even if Shelley wrote an ode about it and Schubert was inspired by it to compose a beautiful melody, the lark is just a bird that damages wheat and other crops. So declare the farmers in the vicinity of Norfolk, England, and they have started a war on the songster. The Norfolk Agricultural committee has excluded the bird from the new order under the wild birds protection act.

Collapse Reveals Secret Tunnel

Not known previously to exist, a brick-lined tunnel six feet high, ten feet wide and about ten feet below the surface of the road and believed to be over one hundred years old, collapsed at Sheffield, England, while workmen were preparing foundations for a garage.

ELECTRIC SHOCK, IF SLIGHT, NOT ALWAYS DEADLY

In attempts to revive persons who have succumbed to electric shock, those applying artificial respiration must not weary too soon of well doing. Specialists in medicines, electricity and hygiene at Johns Hopkins university, after seven years of research, explain why many who have thus succumbed may survive while others do not, and also give valuable counsel in life-saving effort of the future.

Nothing in what they say gives any hope for these dying in the electric chair, now enjoined for murders in so many of the states. Three kinds of cases resulting from electric shock are, in fact, found to exist and when a properly operated electric chair has done its work, it has done it most thoroughly. That is the case in which the nerves and brain are attacked by the current and cells are destroyed.

However, there are two other kinds of cases, those in which only the nerves and the heart or lungs are affected without serious injury to the brain. Both may often result from a comparatively mild current, even one of only a tenth of an ampere, and a victim may be saved by intelligent methods. Why lifelessness is only apparent and victims may be restored is owing to the fact that nerves controlling the lung or heart action have only been jangled, so to speak, and go off duty temporarily.

First-aid treatment, if resorted to promptly and continued long enough to tune up these important nerves again, will, almost invariably, give the victim another lease of life. But patience and often persistence during a considerable space of time are required. A tragic deduction is that many lives which might have been saved have been ended prematurely because of a lack of this restorative miracle.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

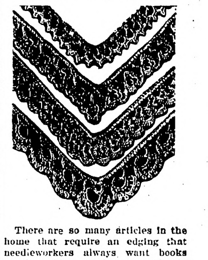
Crocheted Edges and Insertions

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



There are so many articles in the home that require an edging that needleworkers always want books on the subject so they can refer to them when looking for a dainty narrow edge for handkerchiefs or a wide edge for spreads, scarfs, etc. The edges shown here are narrow for handkerchiefs and give you an idea of the beauty in handsome edgings.

Book No. 26 on Crocheted Edgings and Insertions contains 72 patterns from which to select when an edging is wanted. A few motifs are also included for corners in napkins or tablecloths. The designs are old and new and illustrated in full size, with instructions.

Send 15c to our Crochet Department for this book No. 26, if you crochet and appreciate beautiful edgings.

MANY LETTERS

Addressed to You Personally

THINK of the advertisements in this paper as so many letters addressed to you personally. That's what they're intended to be, and, actually, that's what they are. This newspaper is, in effect, a mail-bag which brings you news of events and news of the best merchandise at the fairest prices.

You don't throw away letters unread. You don't read three or four letters carefully and skim through the rest. Treat the "merchandise letters" in this newspaper the same way. Read them all. Read them carefully. One single item will often repay you for the time it has taken to read them all.

Many good housekeepers have formed the habit of reading their newspaper with a pencil and paper, ready to jot down the articles they wish to look at when they start out on their shopping tour. Try this method. It saves time, and saves money, and provides you with the pick of the day's merchandise.

Tom Severson has done quite a bit of trapping this past winter. In a conversation with him the other day he stated that the fur companies are getting something awful to deal with, He stated that they would grade down furs as low as to flat grade when they thot that they could get by with such.

Oscar Moe of Agdar had a run-away with his team a half mile south of town on Friday when he was coming in with his cream for the creamery. The Great Northern freight was coming in from the south at the same time and the horses, not much used to noise, lit out at top speed. No damage was done to the outfit or occupants as they ended up in the deep ditch.

Gust Opseth of Rosewood, made a trip to Holt on Wednesday to see H. E. Davidson concerning the mounting of a deer head Gust was very enthusiastic about Mr. Davidson's work and stated he had seen none better in this section of the state.

Unfortunately, he did not find Mr. Davidson but was by members of his family permitted to view his entire collection, and to which he took a great fancy.

Walter Swan returned home last Friday from near Grand Marias north of Duluth where he has been stationed with a CCC camp the past few months. He stated that the snow was getting quite deep along the north shore of Lake Superior.

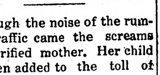
What you need for your car these cold days

Engen Garage



Through the noise of the rumbling traffic came the screams of a terrified mother. Her child had been added to the toll of automobile accident death casualties. The driver of the car had been drinking. An innocent life snuffed out by a "Driving Fool."

Laws in most states require that the driving license be revoked when this condition exists. That law should be enforced to the letter. I also recommend a prison sentence in addition to a removal of license. The drunken game of automobile driving has gone too far.

Many drunken drivers have been fined and warned not to do it again. Think of it! A drunken driver running up and down the streets and highways and endangering the lives of people, set down with only a fine. Stop him! Send him to prison. It's the only answer.

Let us remove this type of reckless driver. Let us make the highways safer for our children.

Peas with a Partner

Cauliflower and Peas en Casserole: Separate one head of cauliflower into flowerlets and boil until tender. Drain and lay in a buttered casserole, keeping the pieces as unbroken as possible. Make a white sauce of three tablespoons butter, three tablespoons flour, one and three-fourths cups milk, one-half teaspoon salt and a few grains of pepper. Simmer one cup of canned peas for three or four minutes, and pass through a sieve. Add to the white sauce. Pour over the cauliflower and cover with buttered crumbs. Brown in a hot oven. This serves eight persons.*

We are this week publishing the official proceedings of the county board of commissioners for their annual meeting held at Warren on January 8th, 9th, and 10th, 1935. Also the much looked for personal property tax list. We have the property tax list for the Village of Holt, and the following townships: Holt, Agdar, East Valley, Grand Plain, Excell, New Solum and Mud Lake. The figures indicate that some have to pay a lot and others are not so hard hit. Keep your copy for further refrences.

We will soon publish a report showing the number of cars of hay, grain, straw, stock and other products shipped out of Holt during the year 1934. We know that some of you are going to be surprised at what a large amount of business this community has been doing.

The Weather

The weather the past week has been of a mixed variety. Friday and Saturday were cold and stormy days with Monday and Tuesday holding full sway with the thermometer trying to pull the nail out of the wall with the red scrambling down to the 35 and 40 below zero mark. Wednesday it seemed to let up as the wind changed to south and continued that way with a strong south wind and warmer yesterday.

Silver Anniversary For Show

Final plans for the silver anniversary of the Northwest School Farmers' Week and Red River Valley Winter Shows will be discussed by A. A. Dowell, President of the Winter Shows Board of Managers, over radio stations WCCO and WLB, Minneapolis, Monday, January 28, between 1:15 and 1:30 p. m. Brief announcements will also be given daily over station WDAY, Fargo thru the courtesy of Charles G. Burke, Manager.

An unusual series of lectures has been arranged for the special men's and women's meeting's scheduled throughout the week of February 4 to 8.

Dean W. C. Coffey, who for some time served as regional drought administrator. will discuss "The Drought and its lessons." Dr. R. W. Murchie, director of the Division of Rural Rehabilitation for the State of Minnesota, will speak on the subject "Rural Rehabilitation in Minnesota." This is one of the most pressing problems confronting the nation at the moment. Consequently Dr. Murchie address will be of interest to farmers and townspeople alike.

Proffessor Henry Schmits, chief of the Forestry Division, University of Minnesota, will address the men's meeting on "Windbreaks - Their Establishment Life and Effects" and will speak to the women on "Whither Forestry and Why." The proposal to establish a one thousand mile shelter belt across the Great Plains area, together with the proposal to initiate extensive windbreak plantings in Minnesota, has created a great deal of interest in this subject throughout the valley counties.

Dr. O. B. Jesness, one of the leading authorities in the nation in agricultural economics, will discuss "The Farmer and the Export Market." This address will include an analysis of importance of experts during past years, factors which have tended to reduce foreign outlets and an analysis of prospective future trends. Many other important lectures dealing with the farm and home have been scheduled for this important educational week.

The past week things have been kind of been froze up around here. The wood piles have been going down and as soon as it warms up a little there will be a scramble to replenish the supply for the next cold spell.

Miss Clara Sandberg returned home last week from Minneapolis where she has been employed the past few months.

County Gets Drouth Relief

Marshall county was officially designated as an Emergency Drouth Relief county by the Federal Government last Thursday and as a result feed for livestock either thru relief or federal feed loans are now available, according to Ralph DeLong, acting county relief administrator.

Since January first there was no federal or state agency in Marshall county authorized to grant feed requests to farmers in the western part of the county who were unable to purchase feed supplies themselves. Much presure was brought to bear on the state and federal authorities during the winter, special resolutions requesting relief being adopted by the county board of commissioners at their meeting held at Warren January 3. Other farm organizations in the county also adopted similar resolutions, resulting in the official designation of the county as an Emergency Drouth county.

Feed will be available on certain maximum regulations as drouth relief through the ERA division in the county while in other classifications feed loans will be granted through the Farm Credit Administration on recommendation of the county's drouth committee.

Marshall county residents seeking feed will make their applications through the ERA office in the state bank building in Warren or through R. A. Reierson, county extension agent. The conuty agent will present applications for feed loans to the drouth committee. Oscar Pearson is being designated as Acting Livestock Relief Manager for the county.

Cattle purchasing in Marshall county is already under way with the first carload of stock being scheduled to be shipped from Argyle yesterday. General calls are being made in each community as to dates of shipment, while cards requesting information have been mailed to all farmers in the serious drouth areas.

Farmers planning to take advantage of the Federal Government buying program for cattle must do so at once as February 1 is the absolute deadline at which purchases will be made.

Foxes Carry Scents

Foxes carry powerful scents on their bodies, an advantage in some cases but a danger in others for they leave a tell-tale trail that can be picked up by any dog. The scent also tells other foxes of its whereabouts, and mate can follow mate, no matter how great the distance.

Re-Location Of Farmers

A transfer of 300 households from isolated farmsteds in Lake of the Woods and Roseau counties to fertile lands selected for them by the rural rehabilitation division, Minnesota SERA (State Emergency Relief administration), in a move involving the expenditure of $730,000, is being undertaken through the joint efforts of the SERA and the regional office of the land policy section of the AAA (Agricultural Adjustment administration).

These farm families are withdrawing from non-productive lands in the Beltrami Island forest, unsuited to agriculture, reports R. I. Nowell, regional AAA director, Madison, Wisconsin. This organization plans to purchase 50,000 acres in this forest area with the ultimate purpose of enlarging it to cover 400,000 acres. The cost will be about $350,000.

All details in connection with the exodus of these farm families are handled by the Minnesota SERA, it is stated by Dr. R. W. Murchie, director of the rural rehabilitation division. Whatever can be salvaged in the demolition of the old homes will be moved to the new locations. Conditions there offer to the farmers, economic independence in a few years. No compulsion is employed in bringing about the migration.

A beneficial result of the move from these sub-marginal lands will be the saving of more than $25,000 annualy to Roseau and Lake of the Woods counties. The will be no further necessity for maintaining schools and roads in this section which lies far away from the paths of general travel. All federally-owned lands in the district were recently closed to homestead entry by executive order of President Roosevelt.

In addition to the 50,000 acres to be purchased by the AAA, probably 85 per cent of the remaining lands still in private ownership in the are will revert to the state in the next few years as tax delinquent.

J. W. Taylor of Roseau and A. D. Wilson, of Guthrie, will act as project supervisors for the SERA and AAA, respectfully.

"I Caught One That Long"

THIS, gentle readers, is a fish story. Stop us if you've heard it—or if you saw it in the "Finney of the Force" comic strip. Finney, the cop, rushes on the scene of what appears to be the crime of the century. He sees a man on a street corner in broad daylight standing before another man with his hands outstretched in mid-air—just another victim, evidently of the stick-em-up fad. He nabs the public enemy. But this time the victim protests. He was just telling about that fish he caught—"one that long!"

"It Tasted Swell!"

Does your husband tell about the fish he ate with the same enthusiasm that he tells about the fish he caught? If not, that's something for you to worry about. Especially if fishing vessels have gone out to far-away waters to catch the very best possible fish, if canners have used every modern method to pack it so that it comes to you with the best fresh fish flavor—then you must cook it so that it's something to talk about. Here are some suggestions for

Some Good Fish Dishes

Salmon with Egg Sauce: Steam one tall can of salmon, open and slide out on a hot platter. Make a white sauce, using two tablespoons butter, two tablespoons flour, the contents of one 6-ounce can of evaporated milk, three-fourths cup water and salt and pepper to taste. Then add two hard-cooked chopped eggs to the sauce and pour over the salmon. This serves four persons.

Lobster and Crab Cocktail: Chill the following ingredients: one-third cup chili sauce, three tablespoons mayonnaise, one-half cup of finely-sliced celery, one-half of a 6-ounce can of lobster, one-half of a 6½-ounce can of crabmeat. Beat together the chili sauce and mayonnaise and add the celery. Remove the tendons from the lobster and crab, [illegible] and toss with dressing. Serve in glass cups lined with lettuce leaves. This serves eight persons.

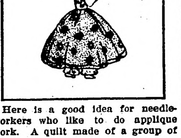
"COLONIAL GIRLS" FEATURE OF THIS APPLIQUED QUILT

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



Here is a good idea for needleworkers who like to do applique work. A quilt made of a group of six different Colonial ladies dressed in beautiful colorful prints and each in a different position. The patches are stamped with lines for cutting. The eighteen inch block is stamped with lines for applique work and outline embroidery stitch.

Six of these eighteen inch blocks are used for a single bed quilt, and twelve blocks for double bed quilt.

If you will send 15c to our quilt department we will mail one complete stamped eighteen-inch block with material of the block pictured above, also a picture of a quilt showing the six different girls in this set.

A set of six blocks with applique material will be sent for 75c. A set of twelve blocks for $1.50. The beauty of this can really only be appreciated after you see a block worked in beautiful colors.

CURRENT EVENTS PASS IN REVIEW

EIGHT AND A HALF BILLION DOLLAR BUDGET OFFERED BY THE PRESIDENT.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

BECAUSE work relief must be carried on the federal budget will not be balanced for the coming fiscal year, and probably not for several years thereafter. In presenting the budget to congress, President Roosevelt admitted this, but without qualms. He estimated $8,520,000,000 as the amount of money necessary to carry on the government's activities for the 1936 fiscal year beginning July 1 next. The expenses for the current year, partly estimated, are $8,581,000,000.

President Roosevelt

If one wishes to know who spends all these huge sums, an idea may be obtained from these figures showing the estimated expenditures for the fiscal year 1936:

1. Legislative, judicial and executive	$6,595,000
2. Civil departments and agencies	788,057,169
3. National defense	792,484,265
4. Veterans' pensions and benefits	704,885,500
5. Debt charges:
Interest	875,000,000
Retirements	636,434,000
6. Refunds	64,946,200
7. Recovery and relief	4,582,011,475
8. Supplemental items (for above groups 1 to 4 inclusive)	40,000,000
Total expenditures	$8,520,413,608

Total receipts for the same period are put at $3,991,904,639, so the estimated deficit will be $4,528,508,970.

Of the recovery and relief fund the President asked that $4,000,000,000 be placed at his disposal to be allocated by him "principally for giving work to those unemployed on the relief rolls."

Here are some other vital things disclosed by the message:

The national debt will increase from $31,000,000,000 at the close of this fiscal year to $34,239,000,000.

No new taxes are requested. Congress is asked to continue the so-called nuisance taxes which expire soon and the 3-cent stamp rate.

A national defense appropriation of $899,948,065—the greatest in the history of the country—is requested.

A total of 137,134 federal workers are to be dismissed.

The $2,811,000,000 gold profit has not been disturbed.

Veterans pensions in 1936 will reach the staggering total of $704,000,000.

The accumulated New Deal deficit for three years on June 30, 1936, will total $11,700,000,000.

While the trend of recovery and relief expenditures is downward, regular federal expenses will increase. This is due in part to a 5 per cent pay restoration for federal workers which involves $65,000,000.

It seemed certain that some of the President's proposals would start bitter fights in congress. Old line Republicans insisted that such "squandering" of the nation's resources would lead to inflation and bankruptcy. The more radical legislators thought that four billions for work relief was not enough. Lots of senators and representatives resented the President's request for a free hand in allocating that fund, feeling he was infringing on their prerogatives. But the administration forces in congress are so overwhelming that there was no doubt that the budget would be accepted as presented.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT in his message to congress, delivered in person at a joint session, offered the law-makers a "new and greatly enlarged plan" of work relief. He did not estimate its cost, but asserted that the system of outright doles should be dropped and the government should undertake projects of slum clearance, grade crossing elimination and other public works that would give employment to about 3,500,000 persons now without jobs. The figures to be proposed for this were reserved for his budget message, but he assured congress that they would be "within the sound credit of the government."

Mr. Roosevelt declared the gains made in the year 1934 were greater than the losses and expressed "a strong hope in the coming year." He reasserted his belief in the "profit motive" but uttered a warning against wealth "which, through excessive profits, creates undue private power over private affairs, and, to our misfortune, over public affairs as well." This, naturally, was taken as applying especially to the public service interests, which have been so apprehensive of the administration's intentions.

As for a legislative program, the President made no attempt to outline one, but he did promise that definite legislation soon would be proposed covering old age and unemployment insurance, benefits for children and mothers, and other features of his social security plans.

He declared the nation was making headway toward the "new order," but under the framework of the Constitution, and he spoke of the increased industrial activity, benefits to agriculture and profits to merchants that have been realized. Then came this stern warning:

"Let him who, for speculative profit or partisan purpose, without just warrant would seek to disturb or dispel this assurance, take heed before he assumes responsibility for any act which slows our onward steps."

The President reported an unsettled condition in the foreign field, with the resurrection of old jealousies and passions and new strivings for armament and power in more than one land, adding:

"There is no ground for apprehension that our relations with any nation will be otherwise than peaceful."

Discussing the matters that will be brought before congress for action, Mr. Roosevelt said:

"Among the subjects that lie immediately before us are the consolidation of federal regulatory administration over all forms of transportation, the renewal and clarification of the general purposes of the national industrial recovery act, the strengthening of our facilities for the prevention, detection and treatment of crime and criminals, the restoration of sound conditions in the public utilities field through abolition of the evil features of holding companies, the gradual tapering off of the emergency credit activities of government, and improvement in our taxation forms and methods.

"We have already begun to feel the bracing effect upon our economic system of a restored agriculture.

"The hundreds of millions of additional income that farmers are receiving is finding its way into the channels of trade.

"The farmers' share of the national income is slowly rising. The economic facts justify the widespread opinion of those engaged in agriculture that our provision for maintaining a balanced production gave at this time the most adequate remedy for an old and vexing problem.

"For the present and especially in view of abnormal world conditions, agricultural adjustment with certain necessary improvements in methods should continue."

PETROLEUM control provisions of the National Industrial Recovery act, specifically section 9 (c), are held by the Supreme Court of the United States to be invalid as unconstitutional abdication of legislative power to the President. Eight of the justices united in rendering this decision, Justice Cardozo alone dissenting, and it was read by Chief Justice Hughes.

The section declared void authorized the President to ban interstate shipment of "hot" oil—that is, oil produced in excess of state quotas.

While the opinion did not deal with other phases of the recovery act, it aroused widespread speculation as to disposition of other cases. This was the first major "New Deal" case to come before the court. Some legal authorities pointed out that application to the act generally of the principle found untenable in this case might undo much recovery legislation.

The petroleum code itself was not involved in the decision. However, the decision was believed to finish the work of the federal tender board established as a regulation issued under authority of the provision involved.

Emergency legislation by congress to remedy the situation and to meet the objection of the court was reported to be an immediate likelihood.

THE Seventy-fourth congress, elected on the sole issue of support of the New Deal, began its first session on the dot and devoted its first day to the organization of the two houses and the swearing in of new members. The lawmakers assembled in the Capitol were a serious looking lot, and with reason, for they have on their hands a big job, that of making the New Deal permanent; and in the doing of it they must solve some of the most perplexing problems that our national legislators ever have faced. It would seem that the Democrats will have no trouble in passing any legislation they wish, for they have an overpowering majority.

Speaker Byrns

In the speaker's chair sits Joseph T. Byrns, chosen unanimously by his fellow Democrats. He is too much of a compromiser to suit many of them, but is now tied to the administration, which declined to oppose his election. John H. Bankhead of Alabama, like Byrns one of the old school, won the leadership of the house after a brief struggle. Senator Joseph Robinson of Arkansas was re-elected majority leader of the senate, and Senator Lewis of Illinois continues as whip.

In their pre-session caucus the Democrats voted to reduce materially the Republican representation on house committees, and decided to abrogate the 145 rule for discharging a committee and bringing a bill to vote within a week. The number now required for this action is 218.

PREMIER R. B. BENNETT of Canada, appealing for support for his administration, promises to give the Dominion a "New Deal" that bears a close resemblance to President Roosevelt's economic and social program.

Among the reforms the premier indorsed were: Contributory employment insurance, a remodeled old-age pension scheme; health, sickness and accident insurance, amendments to the income tax laws to correct inequality of wealth distribution, minimum wages and maximum hours of work, and further legislation in the interests of farmers.

THERE were huge sighs of relief in the chancelleries of Europe when the success of the conversations in Rome between Foreign Minister Pierre Laval of France and Premier Mussolini was announced informally. For two days the two statesmen discussed the points at issue between their nations and conditions in general in central Europe. Emerging from the last of their meetings, Laval, smiling broadly, said to a group of French and Italian war veterans.

Pierre Laval

"I am glad to tell you that Premier Mussolini and I are now in complete accord."

Without waiting for an official communique, those best informed said Laval and il duce had reached a full agreement, the principal features of which are a joint declaration to preserve the independence of Austria, a five or six power pact of noninterference, and provisions for colonial concessions in Africa. The pact agreeing not to interfere with one another's internal affairs presumably will include Italy, Czechoslovakia, Jugoslavia, Austria, and Hungary; and later England, France and Rumania may be asked to adhere to it.

This Franco-Italian rapprochement, in the opinion of many high officials, will go far toward insuring the maintenance of peace in Europe, and in time may lead Germany to re-enter the League of Nations.

ISLANDS in the Pacific held under mandate by Japan, and which she says she never will give up though she has left the League of Nations, are virtually closed to foreign visitors, in violation of the treaty of Washington.

The permanent mandates commission of the league has reported that sums Japan announced she spent purely for civil and commercial purposes on ports on these islands are disproportionate to the volume of commercial activity. Further particulars on the expenditure were asked in the next Japanese report.

A Tokyo representative in his previous report sought to allay "suspicions" expressed in Geneva that Japan is building fortifications or constructing naval bases in the Marshall, Caroline, Ladrone or Pelew islands, granted her after the World war.

The mandates commission has issued a communique saying "suspicions are constantly giving rise to comment in the world press, and one method of refuting them would be to afford free and unrestricted access to the islands for foreign travelers and vessels."

DEMOCRATS of Rhode Island surprised themselves and everyone else by gaining control of both houses of the state general assembly when a senate committee recounted the ballots from Portsmouth and South Kingston and declared two Democrats had been elected to the senate instead of the two Republicans who had been certified as winners by the state returning board. The Democratic legislators immediately organized the assembly, abolished the state appointed board of public safety and passed a reorganization bill to consolidate more than 80 agencies into 11 state departments.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT did not wait for the opening of congress to start his fight against immediate payment of the veterans' bonus. The commander of a Legion post in Texas wrote him for information on the matter and Mr. Roosevelt replied at length, detailing his reasons for opposing the payment. He argued that the obligation is not immediately due; that of 3,500,000 certificates outstanding, 3,038,500 veterans have borrowed $1,690,000,000, or "more than the present worth of their bonus certificates," and that when the veterans borrowed 50 per cent of the face value of the certificates in 1931 they uesd the funds to discharge their debts.

This last point, according to National Commander Belgrano of the American Legion, is one of the strongest arguments for immediate payment of the adjusted service certificates.

Speaker Byrns admitted that the cash bonus bill would pass the house "because there is no opposition to it there," but he added that if the measure is finally enacted the administration will insist on some additional taxation to meet the estimated $2,000,000,000 expenditure. It is believed the senate also will pass the bill, but leaders doubt its passage by congress over the Presidential veto that is regarded as a certainty.

TWO thousand eight hundred bills were introduced and referred to committees on the first day of the new congress. Number 1, handed in by Representative Wright Patman of Texas, provides for the payment of the adjusted service certificates of veterans immediately in cash through the issuance of greenbacks. Patman and other supporters of this plan call it "controlled inflation."

Lemke of North Dakota, Republican, introduced a measure for the liquidation and refinancing of agricultural indebtedness. The liquidation would be carried out at a reduced rate of interest, according to the bill, by establishing an efficient credit system, through the use of the federal farm loan and federal reserve banking system. Lemke also provided for the creation of a board of agriculture to supervise the program.

Continuance of the HOLC was proposed by several congressmen. The bond issue of this agency would be increased anywhere from one billion to four and a half billion dollars in the various bills introduced on the subject.

Duluth—Eighteen army planes will visit Minnesota late in February after two months of training as snow mushers between Duluth and Great Falls, Mont, the war department announced in Washington. The plans call for a series of field training flights over the snow-covered northwest by the planes in order to try out flying equipment and personnel of the army air corps under sub-zero weather conditions. The region across northern Minnesota, North Dakota and Montana includes some of the most difficult terrain in the country for flyng operations during winter months.

St. Paul—The farm census taken by the federal government is under way throughout the northwest. It will take 30 days to complete the work, and several months to compile the data which will include the number of farms, how acreage is used, farm values, number and kind of dwellings, tenancy, number of farm laborers, production of principal crops in 1934, number of livestock, production of milk, eggs and wool, facts about shifting population, classification of lands, mortgage debt, fruit trees, together with much about farm animals.

Insect Voices Distinct, but Without Sweetness

There are no sweet-voiced vocalists among our crickets. They are essentially instrumentalists.

Some locust carry on like the violinist, using the hind legs as a bow and the wing covers as the instrument. Others, including the cricket, most of the grasshoppers and the katydids, produce the musical waves by rubbing the wings against one another in rapid succession.

Nearly all of these insects have some characteristic sound that serves as a means of identification. There is no mistaking the chirp of the cricket during the twilight hours or the continuous "tseepp" of the hoppers and locusts or the tattle-tale message of the katydid. "Katy-did" or "Katy-didn't," the song never varies and carries far into the night.

Of course no one would dare to compare the evening concert of "singing" insects to the spring symphony of warblers and wrens, yet a certain restfulness, peace, contentment and satisfaction comes upon these musical wings, sometimes carrying a pleasant depression (if there can be such) but always a message of harvest days and lazy moons.

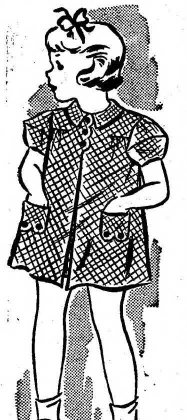
PATTERN 9195

Little Miss Molly here can hardly wait to run outside to show her brother Tommy that even though she is "only a girl," she has pockets, too. And she thinks they're nicer than his—scalloped and buttoned the way they are, and plenty jaunty. She's also more than proud of the way she manages to dress herself in this pretty bloomer frock. Three front buttons to fasten—there, it's all done! And her mother likes those cunning puffed sleeves and the long inverted pleat, back and front. For those who prefer them, simple cap sleeves like those in the smaller sketch may be made by omitting the lower part of the sleeve.



9195

Pattern 9195 may be ordered only in sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8. Size 6 requires 2⅝ yards 36 inch fabric.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

—26—

"Well, it nearly did." He lingered a little longer to tell her of the burning of the figures. Then he followed the others into the kitchen, and Berenice related the strange contradictions of the academy life since Wilton's going—her guardian's frequent changes of mood—of impulses, his bitterness, his incalculable actions. "Like a distraught creature. I was sad and ill myself. These last days I could not even write to you."

"My dear—this must end—you must soon be free!"

"But how?"

"We'll plan something. We'll hammer it out some way. But we must act together—we four. Janet! Arthur! Have you any plans that may help Berenice and me?"

Janet answered from her shadowy corner. "We'll have to leave, whether we want to or not. He told me this afternoon he was sending Arthur away soon. He might keep me a little while because of Berenice—but not long."

"I cannot be left here," Berenice said tragically. "What would I do? I know my father would not want me to stay on in this strange, unhappy place—if he could know!"

"Of course he would not, Berenice," Payne exclaimed. "You can follow the paths of destiny too long and too abjectly. The sure road must open to you if you demand it. We four must go together. It's the inevitable thing!"

"But how am I to cut this chain? He's always watching me!"

"Why not come away tonight? After your guardian has gone his usual rounds, you and Janet and Mrs. Denver could come downstairs, and Arthur and I will join you. How about it, Arthur?"

"I'm agreed. It's now or never! Once you're out of the place it won't be too easy to get you back. Pack your trunks and lock them; then put in handbags what you'll need for a day or two. In the morning Wilton and I will come down here, say that you are at Jerry's and demand the trunks. I don't think your guardian will refuse to give them up."

Berenice put her hand on Wilton's arm. "Somehow I think we'd better face it out here; I hate that kind of leaving, not for his sake, but for all the memories. The place is sad—tragic—but Wilton, I feel that I must leave it in triumph—openly."

"Perhaps we can."

"Really she shouldn't go tonight," Janet interposed. "We can manage for a day or two. I can demand notice. He certainly wouldn't put us out in the snow."

They heard the heavy closing of a door upstairs. "Quick, Wilton," Fleming said. He extinguished the light in the kitchen, and they all went softly down the passage; but when they reached the basement door they found it locked and the key gone. They could hear Haskell talking to Mrs. Denver, and then his footsteps starting down the basement stairs.

"There's one room safe," Payne whispered to the panic-stricken three. "Your key, Berenice."

He had it in an instant and was opening the door. Berenice uttered a little cry. "They're gone—but they're gone!"

"Never mind; sit there in their places quick!"

He closed the door. "We can unlock it from this side."

They groped their way to the desks, and, scarcely realizing from what instinct of self-preservation, they seated themselves, and Janet and Berenice bent their heads over the desks, as did Wilton and Arthur.

"He probably will go straight down the corridor. No need to look in here tonight." They could see a faint radiance in the hall which slowly moved toward them, as apparently he looked in one room after another.

"Balder, I say—Balder—where the devil is that fellow hiding? Balder, I say. Come on out, now! You'll play this trick on me once too often—you great hulking coward. Balder, I say, I want your news! You were to bring me news, and you've never come with it."

In this strain he went on. Berenice whispered, "I suppose Balder is hiding, as usual. He hides when he wants to be particularly trying and disagreeable—then he will come out from some room yawning and say he was asleep."

"I hope Haskell will give up the search soon," Arthur remarked dryly. "I am inclined to think it a waste of time."

"Do you know where the figures are, Arthur?"

"Yes, Berenice—he burned them."

He heard her sigh in the darkness. "You are not sorry, my dear?" Wilton whispered.

"Arthur, I think he's coming back."

"Balder! You'll pay for this"—they heard Haskell's voice trembling with anger. He was returning down the corridor, a fact attested by the crescent brightness of reflected light thrown on the wall of the schoolroom. In the hall outside its advancing circle spread to a wider and wider arc. "Keep your heads down. Bend over the desks," Wilton commanded. "He may not look in—but if he does—" he did not finish the sentence.

The light was now opposite the circular inset of glass. They could hear Haskell muttering and talking to himself.

"Keep your heads down," Wilton whispered.

A pause, a silence as if destiny herself had ceased to breathe, then a strange muffled cry reached their ears, guttural with pain, terror and violent anguish. The light was suddenly jerked away. They heard rapid footsteps; then deep stillness; then far off the slamming of a door.

"He's gone," Berenice whispered.

They waited several minutes in utter silence, instinctively keeping their positions; then another light appeared and a woman's voice weakly calling:

"Janet! Berenice! Where are you."

Not to frighten Mrs. Denver by a too sudden appearance from that shunned room, Wilton waited until the light had passed the door and her footsteps indicated that she was far down the passage; then unlocking the door, he stepped out and called her name softly.

She turned, holding her lamp out to see him better. "Mr. Payne—I'm so frightened! Something terrible—" her voice faltered.

"Is he in the house?"

"No."

"Is he coming back?"

"I—don't know."

"Did he say where he was going?"

The look of fright came again into her eyes as she whispered, "Yes."

The others stole out of the schoolroom. They waited, standing close together in the dim passageway, while the rising wind echoed about the ancient place, and an old, yellowed map on the wall near them oscillated in the draught. They waited, but did not speak—and did not look at each other. At last Arthur moved restlessly.

"He didn't find us," he whispered to Mrs. Denver.

"But he did find you. You were all in this room." She pointed fearfully to the empty schoolroom.

"The basement door was locked—he thought this the safest place."

"He must have locked it. You sat at the desks," she went on, her voice trembling.

"Yes."

"You didn't raise your heads?"

"No—but of course he saw us."

"He did, indeed—and he thought—"

"Yes," Wilton interrupted, not looking at Berenice. "In that dim light."

"We'd better go upstairs," she whispered. They followed her silently through the hall into the drawing room. She put down her lamp on the marble-topped table and said, "Sit down. I think it is safe now."

"What happened?" Berenice asked.

"I heard him coming up the stairs like a man pursued, and yet he was walking only a little quicker than usual; but he was ghastly pale. 'Mrs. Denver,' he said as I came out of the drawing room, 'They're all down there!'

"My heart was in my mouth, for I felt then he had discovered you, and he looked so wild and dreadful that I did not know what he meant to do next. 'All of them,' he went on. 'All?' I asked. 'Yes, the four figures.' He was getting into his overcoat. 'They've driven me out at last.' 'Where are you going?' I said. 'You dreamed you saw them. You burned them.' 'Who told you?' he asked, frowning. 'I know you burned them,' I evaded him. 'They've come back,' he said.

"'Where are you going?'

"'Up the ravine—to look for Balder,' and he was off before I could answer him."

"If he's gone—you do not have to go," Berenice said to Wilton.

"No—we'd better all sit here and wait," Payne answered her; but he had a curious instinct that Gordon Haskell would never re-enter the old academy.

They talked in low whispers, softly, happily, with a feeling all shared of release, freedom, the very enchantment of freedom. The old place grew quieter, settled into profound peace; even the wind went down, ceased to harass the casements and to whisper along the empty corridors. After another hour, Wilton proposed that Berenice, Janet and Mrs. Denver should go to their rooms. He and Arthur would watch all night.

They divided their night; then at last both slept in their chairs before the dying fire. They were awakened by a pounding and ringing at the front door.

Jerry stood there. "Two bodies have been washed down," he announced solemnly. "And here I am again, after thirteen years, to tell of a drownin'. A woodsman found 'em as he was crossin' the ravine near the mouth. Balder—"

"And Haskell," Payne finished.

"How did you know?"

"He said he was going up the ravine to look for Balder."

"When?"

"About 10:30 last night."

"What sent him up at that hour?"

"He wanted to get away from this house."

"I should think he would," Jerry commented. "But she need never know."

"Berenice need never know anything—of the real facts," Wilton answered, his voice softening. "When this is all over I think—I hope—that she will be very happy!"

TRUE GHOST STORIES

By Famous People

By GUY KIBBEE
Actor.

"ONE of the most gruesome experiences I ever had," related Guy Kibbee, motion-picture and stage star, "was when I was with the Alpine Stock company, then playing in Vermont.

"The leading lady, Evelyn Grey, then on her way to fame and success, was very ill. She had a very bad case of tuberculosis, yet was so ambitious and enjoyed her work so much that she would not stop long enough to get well. Many people in the theater are that way; they love their profession unto death.

"Every night, after the show, she would lie down in her dressing room for half an hour or so before going home.

"On this particular occasion we were playing 'East Lynne,' in which she was taking the lead. In the last scene she wore a long white garment. After the show was over we all left for our hotels, except Evelyn, who stayed alone, as was her wish, for her rest.

"We all got up to the hotel, talked for an hour or more, then decided to play a bit of poker. The cards were back at the theater, and as actors made little or no money in those days, we went back after them instead of buying new ones.

"We entered the theater and saw a figure in white walking slowly down the aisle. We got a look at her face, and it looked like Evelyn, yet it was too pale and awful to be she. It was way past time for her to have left the theater. The apparition gave us the jitters, so we left without the cards. Evelyn never walked about the theater. It all seemed so unreal and ghostly that we went home and to bed. If the figure had been Evelyn, we felt sure she would have spoken to us.

"Next morning we were all ready for rehearsal at ten o'clock. Evelyn did not appear. Some one went back to look in her dressing room and found her. She had on the same white gown, and was lying on her couch in the dressing room dead. She had died during the night, alone."

By JANE COWL
Actress.

"HEAVEN knows we mortals can't guess the elaborate workings of the subconscious mind, nor of mental telepathy nor of psychic forces!" exclaimed Jane Cowl, the brilliant actress. "Every now and then we see an obvious example of their powers, but most of the time we are in complete darkness about their intricacies.

"When I was a child, I was early impressed with an example of psychic warning," continued Miss Cowl, as she scanned the rows of books of mystery in the book store which she was visiting.

"One day, while my Grandmother Julia, my mother's mother, was ill, I visited her. She lay in her great carved walnut bed, an invalid, helpless, bedridden. For years she had not been able to move from that bed. Above her was a huge painting in a weighty carved frame, all part of the massive, ugly decorative scheme of the day.

"Suddenly, Grandmother Julia astonished us by jumping from her bed and rushing to the middle of the room.

"We asked what was the trouble, the cause for her unexpected act. 'My sister called to me, my sister called me!' she exclaimed.

"Just then the weighty picture fell from the wall upon her bed, and its glass shattered into hundreds of pieces.

"If grandmother had been in her bed the heavy thing would have doubtless killed her.

"It would seem that the spirit of her sister, who was in another city at the time, warned her of her danger, and sustained her with unexpected strength to jump from her bed. Perhaps not, but it is plausible the spirits of our friends and relatives can visit us in other forms than physical," concluded Miss Cowl, as she discovered a book on criminology which she wanted to read, and to which she turned her keen attention.

Odd Device Reproduces Music

Music with the tonal quality of that produced by famous musicians can be played by any pianist on a homemade organ constructed from a dishwasher motor, an old keyboard, tin cans, a loud speaker and other "gadgets." The organ contains a photo-electric cell on which a beam of light shines through revolving disks. A film sound track of tones rephotographed on the disks is converted into sound when the beam reaches the photo-cell, reproducing the original tone of the virtuoso.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Plenty of Sand Hazards

"And no use has ever been found for the Sahara desert?"

"No; but it is only a question of time when some enthusiast will come along and lay it out in golf links."

Not Necessarily

Mrs. Wilkins—One wife too many, eh? I suppose that's about some bigamist.

Mr. Wilkins—Not necessarily, my dear.

RABBITS FOND OF SALT

An experimentalist has noted that rabbits have a partiality for salt—when they can get it. Two crops of wheat were sown recently—one in salted soil, the other in the ordinary way. The germ of the idea was to discover which of the two produced the best crop. The salted land won easily when the harvest matured. Then this peculiar fact was noted with interest: After the crops had been cut rabbits swarmed in and ate the stubble left from the salted crop down to the very roots. The paddock alongside, in which no salt had been used, was left untouched.

A Doctor Knows!

And doctors use a liquid laxative

"Leave the rest to nature"

There's a very good reason why doctors and hospitals have always used liquid laxatives! You'd use a liquid, too, if you knew how much better it makes you feel.

A liquid laxative can always be taken in the right amount. You can gradually reduce the dose. Reduced dosage is the secret of real and safe relief from constipation.

Just ask your own doctor about this. Ask your druggist how popular liquid laxatives have become. The right liquid laxative gives the right kind of help, and the right amount of help. When the dose is repeated, instead of more each time, you take less. Until the bowels are moving regularly and thoroughly without any help at all.

People who have experienced this comfort, never return to any form of help that can't be regulated! The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara, and these are natural laxatives that form no habit—even in children. Its action is gentle, but sure. It will relieve a condition of biliousness or sluggishness without upset. It's the ideal family laxative because it's a family doctor's prescription, and perfectly safe and effective for family use.

If you are seeking something that will relieve your occasional upsets safely and comfortably, try Syrup Pepsin. Give regulated doses until Nature restores regularity.

Death Valley

DEATH valley is one of the most remarkable of the many physical features of California. This bed of what once was an inland sea and includes the dry bed of the Amargosa river, which probably is the largest dry river on earth, according to scientists, for some undetermined reason just naturally dried up.

This peculiar name was fastened to it by a party of pioneers during the gold rush of '49 who drove their covered wagons out into its desolate, sunbaked sands, died from thirst, starvation or exposure and never reached the other side.

A land of extremes—a mud-flat with above-freezing temperatures in winter, it registers some of the hottest temperatures in summer. The lowest point in this country—over 300 feet below sea level—it has been called "The Basement of America."

Some fifty miles long, five to ten or more miles wide, sandwiched in between the Panamint mountains on the west and the Amargosa, Black and Kingston ranges on the north and east, Death valley is located in Inyo county, California, near the Nevada boundary line.

Long ago undreamed-of treasures of borax and salt were found to exist in and enormous quantities have been wrest from this land of thirst, famine, romance and adventure, which has lost its death-like grip through the progress of civilization. Both the railroad and the highway engineer have blazed a way to it. And today, although nature's wondrous panorama continues to be astonishingly colorful, the barrenness is broken by a bungalette community which boasts unexpected comforts.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN
© The Safety Man

It is interesting to observe the requirements that the American Public places upon the locomotive engineer who must serve long years of training before his hand touches a trottle. Periodical eye tests and health tests are necessary to assure the traveling public that he is "tiptop" shape.

Captains of vessels and transport pilots must undergo rigid examinations before passengers are entrusted in their care.

BUT

anybody, under any conditions, or circumstances, regardless of health, vision, education, or knowledge of the rules of the road will drive an automobile.

Not until the American Public as a whole unites its demands for safety education to all, will there be a reduction in automobile accidents.

School Notes

The following children had one hundred in spelling last Friday: Lorna Kolden, Marvin Larson, Dorothy Hanson, Geraldine Larson, Sylvia Sandberg, Duane Larson.

The following children are on the Honor Roll this six weeks period: Grade 2— Dorothy Hanson, Lorna Kolden, Geraldine Larson. Grade 1 — Donna May Carlson, Betty Lou Johnson, Delores Engen.

The first grade children are making an Eskimo border during language in correlation with their Eskimo project.

The second grade children are making an Arabian desert scene on the board and sand table with their project.

We studied the North Star and its value to man in Nature Class.

Dale and Dorothy had the greatest success in painting bowls of flowers.

The first grade received new readers this week.

The third grade have been studying Hebrews. They are making a scene on the sand table showing the mode of living of the earlier peoples.

The following had one hundred in spelling last Friday: Alma Johnson, Lois Hanson.

Orlin Ness had one hundred in his last map test in geography.

The pupils who are on the scholarship honor roll for the third six-weeks period are: Lorrine Fluke Vernice Tollefsrud, Opal Werner.

These pupils are on the citizenship honor roll: Lyla Kolden, Howard Lorentson, Clara Hoffman, Robert Sandberg, Gladys Nelson.

The sixth grade geography class is now studying Japan.

Those who have a perfect attendance record so far this year are Carlton Castle, Clara Hoffman, Lorna Peterson and Opal Werner.

The freshmen are studying ways of transportation both in Junior Business and General Science, which is quite a coincidence.

Modern history class is studying the development of the European countries.

We have taken our semester exams and have our jaws set so we will be able to grin and bear the second semester.

The Best Corn

THERE are no two ways about it — corn on the cob, fresh from the field, is the best corn. Because corn is an all-American food and perhaps the greatest favorite of any of our native foods, science has sought for years the best way to make it an all-year-round food. The question of how to stop changes which normally take place so rapidly in sweet corn after it has been gathered is an important one.

It is well known that city dwellers seldom get good corn from the markets because the sugars in corn begin to change into starch just as soon as the corn is removed from the stalk. Its taste only faintly resembles the sweet, juicy flavor of corn which is gathered, husked, boiled and eaten all within, say half an hour.

Yankees Demand Good Corn

However, Americans have seen to it that they get this "best corn" even during the winter months. The demand for good corn has stimulated canners to use every known method of science to pack corn that retains its natural sugars and freshness. It can be gathered, husked, and boiled in an amazingly brief space of time —but it does not need to be eaten within the same half hour. Fortunately it can be stocked away on your shelves for those cold days when a good corn dish made with the "best corn" is unsurpassable.

Two Good Recipes

Be sure that you know the best way to prepare these dishes. Here are two good suggestions:

Dixie Corn Fritters: Beat one egg well, and add to one cup of canned corn. Mix together one-half cup flour, one teaspoon baking powder and one-fourth teaspoon salt. Add to the corn. Drop by spoonfuls into hot deep fat, 375 degrees, and fry until brown. This makes fifteen fritters. Serve with syrup.

Corn and Carrot Salad: Marinate corn from a 12-ounce can with one-half cup grated raw carrot in one-third cup of French dressing for an hour or so in the refrigerator. Add one-third cup shredded ripe olives, and serve in a nest of crisp lettuce. This serves eight persons.*

CHOPSTICKS

Lloyd Hellie, near Albert Lea, was caught in the recent snow storm and returned to find his car completely buried—it took more than an hour to locate it under the snow . . . Of the total number of 66 men in Company M of the 135th Infantry at Appleton, 33 are brothers . . . John Wetland set an ordinary mouse trap in his cellar at Jackson and caught three mice at once . . . Mrs. Arthur Rogers, on the way to the hospital during the big snow storm, gave birth to a healthy baby boy while her husband was trying to dig their car out of the snow on the highway . . . A young wild cotton-tail rabbit with seven distinct horns on its head was captured by Gordon Erickson of Comfort . . . Continuing the large rutabaga contest, William Getzke of Carlmona has brought in one of the vegetables weighing 15½ pounds.

Claribelle says: "All the things I really like to do are either immoral, illegal or fattening."

"Who invests your money for you?" inquired the bond salesman.

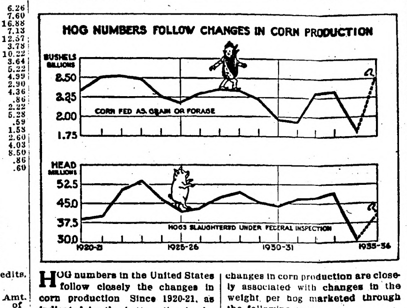
"The grocer, the coal dealer, the doctor and several department stores," growled the Warren resident.

"The worm is always regarded as a rather miserable creature," a naturalist tells us, "but actually it has no need of pity at all. For one thing, it can always make both ends meet."

"Wisdom is greater than wealth," said the austere citizen.

"Perhaps," answered the banker. "And yet you can found a college with money, but you can't start a bank with wisdom."

A Washington newspaper man, working on the bankers' convention there recently, lent a visiting banker taxicab fare without security. Now you see why newspaper men so seldom build up a competence.—Kansas City Star.



HOG numbers in the United States follow closely the changes in corn production since 1920-21, as indicated by the bottom line in the graph above, there have been three peaks of heavy hog slaughter—the marketing years of 1923-24, 1928-29, and 1933-34. The increases in hog slaughter during these years can be traced to the big corn crops during the periods beginning in 1920, in 1928, and again in 1932, as shown by the top line above.

Over a period of years, a change of one per cent in corn production has been followed by a corresponding change of about one per cent in the number of hogs slaughtered under Federal inspection. Moreover, changes in corn production are closely associated with changes in the weight per hog marketed through the following year.

Because of this fundamental relationship, effective control of corn acreage is a vital factor in controlling hog production.

The 1935 corn-hog contract now being offered farmers provides control of corn acreage and, therefore, will be doubly effective in preventing excessive hog production during the next year or so. Lack of adequate acreage control in 1935 not only would result in a large surplus of corn and low feed prices, but undoubtedly would be followed in 1936 and 1937 by heavy hog feeding and relatively low hog prices.

71-YEAR-OLD SHOEMAKER GIVES ASSAILANT THE AX

International Falls—E. H. Metzner, International Falls shoemaker, may have passed the three score and ten years period, but he is still active enough to defend himself, and proved it last week against a drunken assailant. Isaac Makki, 41-year old transient, stopped in Metzner's shop and asked permission to leave his pack. An hour or two later he came back and picked up the bundle, and at 10 o'clock he staggered into the shop again, three sheets to the wind, and demanded his pack again. When Metzner told him he already had it, Makki became angry, and grabbed the 71-year old shoemaker by the throat. In the ensuing struggle, Metzner picked up an axe and struck his opponent twice on the head with the blunt side. Makki gave up. Metzner called the police, and because of his injuries, which required a dozen stitches in his head, Makki was let off with a 10-dollar fine.

SQUIRREL FILCHES NUTS FROM GROCER'S BASKET

Rochester—Unable to solve the mystery of dwindling contents of the nut basket, in front of the store, George B. Tauer, proprietor of a Rochester grocery, turned sleuth and made the startling discovery that an ordinary fox squirrel was the responsible culprit. Brother Squirrel took up his place outside the store and entered like any other good customer when the door was opened to let a patron in or out. At least six times the thieving rascal gathered up a load of nuts and leisurely departed when the door was reopened. However, the quadruped filcher was threatened with retribution when he was eventually trapped in the store. Realizing that the "jig was up," he took refuge on the highest shelf. Prancing nimbly about, the animal knocked over cartons and cans of food with unholy abandon. Efforts to trap the brute proved futile. Tauer waited for darkness. Turning off all the lights and arming himself with a flashlight, a box and some netting, he finally managed to trap his uninvited guest. Tauer, however, pity on the wretched captive and turned him loose in the snow.

MISSING YOUR TOP SOIL? LOOK IN SLEEPY EYE LAKE

Sleepy Eye—If the top, fertile soil of any farms in southwestern Minnesota or the Dakotas has disappeared during the last 60 years and the owners are looking for it, they can go to Sleepy Eye and examine the lake bottom. "Thirteen thousand cubic yards or more of earth are blowing into the lake every year," according to Frank Scoble, Sleepy Eye photographer. Scoble has made investigations in the southeast corner of the lake bed and found 30 inches of black dirt, below which a layer of 10 inches of clean sand covered another 30 inches of black dirt. He estimates that if the top 30 inches has accumulated in the last 60 years, it is at the rate of half an inch a year. One half inch on one acre is 1815 cubic feet or 67 cubic yards. On 200 acres the amount is 13,400 cubic yards, which has been blowing into the lake each year.

CAR SHOWS MIND OF ITS OWN, GOES AFTER DRINK

Cook—Manley Burris is going to teach his car to talk, and put it in a side show. "Lizzie" has already demonstrated signs of active intelligence, and the next step is expected to come as a matter of course. Parking the car on the bank of a lake to get water for the radiator, Burris started back up the hill. Lizzie evidently saw him coming up with the pail of water, and started down to meet him, but he got out of the way and she ended up in the lake with her radiator out of sight in the water. All Burris had to do then was to put the cap on the radiator and get the car out of the lake. This took the assistance of 10 men and another car, but Lizzie started up without an effort when on the road again.

BALLOON FROM FOOTBALL GAME GOES 275 MILES

Silver Lake—A toy balloon which had been released at the Minnesota-Wisconsin football game at Madison, Wis., November 24, came to rest the following day in a tree on the J. J. Sustacek farm near Bohemian Hall. When found, the balloon was nearly deflated. On it was printed the one word, "Wisconsin" and to the end of a five-inch string were tied five matches which served as a ballast for the balloon on its 275 mile journey.

DOG IS EITHER PLENTY SMART OR TOO SMART!

Isle—A dog that is either smart enough to be very valuable, or so smart that it is very apt to become a dangerous nuisance, is owned by Mrs. Victor Peterson of Isle. With a number of other ladies, Mrs. Peterson called on a neighbor one afternoon last week. The roads were muddy, and all the ladies wore overshoes, leaving them on the steps when they entered the house. The dog went along, but remained outside. When she was ready to return home, Mrs. Peterson could not find her overshoes, and finally had to walk home without them. Arriving there, she found that the dog had selected her overshoes from the pile on the doorstep, carried them home and was guarding them in front of her door. Now, was the dog smart in taking home her overshoes, or was it only smart in making her walk home without them?

FREIGHT TRAIN GIVES FINAL SALUTE TO DEAD RAILROADER

Breckenridge—The finest of tributes to a dead comrade occurred at Breckenridge recently. A large freight engine, hauling a long string of heavy cars, left the lower yards and had just gotten up full steam when the funeral procession of Maurice Murphy, veteran railroad worker, crossed the tracks a quarter of a mile ahead. Engineer Christ Jenson and Fireman John Sheeler threw on the brakes and pulled the heavy freight to a stop just before it reached the crossing, where the engine remained with hardly any smoke issuing from the stack, while the procession continued across the tracks. When the last car had crossed, the engine started to groan and the wheels spun in an effort to start the train rolling again. It was a fine salute to a dead comrade.

REWARD OFFERED BEFORE DEATH CLAIMED NO GOOD

Fergus Falls—A valuable diamond ring is lost; a reward is offered for its return; the owner dies; the ring is found; the finder of the ring applies for the reward; the administrator of the estate holds that the reward is not good after death. Such is the sad story of Mrs. Belle Richey, the finder of the ring. The valuable piece of jewelry was lost by Mrs. Verdie Nickells, who immediately offered a reward of $75 for its return. Shortly after, she died, and her estate went into probate. Mrs. Ritchey found the ring in the Nickells back yard, and claimed the reward, but the administrator of the estate refused to give it to her on the grounds that the reward was no good after Mrs. Nickell's death. The case is now being fought out in court.

WORK RELIEF CLIENTS ARE PHYSICALLY FIT

Physical examination of work relief clients in 17 Minnesota counties discloses excellent conditions of health and fitness for work, reports C. H. Zealand, director of the Minnesota SERA (State Emergency Relief administration).

The number examined to date, 13,406, represents about one fifth of the total work relief payroll in the state, Mr. Zealand said. The workers were grouped in four classes, as follows: "A"—in condition to perform any kind of hard labor, 7,541; "B"—fit only for light physical exertion, 3,789; "C"—able to stand only extremely light work, 1,687, and "D"—wholly unfit for work and needing doctor's care, 389.

Translated into percentages, this places 56 out of every 100 in the "A" class—28 in the "B" class, and 13 in the "C" class, or 97 per cent able to work. Only 3 out of every 100 were found to be unfit for work, and these were referred to the county relief office for medical attention.

The SERA hospital on wheels will continue to carry doctors and nurses from place to place in the state, until every employe on an SERA project has been classified. The purpose is to determine the physical qualifications of every able individual for a certain kind of work, and to get a complete record of the general health of the relief clients.

Fresh Air Won't Hurt

Don't hold your nose when you enter your chicken house; open a window—or, better yet, see that some regular ventilators are placed where they should be, usually in the front wall flush with the ceiling, if it is a sloping-ceiling house, or up in the gables if it is a straw-loft house. The openings, you see, are not cut through the roof, as such openings only cause the loss of more heat and the collection of more dampness.

There is rarely a day during the winter when the ventilators cannot be opened, at least partly. On warm days the regular windows can be opened, if you have netting on the outside of the frames so that the hens can't fly out. A slatted or netted door is another addition which greatly increases the efficiency of your ventilation system.

A chicken house should smell like the out-of-doors, and if it doesn't, if it smells strongly of ammonia, you may be sure the ventilation is at fault. Perhaps it is only that the ventilators need the dust brushed off. Sometimes, even though the ventilators are exactly right, the house will get damp and foul smelling. This happens when wall insulation has been omitted. In this case banking the walls until spring comes will be a big help. Then you can properly insulate the walls.

Drafts are a source of colds, but a steady change of air without drafts is essential to health and production.—Cora Cooke.

One Dress, Several Collars

Many a second, or even a third season's dress will take a new lease on life with the aid of a new clever and becoming collar.

With dresses as simple as they are today, why not rely on one to take the place of several you used to need. An economy plan, one dress, and several collars. Collars may be just as up-to-date and individual as you please. They may vary in style from the "topper" which completely transforms the bodice, to the tailored jabot, or the tie collar.

Collars may be elaborate, made of satin, lame, or velvet to be worn for afternoon and dinner, or they may be simple, made of pique, organdy or silk crepe, to be worn to school or at the office.

Today's activities demand instant changes. But collars have kept pace, and no longer must they be basted to the dress. Most of the up-to-the-minute collars lie flat on the neck of the dress and are held in place by tying, buttons, or tabs, placed at the back of the collar. This simplifies the laundry problem, too, which is very important, for you will want to wear a fresh collar each day. Smartness demands that your neckwear be immaculate.—M. Lois Reid.

Children's Diseases

This is the season of epidemics of "children's diseases." Many parents feel that children cannot escape these diseases and the sooner they are over them the better. The dangers, however, are well known, and intelligent parents try to prevent them. No child now should ever have diphtheria or small pox. A generation ago both of these diseases took a large number of children annually. Measles, scarlet fever, and whooping cough, however are still to be dreaded and avoided.

The Minnesota State Department of Health says four times as many babies die of measles in the first year of life as die in the next four years and seven times as many babies die of whooping cough in their first year as die in the next four years put together. Most of the contagious diseases leave serious after-effects in the way of affections to the heart, chronic ear trouble with resulting deafness, and chronic nose, throat or chest infections.

"Any old cat can be the cat's whiskers, but it takes a tomcat to be a cat's paw."

Respectfully submitted this 8th day of January, 1935.

Levi G. Johnson, County Auditor.
Ole Bergman, Chairman Board County Com'rs.
A. C. Swandby, Clerk District Court.

Meeting recessed to January 9th, 1935, at 9:00 o'clock A. M.

January 9th, 1935, at 9.00 A. M. Meeting reconvened, with all members present.

List of names of persons properly qualified, selected from the qualified electors of the several election districts of Marshall County by the County Board at their annual meeting held January 8th, 1935, to serve as Grand Jurors, also lists similarly selected to serve as Petit Jurors in the District Court of the Fourteenth Judicial District in and for said Marshall County according to law were prepared and placed on file.

Commissioner Ole Bergman offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Be it resolved that we whereby approve the agreement, the securities therein specified and the assignment thereof by the following banks as security for the deposit of county funds:

Midland National Bank & Trust Company of Minneapolis	$200,000.00
Northwestern National Bank and Trust Company of Minneapolis	29,000.00
The American National Bank of St. Paul	15,000.00
Peoples State Bank of Warren	26,000.00
State Bank of Warren	25,000.00
Farmers State Bank of Stephen	18,000.00
State Bank of Strandquist	6,000.00
Marshall County State Bank of Holt	4,000.00

Commissioner J. J. Pagnac seconded the motion and the same being put, was duly carried.

Commissioner J. J. Pagnac offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

To: R. C. McChord, Acting Director
Drouth Relief Service,
Washington, D. C.

On Jan. 1, 1935, the issuance of orders for feed relief by the S. E. R. A. was discontinued in this county, leaving many of our farmers without means of obtaining feed for their livestock.

Drouth has been very severe in Western Marshall County during the year 1934. Many fields were abandoned, pastures were dried out. Farmers were compelled to start feeding their livestock during the months of July and August. Because of this, many now find themselves entirely without feed and forage, and also without funds or credit with which to purchase these commodities.

Added to the damage done by drouth, ravages of the hail storms of July 1 and subsequent dates did much damage to certain areas of this county, destroying several hundred square miles of crops.

The problem of obtaining feed and seed is a situation which our farmers cannot meet unless some assistance is given them in the form of feed and seed loans. Feed must be shipped into the county. Unless this is done many head of livestock will perish from starvation before spring. Foundation herds will have to be disposed of at prices which in many cases will hardly pay transportation costs. The human relief load will be increased because their means of livelihood will be taken away from them.

We have in our county a committee designated as a County Agricultural Drouth Committee, which in a Primary Emergency Drouth County passes on F. C. A. loans for feed and seed. This committee finds itself severely handicapped because this county has not as yet been designated as an Emergency Drouth County. It cannot therefore function in giving assistance to the many worthy cases which have appealed to it for feed relief.

Western Marshall County's condition is just as serious as the condition of Walsh County, North Dakota, just across the state boundary line and which has been an Emergency County for some time.

Now, therefore, be it resolved, that we, the County Board of Commissioners of Marshall County, Minnesota, respectfully petition the Designation Committees of the Drouth Section AAA to act at once to designate Western Marshall County, Minnesota as a primary drouth county, in order that feed and seed loans may be made to worthy farmers of this county by the F. C. A. upon the recommendation of the County Agricultural Drouth Committee.

Commissioner Ole Bergman seconded the motion and the same being put, unanimously adopted.

Dated Jan. 9, 1935.

Commissioner Ole Bergman offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Be it resolved that the Summary Statements, filing numbers No. 213, 214 for the expenditures of the County Highway Department be hereby approved, and the Superintendent of Highways is hereby authorized to issue Time Checks in payment thereof in the following amounts:

Maintenance S. A. R. --$723.00
Maintenance C. A. R. -- 43.28

Commissioner J. J. Pagnac seconded the motion and the same being put, was duly carried.

Petition of Newton William Thon to have SE¼ Sec. 12, Twp. 158, Rge. 47, set off from School District No. 32, to School District No. 15, was presented to the board and hearing thereon set for February 5th, 1935, at 2:00 P. M.

TREAT HORSES NOW TO CLEAN UP BOTFLIES

Now is the time to treat horses to get rid of those botflies, which otherwise will prove a terrible nuisance next spring. Wabasha county farmers in the neighborhood of Plainview conducted a community botfly eradication campaign last winter and were immensely pleased to find that during the past summer they had no trouble with their horses because of bot and nose flies.

Botflies lay their eggs on the hair of horses, especially on the inner side of the knees. In licking or biting itself, the horse gets the young bots into its mouth from where the bots pass to the stomach and live over winter in the form of larvae. In the spring these larvae pass out of the animal with the manure and then change into winged botflies. Scientists have learned that dosing horses with carbon disulphide in capsule form in the winter gets rid of the botfly larvae before they can complete their growth. December and January are the best months to treat, because treatment during this period allows time for recuperation and affords better chances for the animals to be in good condition for spring work.

Carlton D. Nelson, agricultural instructor of the Plainview Public Schools, conducted a horse bot-eradication campaign last winter for the area including Plainview, Elgin, Highland and Oakwood townships.

A campaign was organized and a committee of farmers formed to work on bot eradication. Two local veterinarians agreed to treat horses at 50 cents each, including the cost of the capsules. A total of 2,208 horses were treated, which included practically all of those in the territory. Getting as nearly all the farmers as possible to treat their horses is very important, since botflies from untreated horses would reinfest the area.

Mr. Nelson says he has heard much favorable comment regarding the Plainview area campaign. Most farmers remarked that their horses wintered over much better on the same amount of feed than in previous winters, and that they seemed to stand the spring work better. The majority were in favor of treating their horses again this winter.

THE LITTLE COUNTRY HOSPITAL

By Edgar A. Guest

The little country hospital is hidden out of view
And people seldom notice it as pleasure they pursue,
But let an accident befall, which is the fate of men,
The proudest man is glad to see the small-town doctor then.
And in the little hospital which humble folk maintain
He'll find that hearts are merciful and quick to comfort pain.

It isn't like the city place, with sections blocks apart,
Where every patient's listed as a number on a chart
And specialists for this and that convene to thumb him o'er
And asks a thousand questions of the ills he's had before.
For in the country hospital, which lacks all pomp and style,
The surgeon on his morning has time to chat awhile.

And whether pain be in your groin, your stomach or your toe,
The cause of it the doctor there assuredly will know.
He will not shunt you round the place for rays of that and this
He'll diagnose your case himself and very seldom miss.
And whosoe'er shall tread the hall when you are free from pain
Will stop to speak a cheery word and wish you well again.

So, little country hospital, which humble folks support,
Which struggles for existence, since its funds are always short
I pay this simple tribute now to all your tender care
In lessening the hurt and pain which mortals have to bear,
And pray for God's rich blessing on the men and women brave
Who give their every ounce of strength another's life to save.

Sambo: "Say, niggah, can't you play honest? Them ain't de cards I dealt you."

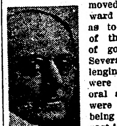
Supreme Court Takes Up Gold Clause Abrogation Case—Senate Committee Favors World Court Adherence—Congress Gets the Budget.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© by Western Newspaper Union.



Attorney General Cummings

HAVING given the New Deal a slight swat by holding the petroleum control feature of the NIRA unconstitutional, the Supreme court moved rapidly toward a judgment as to the legality of the abrogation of gold payments. Several cases challenging this act were lumped and oral arguments were heard. This being a matter of vast importance, involving $100,000,000,000, Attorney General Homer S. Cummings himself appeared to present the case for the government. Mr. Cummings is an excellent lawyer, but not much can be said in praise of the legal abilities of most of the men whom the exigencies of politics have shoved into his office in Washington. So probably he was wise to handle this matter himself.

Cummings defended the constitutional authority of the President and congress to adopt the present monetary policy as inherently the right of the government to preserve itself.

In an argument distinguished for oratorical display as well as for its legal aspects, Cummings said an adverse decision by the court would:

1. Increase the public and private debt of the nation by $69,000,000,000.
2. Create a special class that would be beyond the pale of the general financial structure, a class composed of those holding bonds demanding payment in gold.
3. Reduce the balance in the United States treasury $2,500,000,000.
4. Add $17,000,000,000 to the public debt and increase the interest charges on this debt alone by $2,500,000,000 a year.

The latter sum alone, Cummings said, is equal to twice the value of the 1934 wheat and cotton crop.

The attorney general referred to the troubled state of the country in the spring of 1933 and added, "I contend and shall show that the congress and the President of the United States acted reasonably in a period of very great difficulties and that their acts were not the product of caprice."

From the questions asked by the justices, observers gained the impression that there was a sharp division of opinion among them.

SENATOR JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, majority leader of the senate, being informed that the foreign relations committee had voted 14 to 7 in favor of the project for American adherence to the World court, said he would bring the resolution up on the floor of the senate as soon as possible. However he recognized the sentiment against it was strong and would not predict the outcome of the fight.

The new resolution as approved by the committee is slightly altered to meet the objections of other nations to what is known as reservation five. Mr. Robinson said: "The legal import and effect of reservation five has been preserved in full. It is provided that discussions may take place under the Root protocol, but in the end the court may not entertain over the objection of the United States any request for an advisory opinion on any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest."

Of the Democrats on the committee Senators Lewis and Murray voted against the resolution: Republicans who favored it were Vandenberg and Capper.

THOSE Democrats and Republicans, eminent and otherwise, who are banded together as the American Liberty league are now really getting into action against what they believe to be the radical features of the administration's program, and their executive council has put out a ten-point platform. It declares the league's opposition to such practices as sweeping delegations of legislative authority to the President, lump sum appropriations to be doled out by the White House, socialization of industry and regimentation of American life.

In the first plank of its platform the league pledged itself "to preserve American institutions which safeguard to citizens in all walks of life the right to liberty and pursuit of happiness" and at the same time "to combat the growth of bureaucracy, the spread of monopoly, the socialization of industry, and the regimentation of American life."

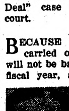
Invasion of the law making and law interpreting functions by New Deal adminstrators was also rapped by the league in promising "to uphold the American principle that laws be made only by the direct representatives of the people in the congress, and that the laws be interpreted only by the courts."

Other points in the 10-point declaration of policy pledged the league to fight for government economy, a sound federal fiscal policy, a stable currency, protection for investors, and individual liberties.

PETROLEUM control provisions of the national industrial recovery act, specifically section 9 (c), are held by the Supreme Court of the United States to be invalid as unconstitutional abdication of legislative power to the President. Eight of the justices united in rendering this decision, Justice Cardozo alone dissenting, and it was read by Chief Justice Hughes.

The section declared void authorized the President to ban interstate shipment of "hot" oil—that is, oil produced in excess of state quotas.

While the opinion did not deal with other phases of the recovery act, it aroused widespread speculation as to disposition of other cases. This was the first major "New Deal" case to come before the court.



President Roosevelt

BECAUSE work relief must be carried on the federal budget will not be balanced for the coming fiscal year, and probably not for several years thereafter. In presenting the budget to congress, President Roosevelt admitted this, but without qualms. He estimated $8,520,000,000 as the amount of money necessary to carry on the government's activities for the 1936 fiscal year beginning July 1 next. The expenses for the current year, partly estimated, are $8,581,000,000.

If one wishes to know who spends all these huge sums, an idea may be obtained from these figures showing the estimated expenditures for the fiscal year 1936:

1. Legislative, judicial and executive	86,595,000
2. Civil departments and agencies	788,057,169
3. National defense	792,484,265
4. Veterans' pensions and benefits	704,885,560
5. Debt charges:
Interest	875,000,000
Retirements	636,434,000
6. Refunds	64,946,200
7. Recovery and relief	4,582,011,475
8. Supplemental items (for above groups 1 to 4 inclusive)	40,000,000
Total expenditures	$8,520,413,608

Total receipts for the same period are put at $3,991,904,639, so the estimated deficit will be $4,528,508,970.

Of the recovery and relief fund the President asked that $4,000,000,000 be placed at his disposal to be allocated by him "principally for giving work to those unemployed on the relief rolls."

Here are some other vital things disclosed by the message:

The national debt will increase from $31,000,000,000 at the close of this fiscal year to $34,239,000,000.

No new taxes are requested. Congress is asked to continue the so-called nuisance taxes which expire soon and the 3-cent stamp rate.

A national defense appropriation of $899,948,065—the greatest in the history of the country—is requested.

A total of 137,134 federal workers are to be dismissed.

The $2,811,000,000 gold profit has not been disturbed.

Veterans pensions in 1936 will reach the staggering total of $704,000,000.

The accumulated New Deal deficit for three years on June 30, 1936, will total $11,700,000,000.

While the trend of recovery and relief expenditures is downward, regular federal expenses will increase. This is due in part to a 5 per cent pay restoration for federal workers which involves $65,000,000.

MARY PICKFORD went before Judge Ben Lindsey in Los Angeles and obtained a decree of divorce from Douglas Fairbanks; and thus came to an end the union of the "royal couple" of moviedom, who for ten years were regarded as the model wedded pair so far as happiness and worldly success went.

Mary's suit, filed more than a year ago, charged Doug with mental cruelty, indifference and neglect. She told Judge Lindsey the charges were true and that a fair and just property settlement had been made; and after Elizabeth Lewis, Miss Pickford's secretary, had testified the decree was granted and Mary left the courtroom almost in tears.

Fairbanks, in St. Moritz, Switzerland, was informed of the divorce but declined to comment.

The Weather

Kind of on the mild order on Friday afternoon. Colder Saturday with the wind changing to the south late in the evening and continuing from that direction Sunday with a lot of loose snow dusting up the air. Monday it was nice sunshine and warm with a slow northwest breeze. Tuesday came scooting along in the rays of a warm sun and stayed fair all day. Wednesday and Thursday were mild and cloudy with 20 adove and everything covered many inches deep with a frowzy crystal frast.

Appreciates The News

Mrs. Christ Engen of Ringbo brought in a letter to us which she had received from Mrs. O. I. Raaum of Vashon, Wash. We quote it in part.

Vashon, Wash.
Jan. 13, 1935

Dear friend Mrs. Engen:

Many thanks for Christmas greetin and also for the nice gift you sent us, in form of a subscription to 'Holt Weekly News'. I am quite sure it is impossible for you to realize how we appreciate it, for we have really missed the paper very much. It seemed as that the link or bond between friends there was broken when the paper ceased coming. The letters from friends are few and far between while the paper is a weekly visitor and almost always there are names of friends in one thing or another.

Well how about that trip or visit you promise to make us out here? We are still waiting for you. We had such an unexpected visit last summer when H. O. Hanson and family drove up to the door, only wish more Holt people would follow their example.

It seems we are going to have a taste of winter this year' Last year we missed it entirely. Last nite it was down to 32 above so water froze and today tho it has been about 35, it has been a very cold wind. Up to now it has been very mild in fact too mild, for lots of shrubs have had leaf buds ready to burst as tho it was spring. My daffodils could be seen coming thru the soil Christmas week, so a cold snap may hurt some things.

This evening just before dark I was out and pulled up some of my carrots.

Ernest had again the chance to visit Holt and I can almost envy him but he was dissapointed in that he did not meet any Ringbo people even tho it was cream day, except Alf Movick. As I suppose you have heard Gerhard was married last summer, so we are now alone too.

Must close so greet neighbors and friends.

Mrs. Raaum.

Frozen Cream

In the past month there has been more or less frozen cream. This is a point that should be watched very carefully as frozen cream is not fit for Land O'Lakes and also is injurious to the test.

Use enough blankets to cover it well while coming to town.

The Old Age Pension

Webster defines the word pension as follows: "A periodical allowance to an individual on account of some meritorious work or service."

For the Towsend plan to be effective, it must first establish a bona fide treasury that will finance the project. That is the key to the whole plan. A feasible plan.

The United States spent over $800,000,000 to float the fourth Liberty loan of $4,500,000,000—and that to destroy life and property, surely not the teaching of the lowly Nazarene, but the teaching of the Russian, Mexican and Hitler form of government. I am sure that the people of these United States can get a hold of themselves and bring this country back, a land of real civilization.

Several writers and economists have said that every home should have an income of $2,500 per year to maintain the standard of American living. That is not so big at that. I do not agree with the Townsend plan that the $200 per month should be spent each month. For this reason, a home owner has to pay taxes, improvments, may be he wants to trade in for a new car. (Everybody is entitled to one.) Life insurance and home insurance. At the end of the year the $2,500 is all gone; fuel, light, phone, clothes, etc., take its toll, and not monthly, but all in the year.

The unemployment situation is increasing, the wage earner, farmer and office man are all in the same class. Old age comes to us all. Will the Townsed plan be the salvation of the aged, a chance to enjoy a little of life's blessings before they go on that last long trail?

What is to become of the average American home as it is today? No work, insanitary living conditions, poor food, clothes, lack of medical care, increased deaths. All for the lack of the necessities of life and home conditions.

Under the Townsend plan the small business man, the mechanic, office man and farmer can be sure of a living when they are through with the struggle at the age of 60 or 65 years.

The wage earner and the men and women who have arrived at the age of 60 or 65 years are the ones who are now on the rolls of the needy. If the Townsed plan will give relief, then let's have it at once. Let the United States issue the money to meet this plan. It is far more necessary than the deep waterway through the St. Lawrence river, or the waterway down the Mississippi river. Let's take care of the life stream of our people before we start to regulate the waterways for financial gain.

Mortgages cleared up, homes and farms saved to their owners. Why not.

Farmers, Notice!

Any one having feed grain, hay or straw to sell should notify R. A. Reierson, county extension agent, Warren, or J. P. Benitt, Holt, who is making every effort he can to secure feed for the drought stricken farmers in the west end of the county. The farmers in that part of the county are in urgent need of feed for their cattle, so if you have any to spare now is the time to help them out by selling it to them.

Believe It Or Not

We received a letter from H. E. Hanson at Bellingham, Washington, the other day and he put the heading on it "Believe It Or Not".

He states in his letter that they were having Minnesota winter weather out there. It is not very often that you hear of people freezing to death out on the west coast but it happened at Bellingham during a recent cold spell and heavy snow storm.

Mr. Hanson stated that a week ago Saturday they had zero weather and that it felt like it was 20 below zero. He says that when they lived at Holt they thought that the stock out west could run on green grass all year, but found it different. Instead of such a luxury they have to feed the cows all kinds of patent feed throughout the year, and squeeze every drop of milk they can get out of them.

Some of the Hollywood actors were up there in northern Washington filming pictures of winter scenes and they were having a great excitement.

Times are the bunk out west, states Mr. Hanson, and they feel that they will be glad when they get around to move back to Holt.

Mr. Hanson bought a farm here last fall and we are sure that they will find that they can do as well here as any place and that the people of this community extend them a warm welcome back.

"E" Is Much Needed Letter

Some has advanced the opinion that the letter "e" is the most unfortunate letter in the English alphabet, because it is always out of cash, forever in debt, never out of danger and in hell all the time. For some reason, he overlooked the fortunates of the letter, as we call his attention to the fact "e" is never in war and always in peace. It is the beginning of existence, the commencement of ease and the end of trouble. Without it there would be no meat, no life, and no heaven. It is the center of honesty, makes love perfect and without it there could be no editors, devils nor news. — Fourth Estate.

John Benitt, who is a member of the county drought relief committee attended a meeting at Warren on Monday and he stated to us that the farmers must get help at once or lose the stock they have on hand.

Chicken Cookery

FIRST catch your chicken. This is easy. Use the nearest grocery as your chicken yard, and see what you find—whole chicken in cans, canned boneless chicken, deviled chicken and chicken tamales, chicken curry, chicken a la King and many good chicken soups.

All of these are ready to eat, but there are a lot of things you can do with them beside just heating them and eating them as they are. For instance, you can solve the ancient problem of which comes first, the chicken or the egg, by starting with eggs and later serving this appetizing

Chicken and Mushroom Omelet: Make a French omelet of four eggs, one-half teaspoon salt, a few grains of pepper and four tablespoons cream. Meanwhile have ready one-half cup sliced fresh (or canned) mushrooms sauted for a few minutes in one tablespoon butter. Cut up half the contents of a 6-ounce can of chicken, add with two or three tablespoons cream, salt and paprika, and heat gently. Spread over half the omelet just before folding. Serves four.

When Many Come

And here's a quantity recipe for a church supper or similar occasion:

Chicken and Pineapple Salad: Remove meat from twenty-five pounds fowl, or eighteen cups cooked chicken, or use the contents of six 12-ounce cans chicken and cut in cubes. Pour over one cup French dressing and let stand in refrigerator an hour. Pour off excess dressing, add one quart diced cucumbers and the diced fruit from a No. 2½ can sliced pineapple. Mix one cup beaten cream with three cups mayonnaise, and fold in lightly. Serve on lettuce (you will need six to eight heads), garnishing as desired with strips of pimiento, ripe olives or pickle fans. Serves fifty.*

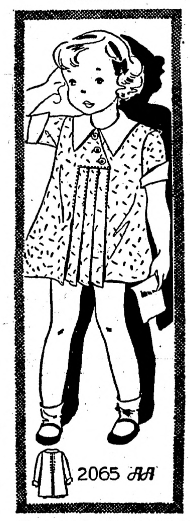
Just the Thing for Little Lady

PATTERN 2065



It's no wonder this young lady looks puzzled—she probably doesn't know whether to stand the way she is and let us see the front of her snug wool bloomer dress, with its unusual closing and its inset of pleats for spirited striding, or to turn around so that we may admire that important "back interest" produced by the long smartly stitched pleat. Clever mothers will make up a plentiful supply of those trim little white collars and cuffs, for they know that nothing looks prettier on bright wool dresses. The bloomers, and long sleeves for those who prefer them, come with the pattern.

Pattern 2065 is available in sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8. Size 6 takes 2¼ yards 36-inch fabric and ⅜-yard contrasting. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

CURRENT EVENTS PASS IN REVIEW

GERMANS WIN SAAR PLEBISCITE—AMELIA EARHART SPANS PACIFIC OCEAN.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

Geoffrey Knox

GERMANY won an overwhelming victory in the plebiscite held to determine the wishes of the inhabitants of the rich Saar basin as to the future status of that territory. The complete vote as announced by the commission was: for return to Germany 477,119, for annexation to France 2,124, and to return to present status under League of Nations control 46,513. Their margin of victory exceeded the hopes of even the most optimistic Nazi leaders.

Opposition forces, terrorized by fear of reprisals, immediately prepared to leave the Saar as soon as departure of foreign troops removes assurance of protection. It has been estimated that more than 400 Jews left their homes within the first two days after the election, some of them preparing to locate in Luxembourg, and others leaving for Palestine.

The council still has the final decision on how the Saar shall be governed, and if the minority is larger than 40 per cent, it may yet divide the Saar, returning only those districts which went overwhelmingly pro-Nazi to the reich, and permitting the others to remain, as now, under the league.

There were few disturbances at the polls as voting proceeded quietly. Rioting, however, broke out while ballot boxes containing the votes were being brought by soldiers of the League of Nations international army to Wartburg palace to be counted.

Love of the fatherland won over antipathy to Hitler principles in influencing the voters. The Saarlanders in voting to return to reich rule exchange their personal and political liberties for the regimentation of a dictatorship with its curb on the press, free speech and individualism.

The plebiscite was conducted under the direction of Geoffrey Knox, appointed president by the League of Nations to administer the affairs of the turbulent region while the vote was being taken.

Repercussions of events which will immediately follow the Saar vote are awaited with uneasiness in world capitals. A spokesman for the Italian government expressed hope that transfer of the territory to Germany would take place immediately. Fears were also expressed that exuberance over the victorious vote would lead Nazi supporters to excesses elsewhere. Signs of a renewal of Nazi activity in Austria are being watched closely by Italy.

EXTENSION of life of the Reconstruction Finance corporation for two years will be asked, informed congressmen assert. The RFC's authority to make loans expires on January 31. It is rumored that the extension will include a proviso permitting the President to put the organization out of business by proclaiming the emergency ended at the conclusion of one year.

The extension plan may also carry a section doubling the length of time for maturity of loans the RFC may make. The present limit is five years. It is also said that the RFC may be permitted to extend instead of renew existing loans providing value of security is unchanged.

A NUMBER of important issues await the League of Nations as it convenes at Geneva on its fifteenth birthday. Five major disputes will come before the body, of which the Saar plebiscite, involving as it does the disposition of the future national allegiance of that rich territory, holds most immediate interest.

Other decisions which await action of the league include: the dispute between Iraq and Persia over alleged border violations by the latter; the border conflict between Italy and Ethiopia; the Greek complaint that Greek minorities in Albania are being deprived of their guaranteed rights; and the long war in the Chaco Boreal between Bolivia and Paraguay. The latter nation has been cool toward the assembly's detailed peace plan, although it has been accepted by Bolivia.

FIRST legislation to be put through the house of representatives was completed as the $779,916,000 independent offices appropriation bill was passed in virtually the same form as recommended by the appropriations committee. The amount for the securities and exchange commission was increased to $2,000,000. Efforts of Representative Blanton of Texas to reduce the $264,043 for the home loan bank board and of Representative Taber, New York, to cut down the appropriation for the federal communications commission were defeated.

Signs of gathering storms were seen, however, as Representative Rayburn, Democrat, Texas, chairman of the house interstate commerce committee, declared on the floor that he would not support a bill to place production of oil under government control. Emergency legislation to supplant control measures invalidated by the recent decision of the United States Supreme court will undoubtedly be proposed, and Rayburn's declaration is seen as an indication that opposition may develop.

SWEDEN, apparently, has found a way to beat the depression. King George in his annual message to parliament, reported that solution of the problem of unemployment appears near, the budget is balanced without new taxes having been imposed or new loans floated, and the national debt will be reduced this year. Only 60,000,000 kroner (about $15,000,000) has been asked for unemployment relief, as compared to 160,000,000 kroner last year.

IMPROVED conditions among corn belt farmers are indicated by a federal report which shows a gain of $82,989,592, or more than 80 cents a bushel for each borrower, has been realized by farmers in 10 states who availed themselves of the government 45-cent corn loans. Only slightly more than $500,000 of the $120,492,259 remains unpaid. About 18,000,000 bushels are under seal under the new 55-cent price, report states.

SENATOR HUEY P. LONG, after attacking the administration on the floor of the senate, betook himself to the radio and continued the assault. He declared the Roosevelt policies were hopeless, and summoned all the people to flock to his banner and help wipe out all fortunes above three or four millions, "making every man a king."

Meantime the revolt against the kingfish in Louisiana was growing. Citizens by the hundreds were joining the Square Deal association which is pledged to march on the capitol in Baton Rouge unless the legislature repeals certain of Huey's dictatorial laws.

SLIM, tousle-headed Amelia Earhart Putnam, holder of a dozen air records, has added to her laurels by making the dangerous west to east Pacific hop. Thousands cheered the intrepid flier as she brought her big plane to a swift stop at Oakland after the 2,400 miles flight from Honolulu. She was the first person to make the trip alone.

Amelia Putnam

Miss Putnam admitted weariness after she flew her mud-spattered ship to Los Angeles, home of her mother. Unfavorable weather prevented her from continuing to Washington as she had originally planned.

The solo flight from Honolulu thrilled even hard-riding airmen. Miss Earhart, however, took it calmly. Her latest accomplishment adds another record to her already amazing list of "firsts" which include:

First woman to fly the Atlantic.

First woman to fly solo across the Atlantic.

First person to fly the Atlantic twice.

First woman to fly an autogyro.

First person to cross the United States in an autogyro.

First woman to receive the distinguished flying cross.

First woman to receive the National Geographic society's gold medal.

First woman to make a transcontinental nonstop flight.

Holder of women's transcontinental speed record: 17:07:30.

Former holder of women's international speed record—181.18 m. p. h.

First woman licensed in the United States to carry passengers for hire in cabin planes weighing up to 7,700 pounds.

IN THE highly dramatized trial of Bruno Hauptmann for the kidnaping and murder of the Lindbergh baby the state continued to weave a strong net of circumstantial evidence around the defendant. Lindbergh first identified his voice as that of the man who received the ransom; next was Amandus Hochmuth, eighty-seven-year-old man who told of seeing Hauptmann driving a "dirty-green" car with a ladder in it into the Lindbergh lane March 1, 1932, the day of the kidnaping. Then John Perrone, Bronx taxi driver, identified him as the man who paid him $1 to deliver a ransom note to "Jafsie."

"Jafsie," otherwise Dr. John Condon, the aged Bronx educator who undertook the negotiations with the kidnaper, next went on the stand and in his garrulous way identified Bruno as the man with whom he dealt and to whom he handed the $50,000 ransom money. His long and somewhat rambling story was bitterly assailed in cross examination by E. J. Reilly, chief of defense counsel, but seemingly the great value of his evidence was not much shaken.

Handwriting experts introduced by the prosecution added to the drama when they testified that in their opinion Hauptmann was the author of all the ransom notes. Comparisons of the notes and subsequent handwriting, admittedly Hauptmann's, were shown, and observers conceded the state had produced strong evidence against the accused.

Detective Arthur Johnson of New York was on his way home from Europe bringing relatives of the late Isadore Fisch to testify for the state. Hauptmann claimed in his defense that the ransom money found in his possession was given to him by Fisch, a business associate in New York. Fisch later returned to his home in Germany, where he died.

AN APOLOGY to the Canadian government and payments of $50,666.50 damages is the penalty imposed on the United States for sinking the rum running schooner I'm Alone in the Gulf of Mexico in March of 1929. This decision was announced by Willis Van Devanter, associate justice of the United States Supreme court, and Sir Lyman Poore Duff, chief justice of Canada, who were the commissioners of arbitration under the ship liquor treaty of 1924 between the United States and Great Britain for controlling liquor smuggling.

Of the damages awarded, $25,000 is to be paid as compensation to the Canadian government and $25,666.50 to the master and members of the crew of the I'm Alone or their families. Included in the latter is $10,185 to the widow and children of Leon Mainguy, a French citizen of St. Pierre, Miquelon, who drowned when the schooner was sunk by the coast guard.

The commissioners found that the master and members of the crew were not parties to a liquor smuggling conspiracy.

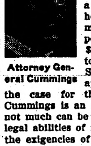
THOSE Democrats and Republicans, eminent and otherwise, who are banded together as the American Liberty league are now really getting into action against what they deem the radical features of the administration's program, and their executive council has put out a ten-point platform. It declares the league's opposition to such practices as sweeping delegations of legislative authority to the President, lump sum appropriations to be doled out by the White House, socialization of industry and regimentation of American life.

In the first plank of its platform the league pledged itself to "preserve American institutions which safeguard to citizens in all walks of life the right to liberty and pursuit of happiness" and at the same time "to combat the growth of bureaucracy, the spread of monopoly, the socialization of industry, and the regimentation of American life"

Invasion of the law making and law interpreting functions by New Deal administrators was also rapped by the league in promising "to uphold the American principle that laws be made only by the direct representatives of the people in the congress, and that the laws be interpreted only by the courts."

Other points in the 10-point declaration of policy pledged the league to fight for government economy.

HAVING given the New Deal a slight swat by holding the petroleum control feature of the NIRA unconstitutional, the Supreme court moved rapidly toward a judgment as to the legality of the abrogation of gold payments. Several cases challenging this act were lumped and oral arguments were heard. This being a matter of vast importance, involving $100,000,000,000, Attorney General Homer S. Cummings himself appeared to present the case for the government. Mr. Cummings is an excellent lawyer, but not much can be said in praise of the legal abilities of most of the men whom the exigencies of politics have shoved into his office in Washington. So probably he was wise to handle this matter himself.



Attorney General Cummings

Cummings defended the constitutional authority of the President and congress to adopt the present monetary policy as inherently the right of the government to preserve itself.

In an argument distinguished for oratorical display as well as for its legal aspects, Cummings said an adverse decision by the court would:

1. Increase the public and private debt of the nation by $69,000,000,000.
2. Create a special class that would be beyond the pale of the general financial structure, a class composed of those holding bonds demanding payment in gold.
3. Reduce the balance in the United States treasury $2,500,000,000.
4. Add $17,000,000,000 to the public debt and increase the interest charge on this debt alone by $2,500,000,000 a year.

The latter sum alone, Cummings said, is equal to twice the value of the 1934 wheat and cotton crop.

The attorney general referred to the troubled state of the country in the spring of 1933 and added: "I contend and shall show that the congress and the President of the United States acted reasonably in a period of very great difficulties and that their acts were not the product of caprice."

From the questions asked by the justices, observers gained the impression that there was a sharp division of opinion among them.

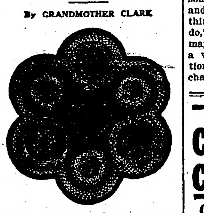
MARY PICKFORD went before Judge Ben Lindsey in Los Angeles and obtained a decree of divorce from Douglas Fairbanks; and thus came to an end the union of the "royal couple" of moviedom, who for ten years were regarded as the model wedded pair so far as happiness and worldly success went.

Mary's suit, filed more than a year ago, charged Doug with mental cruelty, indifference and neglect. She told Judge Lindsey the charges were true and that a fair and just property settlement had been made; and after Elizabeth Lewis, Miss Pickford's secretary, had testified the decree was granted and Mary left the courtroom almost in tears.

Fairbanks, in St. Moritz, Switzerland was informed of the divorce but declined to comment.

RUG WELL NAMED "BED OF ROSES"

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



The original rug shown measures 44 inches and requires four pounds of rags to complete. It is braided with three strands, but can be crocheted. A crocheted rug has better wearing properties. Many colors are used in the following combinations: Center circle in white, yellow, red, and black. Three of the outer circles in various rust shades. The other three circles in two shades of blue, and yellow. Outer edge is rose, yellow, black.

This rug shows that beautiful rugs can be made of rags. The regulation or common rag rug is either round or oval, with various color combinations, and when finished has no particular beauty. In making the above "Bed of Roses" rug, make seven small round rugs about twelve inches in diameter, and set together as shown here, then work rows all around to size wanted. It's a different rug and only another idea of what can be made of rags.

The best material for making rag rugs is "Linkraft." When using this new material no cutting or matching of sizes is necessary. Linkraft is a round knitted material like jersey. It comes in links about five inches long, but stretches to about nine inches when linking together. These links are to be linked together in solid colors or mixed as desired. Linkraft is very durable, does not fray like rag strips and Linkraft rugs weigh about 20% less than rag rugs.

If you are interested in making rag rugs, send for Grandmother Clark's Book No. 25 on Crocheted and Braided Rugs. Twenty-six rugs are illustrated, with instructions. A wonderful selection to pick from when having a good-looking rug in mind.

Send 15c to Rug Department for Book No. 25.

A New York woman who numbers both the great and near-great among her acquaintances gave a function one day which was attended by Mrs. William Astor, then the dowager of the Astor family. A few days later Mrs. Astor met her hostess and remarked casually:

"I am having a Bohemian party, also."

"And whom have you invited to give it the bohemian atmosphere?" she was asked, to which she replied with emphasis:

CONSTIPATION Can be Helped!

(Use what Doctors do)

Why do the bowels usually move regularly and thoroughly, long after a physician has given you treatment for constipation?

Because the doctor gives a liquid laxative that can always be taken in the right amount. You can gradually reduce the dose. Reduced dosage is the secret of real and safe relief from constipation.

Ask your doctor about this. Ask your druggist how popular liquid laxatives have become. The right liquid laxative gives the right kind of help, and the right amount of help. When the dose is repeated, instead of more each time, you take less. Until the bowels are moving regularly and thoroughly without any help at all.

The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara, and these are natural laxatives that form no habit—even in children. Your druggist has it; ask for—

CHAPTER I

—1—

Mr. Theodore Gatlin's married life had demonstrated to him the absolute fallacy of the ecclesiastic contention that marriages are made in heaven.

In the beginning he had married Louise Hanchett for a number of reasons, none of them really important. She was of good family; i. e., her parents were prosperous middle-class folk whom scandal had never touched. They were eminently respectable if a trifle bovine in disposition and Louise was their only child, and sole heir to such worldly goods as her parents might have accumulated and which Mr. Gatlin believed they were not likely to dissipate; for which reason he did not contemplate having to support them in their helpless age.

These were the common sense reasons which his self-respect as a business man indicated he should conjure to his defense in making this important step; in reality they were merely a sop to his real reason for the step, which was a mad infatuation he mistook for love. Louise Hanchett's cold, classical beauty and Vere de Vere form, which she knew how to dress beautifully and in good taste, had so dazzled him that it never occurred to him to ask himself whether the object of his passion had wearing qualities; if she had common sense; if she was healthy and capable of bearing children; if she was of sound ancestry. However, there was some excuse for this carelessness in Mr. Gatlin's case, as, indeed, there is in the case of all but superman. Engaged as he was in the retail shoe business, he had never heard of Mendel's law, and if anybody, in conversation with him, had mentioned genetics, he would doubtless have thought that they were some new form of athletic contrivance. The only practical information he had on the Hanchett family was that Mrs. Hanchett was a shrew, that Mr. Hanchett was a middle-aged man whose head was bloody and bowed; that Louise was unhappy at home.

Any Story by PETER B. KYNE Is a Good Story—but here is one with a most unusual and intriguing twist.

●

It is an absorbing tale of love and mystery—one of the most entertaining of all this author's famous stories.

In Mr. Gatlin the protective instinct, abundant in all males, was particularly well developed; so he yearned to provide Louise with the happiness he knew she had missed and which he, thank God, was able to provide—for he possessed also the usual amount of masculine ego.

Following two years of married life, during which he strove manfully to accomplish the impossible, Mr. Theodore Gatlin went into a mental haze. Six months of this and he became peevish. He wanted a child—and when at last he realized that, in the phraseology of his times, there was nothing doing, there was born in him the first coherent thought he had ever had on the subject of matrimony. He told himself that he was sick unto death striving to be a good husband and acquiring no merit because of his efforts. He told himself he had a house but not a home; that Louise had "taken after her mother," which meant that he had taken after his afflicted father-in-law!

He gave considerable thought to the subject and finally decided that Louise would be all right if she only had something to occupy her mind. She sought happiness and blamed him because she could not find it. Mr. Gatlin did not know where happiness might be found, but inasmuch as he was moderately certain of peace of mind while attending to his business, he had a hazy impression that happiness is not infrequently found in securing a job and working at it. So when a physician informed him that his hopes of fatherhood were not apt to be realized he had a brilliant idea and broached it to Mrs. Gatlin.

"Let's adopt a baby!" he urged.

Louise demurred. She had her doubts as to the advisability of taking over somebody's else troubles—one never knew how an adopted baby was going to turn out—there was no hurry, anyhow—she must have time to consider the idea—her health.

"To h—l with your health!" Mr. Gatlin roared, for the first time in his married life becoming vulgar. "Every doctor you've had tells me you're organically sound. You only think you're sick."

"My nerves," she protested, but he silenced her.

"You think too much about yourself and not at all about anybody else, particularly me. What you need is a baby to fuss with. You'll learn to love it in a month as much as if it was your own flesh and blood."

"I'm afraid you'll not love it, Theodore. You're so cranky and irritable," she defended.

"Listen!" Mr. Gatlin commanded. "I'm at the point where I'm seriously considering suing you for divorce on the grounds that you're a barren woman. In other ways you don't measure up to my idea of a wife and companion. It's no fun for me to come home night after night and have to listen to your tales of woe—"

"You are devoid of sympathy," his wife charged. "You neglect me."

"Maybe I've failed," said Mr. Gatlin, "but by jiminy, I've tried, and I'm willing to keep on trying a little longer. Only, from now on, we're going to try my methods, and adopting a baby is one of them. If that fails I'll take the baby over myself and we'll call in the lawyers."

She knew she had gone as far as she dared. Even the dullest of married women know when that point is reached; that is, they know when it has been reached for that day.

"Well, if we can find a baby of good, sound, intelligent, healthy parentage," she assented grudgingly.

"I've got one staked out," Mr. Gatlin cried joyfully, "and I know its parents. They're sound as grindstones. I know the grandparents of the child on both sides.

"I don't know them personally," he went on, "but I've had a doctor look up their records. High class people. No insanity and no crookedness in them."

"I'll have to meet these grandparents and parents, Theodore."

"Unfortunately," he replied, "they're all dead."

"What did they die off?"

"The grandparents on both sides, of old age; the father of the baby was an army captain and he got killed in a fight in the Sulu islands. The mother died in childbirth and the baby is in the infants' shelter in San Francisco."

"Boy or girl, Theodore?"

"Boy."

"I could never stand a boy, Theodore. I must have a girl."

Mr. Gatlin grinned evilly. "I figured you'd try to edge out of it that way. It isn't a boy. It's a girl."

Louise Gatlin was not very intelligent, but she was sufficiently so to realize that for once in his life Mr. Gatlin was due to have his own way.

That night as he lay abed, Mr. Gatlin suddenly gave himself a prodigious poke in the ribs. "What a jackass I was not to consult that doctor before I married Louise," he groaned. "When I thought I could father a child of my own I didn't pay any more attention to its ancestry than I would to selecting a necktie. Anything that looked well would fill the bill. But when it came to selecting some other man's baby, I gave the job all the attention I would give to the purchase of a piece of property. I wouldn't think of buying a lot until I had run down the record of the title and satisfied myself there were no flaws in it. If men would only employ that much common sense in selecting their wives—or wives, in selecting their husbands—I knew what a nervous, complaining, selfish old shrew her mother was—what's that law the doctor spoke of? Ah, yes. Mendel's law. The law that like shall produce like. Simple! Natural! Any fool should have thought of that—and yet it took an old monk—a celibate—to promulgate the news. Whew—w—w—w!"

"Theodore," said his wife, from the other twin bed, "I should think you might be more considerate of me than to whistle like that and wake me up."

"I'm so happy, darling, I couldn't help it. Forgive me."

"Have you thought of a name for the baby?"

"I have. Penelope."

"A horrid name. Where under heaven did you get that name?"

To her unspeakable amazement he quoted a verse from Henry Herbert Knibbs' poem, "Out There Somewhere."

We'll dance a merry saraband from here to drowsy Samarkand:
Along the sea, across the land, the birds are flying south,
And you, my sweet Penelope, out there
somewhere you wait for me,
With buds of roses in your hair and
kisses on your mouth.

They went by train to San Francisco next day. With the child in his arms and accompanied by his wife and the lady manager of the infants' shelter, Mr. Gatlin repaired to the Superior court and legally adopted the daughter of Capt. Ronald Elliot and Janet Elliot, both deceased.

From the courtroom they went to Grace cathedral and had her baptized in the Episcopalian faith—out of courtesy to Mrs. Gatlin's latest religious crotchet, Mr. Gatlin having no religious affiliations whatsoever. There was a slight hiatus here. The pastor had just sprinkled water on the little dark head and said: "I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and give thee the name of —" when Mrs. Gatlin interrupted softly—"Lucretia."

"Nothing doing," Mr. Gatlin declared. "Lucretia! Wasn't that the woman that poisoned people—a wop woman? Her name shall be Penelope. I like that name."

The pastor smiled faintly. Having already sensed that all of the enthusiasm for the child was Mr. Gatlin's, he was seized with a perverse desire to please the sentimental fellow, so he said quickly: "—and give thee the name of Penelope."

Mr. Gatlin hugged Penelope to him and kissed her back of the left ear.

"You mustn't kiss her, Theodore," his wife protested. "Kissing is unsanitary. You might give her some sort of disease."

"Oh, lord," Mr. Gatlin murmured, "will I ever cease making hideous mistakes?"

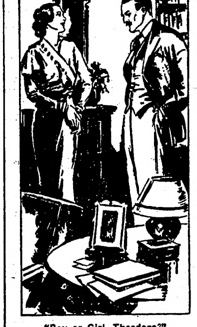
For in that illuminating instant he realized that in adopting Penelope he had made a terrible mistake. His wife didn't want her! At the very moment of the commencement of his experiment he knew it was a failure. However, it was no part of his wife's intention (at least for the present) that he should realize this, so she took the baby from him.

Within the week, Theodore Gatlin, having communicated with the adjutant general of the army at Washington, ascertained that Capt. Ronald Elliot's body had been brought home from the island of Sulu and interred in the national cemetery at the Presidio of San Francisco. So he had Penelope's mother disinterred from the Potter's field and reinterred beside the soldier, after which he gave orders for the erection of a suitable monument over them.

Viewing him from every angle, he was a most peculiar retail shoe dealer.

For a month all went well with the Gatlins, and then Mrs. Gatlin issued her fiat.

"Theodore," she said, "I must insist on one thing. Penelope must never know that you and I are not her natural parents. I feel that such knowledge might detract from her love for us."



"Boy or Girl, Theodore?"

"That won't work any hardship on me, my dear," he replied. "I feel just as enthusiastic about her as if I were her real father."

"Another thing, Theodore. I love Penelope dearly, as you know, but I can't be made a slave to her. Do you realize, dear, how she keeps me tied down?"

He gritted his teeth, and his wife went on: "We simply must have a nurse for her."

"Have two of 'em," he growled. "Whatever she needs she shall have."

"That's right. Start spoiling her immediately."

It was always like that. However, as the child developed, she brought Mr. Gatlin each day closer to happiness than he had ever been before. She was his refuge. She was a healthy baby and hence a happy baby, and there was not the slightest chance that she would ever be spoiled by having her own wishes perennially deferred to. If Louise Gatlin accomplished nothing else worth while (and this she accomplished unconsciously) she did nothing to inflate Penelope's ego, which, as everybody knows, is the breeding ground of human selfishness, which, in turn, accounts for the unhappiness of most of humanity. Mr. Gatlin, of course, would have undone, in secret, much of this good work, had not the realization come to him quite early in Penelope's little girlhood that any demonstration of excessive affection on his part was inevitably counteracted by an excessive severity on the part of his wife toward the child.

FINE RECORD OF ACHIEVEMENT BY 1934 EXPLORERS

The maze of water passages and adjoining islands in Tierra del Fuego, near the southern tip of South America, was explored in 1934, in a 26-foot boat by Amos Burg, on an expedition sent out by the National Geographic society. Burg also rounded Cape Horn in his small craft.

An expedition of the California Institute of Technology rediscovered a chasm in a mountainous section of Chihuahua, Mexico, comparable in size and grandeur to the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. It was known only to Indians and a few miners.

The 17,000-foot twin peaks of Mount Foraker in McKinley national park, Alaska, were scaled for the first time August 6 by Charles Houston, T. Graham Brown, and Chychele Waterston.

Mount Crillon, previously unconquered peak near the Alaskan coast, 100 miles northwest of Juneau, was climbed on July 21 by Bradford Washburn and his Harvard-Dartmouth expedition. The mountain is 12,727 feet high.

In March, Polish explorers, led by M. K. Markiewicz-Jodke, found a new route to the top of 23,098-foot Aconcagua in the Andes, highest mountain in the western hemisphere.

In the Himalayas, E. E. Shipton and companions made the first exploration by westerners of the slopes of Nanda Devi, marking out possible routes for a future attack on the peak itself.

One of the most spectacular archeological discoveries of the year came in March when two French aviators, Capt. Edouard Corniglion-Molinier and Andre Malraux, flew into the interior of Arabia northeast of Yemen and sighted and photographed from the air the ruins of a great city previously unknown to the West.

The remains of seven Mayan cities, one surrounded by a mote, were discovered in northern Guatemala by expeditions of the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

Mysterious East

The fact is that India was never "discovered" in the ordinary sense of the word. It has a history going back thousands of years. English and French traders settled there in the Seventeenth century, but the land was known long before that.

Indeed, we might almost say that it was India and other eastern countries which discovered the western lands, including Britain! There is a theory that the first home of the white races was in the East.—London Answers.

Vilas County

COUNTIES, like cities, states and nations, get a great kick out of possessing something unusual to set them apart from other similar communities. Nature, in her benevolence graciously bestowed landscape or other outstanding differences to various counties scattered among our states. In many instances where nature failed to especially endow a county, man has ambitiously come forward and produced some offsetting contribution.

When it comes to lakes, Vilas county, in northern Wisconsin, steps up and proclaims itself "it," modestly hinting that their excellencies, Mr. and Mrs. Public and all the little Publics, take off their hats to her rare and unmatchable collection.

Vilas proudly acclaims that some 1,200 lakes are confined within her wide-flung borders—the smallest, no one knows, the largest perhaps being Trout lake, which is about five miles long by three and one-half miles wide. They run the full gamut of lakedom, in shape and description. Being entirely of glacial origin, they are for the most part limpid sheets of liquid blue or green, basking peacefully in the sun, reflecting quite clearly their timber-lined banks and, needless to say, perhaps, provide refuge for numberless numbers of the finny tribe.

A somewhat unusual feature of these particular lakes is that they are in the main connected by streams navigable for canoes, it being said that one can slip a canoe into the Manitowish river at Boulder Junction, for instance, and by making portages around dams, paddle his way down to the Mississippi river and float out into the Gulf of Mexico.

A Girl Like Milly

By ROBERT SIDMAN

©, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

I DIDN'T like it, and I told her so. I said, "Gees, Milly, we didn't have to come to the park to sit down and talk, even if it is spring. We could've done that up at my place, or yours. Anyway," I said, "I ain't so keen on talkin'."

"Neither am I," she said, "So let's not." And she flopped down on a bench. I walked away, tryin' to dope out whether I'd get mad clean through or not. Only you can't always get mad clean through when you're that way about a girl, especially a girl like Milly.

The next thing I knew, she was lightin' a cigarette. And then it all happened.

I heard somebody say, "Milly!"

I turned about to go back to her then, when I saw a guy I didn't know, talkin' to her. He was leanin' on a little no-account fruit cart an' sayin', "Lucky for me. I seen you lightin' that cigarette. I wouldn't 've noticed you if you hadn't lit that match just when I was passin' by."

I wanted to tell him not to go hornin' into my date, but I didn't. I just stood and listened. I was goin' to tell him to run along and peddle his fruit some place else. But she was talkin' before I got the chance.

She said, "Yeah. It is dark. Wonder why the lights haven't been turned on."

"Something's wrong with the works, maybe. How are you, Milly?" he said.

She said, "Oh, I'm all right, Tom. How about yourself?"

"Who, me?" he said, surprised like. "Oh, I ain't so good. I—I—" He had to stop for a minute. "I guess I'll be all right, though. I'm glad I seen you here. Do you come to the park much?"

"No," she said. "This is the first time I been here since—Well, since you left me, I guess."

"Uh-huh," he said. "That's what I thought. I come by here most every night. I probubly would've seen you before if you'd been here." He lit up, and the two of them sat there and smoked a bit. I wanted to, too, but I didn't. Finally, he started talkin' again. "Do you remember—" he started to say, but he didn't finish it.

She said, "Yeah. It was right here on this bench."

"That's right," he said. "A year and three months ago."

She said, "Four. This's June you know."

"No," he said. "Is it?" She must've said yes, because I heard him say, "Time flies, don't it?"

"It sure does," she said. They smoked some more. Finally, he threw his butt away.

"Milly," he said, "I miss you like h—l."

"Yeah?" she said.

"Yeah," he said. "I know it was my fault. I know I left you. But I was mad."

"I'll say you were mad!" she retorted grimly.

"But I been askin' around," he said. "And I find out I was wrong. I mean about that Roumanian," he said. "I find out I was wrong, and that you never did go runnin' around with him. Not that I'd blame you now, if you had," he said.

Milly took a long drag. "Well," she said, "what about it?"

"I'm sorry," he said. "I love you. I love you more than I ever did. I—How about—We ought to—" He couldn't say anything more.

"You mean you want to patch everything up all over again?" she asked him.

"That's right," he said. "Let's be married again."

She laughed, only it sounded like she was cryin' a little. "I been hopin' that some day you'd say that," she said. "I'm willin'. Only there's one thing I want to tell you first."

"What's that?" he said.

"It's about the Rumanian," she said. "You were right the first time. I did run around with him on the QT," she said. "But I never loved him. I never even liked him much. I just did it to make you jealous."

"Oh, that's all right," he said.

"But I promise, if you'll come back to me, I'll never even see him again," she said.

"Oh, that's all right," he said. And he got up.

She got up, too. "Ain't you goin' to kiss me, Tom?" she said.

So he kissed her, and they went off together. He never even saw me.

* * * * * * *

I stood there and watched them across the horse-ridin' road. Then I decided it was time I ought to be headin' for home, too.

I stopped by the first lamp post to take some dirt out of my shoe, and I felt somebody tap me on the shoulder. I looked up. Oh, hello, Mike, I said. It was one of the cops I knew.

"What you doin' out here by yourself, Van?" he said.

"Oh, nothin'," I said.

"Go home then, you crazy Greek," he said. "It's gettin' late."

"I ain't sleepy," I said. "And besides, you shouldn't never call no Rumanian a Greek. They don't like it," I said.

"Well, you needn't get mad about it," he said. "I just made a mistake, that's all. Anybody can make 'em."

"Yeah," I said. I didn't know I'd been snappy with Mike. I like him too much to be snappy with him.

"Well, g'night, Van," he said.

"G'night, Mike," I said.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

If a man doesn't get a thrill out of safe driving then safe driving is too big for him or he isn't big enough for the job.

Safe driving does not require the application of any deep thot philosophy. Volumes and volumes have been written on what to do and what not to do, but they lose their value because they are not properly applied or understood. Accident prevention and safe driving does not require brilliant genius, but the application of plain "horse sence" will solve most of the trouble.

When we look back fifteen years or more, we find that the horse was very much afraid of the automobile, while the pedestrian laughed at it. If the pedestrian during these times would show the same respect to the automobile, that the horse did years ago, the pedestrian problem would be solved.

Brr! Bring The Beans

DID you ever toast your toes before a big stove in an old New England kitchen? If you haven't, you don't know half the joy of a morning of skating. It's the thawing-out that's half of the fun, and if we analyze the charm of that old New England kitchen, perhaps much of the joy of it came from the smell of good foods baking for dinner.

In Little Brown Pots

Beans, of course, were foremost among the foods which sent their saucy-seasoned smell out so that the world would know it was bean day. Today, unfortunately, there are not enough big homelike kitchens to go around, and there's no room for them in modern homes and apartments anyway. But the gods have fortunately decreed that we are not to go without baked beans—even if we can't go to the cannery to smell them baking. We can buy them in cans, and if one happens to have some little brown bean pots, which cost almost nothing, one can pack in these oven-baked beans, put a thick slice of bacon on the top and set them in even the most modern oven, to sizzle and brown a bit more. There are other ways, too, worthy of these good beans. For example:

In Tomatoes—Under Ham

Baked Beans in Tomato Cases: Cut off slices from the tops of six large ripe tomatoes and scoop out the centers. Dust inside with salt, and brush with a tiny bit of prepared mustard. Fill with a 1-pound 1-ounce can of baked beans, and sprinkle the tops with a little grated cheese. Bake for twenty to twenty-five minutes in a 375 degree oven. Serves six persons.

Baked Beans with Frizzled Ham: Turn beans from a No. 2 can of baked beans (preferably without tomato sauce) into a baking dish, and pour over one-third cup of chili sauce. Heat in a hot oven. Meanwhile, frizzle six thin slices of cold boiled ham in a hot skillet, then lay on top of the beans and serve at once. This serves six persons.*

Origin of Macaroni

Macaroni products are said to have originated in China and Japan; but the Italians, who were using macaroni in the Fourteenth century, learned about it from the Germans.

HOME RAMBLES

If that old alarm clock does not work good any longer, try the Sorter Watch Repair Shop here in Holt.

The old timer tells us that even if the ground hog did see his shadow in the bright sunshine on Saturday, it does not mean that we are going to have six weeks more of hard winter weather. Just look he says, what a nice streak of weather we have had so far this week.

Farmers, Notice!

Any one having feed grain, hay or straw to sell should notify R. A. Reierson, county extension agent, Warren, or J. P. Benitt, Holt, who is making every effort he can to secure feed for the drought stricken farmers in the west end of the county. The farmers in that part of the county are in urgent need of feed for their cattle, so if you have any to spare now is the time to help them out by selling it to them.

The Weather

The weather the past week has been of the mild order and we hope that when a small storm comes along that you will not blame the editor for it.

The snow has settled down almost a foot in the woods since we had the thaw on Saturday and Sunday.

20 Years Ago

T. A. Tobiason sold out all his farm equipment.

Herman Heinze made a visit to Wisconsin.

R. Reierson was fixing up his store building.

The creamery took in 5,299 pounds of cream in December 1914, for which they paid 41 patrons $434. Butterfat was 34c

$13,000,000 for state expenses was asked in the House of Representatives.

N. D. Governor Ousted

Governor Thomas H. Moodie of North Dakota, harassed by impeachment and court proceedings since he took office Jan. 7, was ordered ousted from office by the State Supreme court on Saturday afternoon.

The governor, one of the few Democrats ever to be elected to state office in normally Republican North Dakota, quickly accepted the decision and called on citizens to co-operate with his Lieutenant Governor Walter Welford who has been presiding over the Senate.

The court held that Moodie fails to meet the state constitutional requirment that a candidate for governor reside in No. Dakota five years "next preceding" his election.

Moodie admitted he lived and voted in Minnesota in 1930 but based his defense on intention to retain his North Dakota residence.

"I have no complaint to make on the decision of the court" Moodie commented as soon as he was notified. "It is arrived at after full consideration of the law and the facts in an orderly manner. It is satisfactory to me and is accepted cheerfully."

"It should end the turmoil which the state has recently experienced. It is my hope that it will. Governor Welford will need and should have the honest and constructive cooperation of every citizen in this state in the big task that is before him.

"I hold no grudge toward any man. I am personally glad to be relieved of a responsibility which is far greater than the average of our people realize."

Eclipse Seen Here Sunday

Seven eclipses of the sun and moon, an unusually large number, take place in 1935. Two will be visible in the United States.

The first of these was a partial eclipse of the sun on Sunday, February 3. At maximum, seven-tenths of the sun's diameter was covered by the moon's shadow, enough to chill the air and turn the sunlight temporarily greenish-yellow.

This maximum shadow covered the United States west of the Rockies, and nearly half of western Canada. In the rest of the United States and Canada it was less, a smoked glass spectacle. Many people here were out looking at old Sol thru a smoked piece of glass from a broken window pane.

The second eclipse visible in the United States will come on July 16, a total eclipse of the moon.

Frozen Cream

In the past month there has been more or less frozen cream. This is a point that should be watched very carefully as frozen cream is not fit for Land O'Lakes and also is injurious to the test.

Use enough blankets to cover it well while coming to town.

Lets co-operate and make 1935 a better year.

U. S. Approves Land Purchase

The Mud Lake will migratory waterfowl nesting reserve in Marshall county is to be made one of the largest and most important reserves of its kind in the United States, E. V. Willard, commissioner of conservation, said last week in announcing federal arproval for the immediate purchase of 52,713 acres in the erea.

The state department has about completed the necessary surveys, Mr. Willard said, and the federal purchases of lands are to be made as soon as practical. Most of the lands to be acquired are marginal lands unfit for agriculture and are to be set aside forever as a wild life refuge. The state deparment is to co-operate with the federal authorities in acquiring the land and completing the establishment of the reserve.

The Mud Lake are was formerly swamp and lake and in the early days was a famous duck nesting place. Later the area was drained and the lake bed dried up.

Those who live out there will no doubt be glad to hear that the work of putting the project thru, is being speeded up. It will be easier for the farmers in that area to decide what to do for next year if the government makes a decision soon, otherwise they are kind of up against it in acquiring homes and also in making their farming plans for this year, as there is only a few weeks left before the moving season and exchanging of farms starts so that renters and buyers can get settled on their places in time for seeding.

Several opinions have been offered by farmers out in Mud Lake as to what they seem to think would be the best way of handling the situation so as to make it fair and square to all concerned. Some say to leave it alone and let those who are out there have their farms and stay where for years they have been struggling along to make their homes in spite of peat fires and floods as well as the swelling amount of delinquent taxes on vacant lands, that has caused a heavy burden on those who have paid their taxes.

Another argument in favor of leaving the lake area as it is, is that—during the past years and, especially this year, more baled hay and grain has been sold out of the Mud Lake district than any other part of the county.

Then there are those who are in favor of having the lake area as it is—for the simple reason that they claim no other place could be found that would be as good for raising stock. Also that it is very easy to get good wells and plenty water out there.

The argument for having the government take it over are: poor roads and no roads to some farms; high taxes; hard to keep schools going; danger of floods; too many vacant farms; possibly the only way some farms could be sold; the only way to finally establish ownership to the pie pieces in the lake bottom; and many other reasons. You have now read in part argument set forth in this case which involves friends of ours from both factions and, unless some one else has a special argument to offer the case rests. You be the jury and the judge and we will be the reporter.

One man said that if he thot the government could bring back the beauties of the Mud Lake country—such as the lake was at one time it used to sparkle; the great stand of timber that grew on the shores and along the big creeks; hide all the poor ditches and grades as well as the deep burn-outs; restore all the wild game and berries; and the calling of nature that used to be there, he would give his farm away for one good look at such a scene. It was there before it was ruined by politicians and dredges. If this old man could only remain here other hundred years he may have a chance to see his wish fulfilled. Ye Editor.

Boulder Dam Completed

Boulder City, Nev.— Friday, Feb. 1. The hand of man fell with conquering power last Thursday night on the mighty Colorado river.

A huge gate was dropped shut early Friday and the flow of the river was stopped. Boulder dam, Greatest structure of its kind in the world, thus will begin the farmation of a lake 11 times larger than man ever built before.

Forty years ago the Colorado river was put to work, down near Ite delta. The Imperial valley of southern California came into production, destined to grow into one of the richest garden spots of the world.

But the Colorado was unruly. Turbulent floods swept into the fertile valley, causing $8,000,000 damage in 1905. This catastrophe prompted President Theodore Roosevelt to ask congress to have a study made of how to harness the river.

Twenty-five years later that project was completed on paper and the greatest engineering work ever untertaken by man was set in motion, the $385,000,000 Boulder dam project.

Boulder dam will provide electrical energy of 1,800,000 horsepower, reclamation of 2,100,000 acres, and domestic water supply for future millions of people in southern California, as well as preventing floods.

Construction work was started on the dam Sept. 17, 1930. The entire construction project includes the dam and power site in the Black canyon of the Colorado and the all-American canal in southern California for flood control and general river regulation, irrigation, silt control, power development and domestic water supply.

The Boulder dam plant will generate 4,330,000,000 kilowatthours when completed in 1937, and the annual revenue from the sale of firm energy is estimated at $6,550,000, and $650,000 from secondary energy.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Harold Saastad of Thief River Falls, on Sunday, Feb. 3, a boy.

Another Letter From Wash.

We have just received another letter from H. E. Hanson at Bellingham, Wash. in which he states that the cold weather and heavy snows that they got out there some time ago has raised the roof right with people in his community. When the weather turned milder the snow melted so fast that it created flood waters that inundated towns and farms and wrecked buildings and roads.

The Bellingham Herald, of which Mr. Hanson sent us several copies, states that the large hatching farms suffered heavy losses due to the breaking of Highlines and cutting off of the electric current after they had set thousands of eggs in their incubators. One hatchery had 60,000 eggs that went wrong when the current was off for many days due to the floods that tore down the poles and lines.

Following is a short letter from Mr. Hanson.

Bellingham, Washington.

No doubt you have read the Bible history where it said it rained for forty days and forty nights but that is common out here every year but this year it has been raining for 80 days and nights and still raining. After we had that cold spell and snow it started to rain again. And you can see by the paper what a Mess it made. We don't remember when we saw the sun last. Maybe we will see it when we get back to Minnesota.

Appointed Census Taker

Chas. Horien was in our office on Tuesday morning and made the announcement that he received his appointment as Farm Census Enumerator for the Holt and Newfolden Townships and the Village of Newfolden. According to a report from Mr. Cliff Bouvette, District Supervisor of the Federal Farm Census with headquarters in Crookston, the delay in appointing the enumerators and starting of the work was due to cold weather.

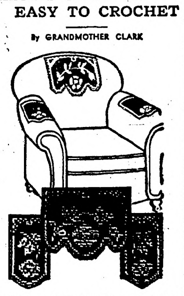
HERE'S CHAIR SET EASY TO CROCHET

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



Since crochet work is again interesting the art needleworkers, why not pick up your No. 8 or 9 steel crochet hook and thread about size 15 and crochet this attractive three-piece set for your living room chair, or for a gift? It will surely be appreciated and admired. Chair backs and arm rests are old decorations but now growing in popularity and are modern. This set is worked in the large filet stitch, works up rapidly and is simple work even for the inexperienced. The center piece measures 14x11 inches, the arm rests 6x11 inches, with about size 15 thread. By using a larger hook and crocheting looser, the finished pieces will be larger, if desired.

In the large filet an open mesh equals 1 triple crochet (thread twice over hook). Chain 3, skip 3. A solid mesh equals 5 triple crochet. Add 4 triple crochet for each additional solid mesh.

Send 10 cents to our Crochet department for directions and working diagram for this No. 805, or if you have no material you can get the entire outfit for 40c, namely, instructions, diagram, crochet hook, and sufficient cream color thread to complete the three pieces.

Doctors Know!

. . . and they use liquid laxatives

You'd use a liquid, too, if you knew how much better it makes you feel.

A liquid laxative can always be taken in the right amount. You can gradually reduce the dose. Reduced dosage is the secret of real and safe relief from constipation.

Just ask your own doctor about this. Ask your druggist how popular liquid laxatives have become. The right liquid laxative gives the right kind of help—and the right amount of help. When the dose is repeated, instead of more each time, you take less. Until the bowels are moving regularly and thoroughly without aid.

People who have experienced this comfort, never return to any form of help that can't be regulated! The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara, and these are natural laxatives that form no habit. It relieves a condition of biliousness or sluggishness without upset.

To relieve your occasional upsets safely and comfortably, try Syrup Pepsin. The druggist has it.

PRESIDENT PRESENTS "SOCIAL SECURITY PLAN"—GOLD RULING DEFERRED.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

THE most far-flung innovation the New Deal has proposed thus far—the "social security plan" proposed by President Roosevelt—has aroused a storm of discussion. Administration adherents greeted the scheme with wild enthusiasm, while the opposition, led by Senator Borah, Idaho, has voiced vigorous criticisms.

President Roosevelt

All business in congress has been sidetracked to permit immediate action on the proposed measure. Public hearings have already been started in the senate finance committee, and the house ways and means committee has postponed consideration of the bonus bill to work on the security plan. This is being done at the President's behest. The plan provides:

Flexible, but compulsory unemployment insurance under a federal-state system restricted to workers and financed by a 3 per cent tax on pay rolls after January 1, 1938. The government will aid in bearing administration costs, and the treasury will handle the fund. Ninety per cent of the pay roll tax is to be refunded to employers who contributed to state unemployment plans. A maximum of $15 a week of compensation to begin four weeks after the worker loses his job and to last for not more than sixteen weeks is contemplated.

The second part of the plan provides for old-age pensions. The government is to co-operate with the states and pay a maximum of $30 a month to persons over sixty-five. The national government is also to aid states in formulating a plan for persons under sixty-five which will be financed jointly by employer and employee through a pay roll tax; the funds to be handled by the federal government; the amount of pensions to be a percentage of the employee's wage; with non-manual employees receiving more than $250 a month to be exempt from the plan.

The third section of the scheme provides for appropriations to give better facilities to caring for mothers, and dependent and crippled children, and the fourth section would furnish larger appropriations for public health aid, investigation and research.

Cost of the entire program to the federal government will be $100,000,000 next year and $200,000,000 in succeeding years. The cost to the states will be $75,000,000 next year and $150,000,000 in succeeding years. Some idea of the size of the plan may be gained from the report of the President's cabinet which said reserves for old-age pensions must be maintained after some years at $15,250,000,000.

NEW DEALERS sighed with relief as the Supreme court recessed until February 4 without handing down its decision in the gold cases, thus giving the administration more time in which to prepare legislation designed to handle the situation in the event the court renders an adverse decision.

At the same time the court promised to decide a case presenting a clear-cut test of the constitutionality of the national recovery act, and which will probably have considerable effect upon the ultimate fate of the already bedraggled Blue Eagle.

The justices during the next two weeks will write opinions on cases heard recently, including in all probability the momentous suits testing validity of congressional action in canceling gold payment clauses in $100,000,000,000 worth of public and private securities. It is expected that the court will render its decision soon after February 4, since it has shown a disposition to rule as quickly as possible in all matters involving New Deal legislation.

LEGISLATION which would permit the small investor to buy government securities and which provides for radical changes in government financing has been introduced in the house by Chairman Doughton of the house ways and means committee.

The bill, prepared by the Treasury department, places the administration squarely against inflation. It provides authority to raise money necessary for the public works, social security and similar measures, meet federal deficits, and might even be used to provide funds for payment of the soldiers' bonus.

Under provisions of the measure there would be ten-year bonds in amounts as small as $25, and as explained by the Treasury department, would be sold below par. There would be no interest, but each six months the bonds would appreciate in value at the rate of 2½ per cent, plus compounded earnings.

Huge sums are involved: first, the creation of a revolving bond authorization fund of $2,500,000,000; and second, the consolidation of the two present revolving funds of $10,000,000,000 each into a joint $20,000,000,000 fund for bills, certificates and notes.

EUROPEAN statesmen anxiously watched developments in the cantons of Eupen and Malmedy on the Belgian frontier as gendarmerie re-enforcements were rushed to arrest Nazi agitators who have been advocating annexation of that territory with the German reich. Loyalists report a campaign of terrorism has been carried on against those who have refused to join an organization directed by the Brown Shirts. The Belgian government is expected to lodge a complaint with the League of Nations.

A celebration was recently held over the Saar vote, and manifestoes were posted on the street corners urging the residents to "follow the example of the Saar. Return to the fatherland." Thousands of incendiary pamphlets, said to have been printed in Germany, have also been distributed.

The cantons which were taken from Germany under the Versailles treaty have considerable commercial importance. Formerly a part of Rhenish Prussia, they have an area of about 400 square miles and a population in excess of 60,000 people. Eupen boasts spinning mills and other establishments connected with the textile industry, iron foundries, machine shops and tanneries.

NORTH DAKOTA, for many years a political hotbed, ran true to form, as impeachment proceedings were pushed against Gov. Thomas H. Moodie, Democrat, by the dominant Nonpartisan bloc in the legislature. Charges are made that Moodie "usurped" the office when he "knew" he was disqualified to serve. It is claimed that Moodie is not a United States citizen, and that he has not been a resident of the state long enough to permit him to hold office.

Shortly after the Nonpartisan league faction in the house rushed through the resolution of impeachment, Moodie retaliated by stationing National Guardsmen at the executive offices to thwart possible attempts of foes to seize the official quarters. These were later removed when legal requirements for impeachment proceedings were met by the house.

WASHINGTON'S most talked of romance culminated in the marriage of Anna Roosevelt Dall, daughter of the President, and John Boettiger, newspaper man. The ceremony was performed in the Roosevelt town house in New York, and the couple left immediately on a short honeymoon trip.

Mrs. Roosevelt, mother of the bride, told reporters she was not surprised, although a few weeks ago she denied any knowledge of an impending marriage between her daughter and Boettiger. Rumors of an attachment between the couple have been current for more than a year.

The bride was divorced from her husband, Curtis B. Dall, in Reno last July 31. Four months earlier Boettiger secured a divorce in Chicago.

RATIFICATION of the world court protocols received a setback when Senator Hiram Johnson, Republican, California, bitterly denounced such action as a "back door entry" to the League of Nations, and senate leaders rather than risk an immediate vote, delayed definite action.

Sen. Hiram Johnson

Senator Johnson's attack came on the heels of a special message to the senate from President Roosevelt who asked for early ratification of the protocols. It was the most determined movement yet made to put the United States into the court.

Other senators, it is said, were ready to follow Johnson's lead, particularly Senator Borah, long time foe of the court.

Johnson supported his opening attack on the court by offering four embarrassing reservations to the resolution of ratification:

1. Prohibit the court from entertaining jurisdiction on any question relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs.
2. Permit recourse to the court only by agreement through general or special treaties between the parties in dispute.
3. Prohibit the court and the league of nations from trying to assume jurisdiction on any question which depends upon or relates to the Monroe Doctrine.
4. Declare the United States, by joining the court, assumes no obligations.

Through Johnson's action, these questions must be voted upon before a final vote can be reached on the resolution of adherence.

Although the question has been sidetracked for a time, it will be brought up soon, it is said, and Senator Robinson, Democratic leader, has stated that he was confident of ratification.

ASPIRATIONS of half a dozen candidates for the more or less obscure office of Vice President were definitely dissipated when word was quietly passed that President Roosevelt will again team up with the genial Texan in the 1936 campaign.

Considerable talk has been circulated that a more liberal running mate for the President would be desirable in the next campaign, and it was suggested that the choice might fall on Secretary Wallace or Secretary Ickes, but an apparently reliable source indicates there will be no change in the winning combination of 1932.

THE final fate of NRA seems to be up to the President. Reports from the capital say the National Industrial Recovery board, successor to Gen. Hugh Johnson, who asserts NRA is "as extinct as the dodo," has avoided a direct recommendation that the institution be made permanent. Since this was evidently done with the approval of the President, the future of the Blue Eagle seems to be somewhat clouded.

Donald Richberg

The board, of which Donald Richberg is chairman, pointed out three possible courses which the President can follow. The first course would be to make NRA permanent, but in simplified form. Under this plan, every industry would have to go under a code fixing wage and hour limits and prohibiting child labor. Trade practice provisions would be entirely voluntary. In rare cases where price fixing is employed, the government, not the industry, would fix the price.

The second course would be to extend the NRA as it now stands, but for a limited period. Unless legislation of this kind is enacted, the act will expire automatically on June 16. The third course would amend and extend the NRA.

DEFENSE attorneys for Bruno Hauptmann indicate they will continue to pin their hopes on the mysterious Isador Fisch, little German furrier, whom they claim was the kidnaper of Baby Charles Lindbergh, and who used the accused ex-carpenter as an unwitting accomplice. Fisch died from tuberculosis in Germany.

Efforts have been made to link Fisch with every phase of the case—the Lindbergh household, the ransom notes, and the ransom money. Cross-examination of the defense counsel always swings back to the theory that Fisch was really the murderer of the child.

This will be used in connection with the expressed alibi of Hauptmann that he was calling for his wife at her place of employment on the night of March 1, 1932, and several witnesses to confute the state's claim that Hauptmann was seen near the Hopewell (N. J.) estate on the day the crime took place will be called. Several other "surprise" witnesses are expected to be produced by Edward Reilly, chief attorney for Hauptmann.

Meanwhile the state continued its attempts to show that Hauptmann financed his brokerage accounts with the $50,000 ransom money. Two certified public accountants, both government men, were called by the state to establish their claim that although the accused was in the market in a small way prior to the kidnaping, his accounts suddenly increased after the ransom money was paid. At one time prior to the kidnaping, Hauptmann closed out an account listing fifty shares of stock and received an equity of $600, but afterward transactions totaling $350,000 in the next thirty months were carried on by him.

This sudden increase, the defense asserts, was the result of Hauptmann being the unsuspecting "front" for the shadowy Fisch. The little furrier, it is claimed, was often seen with Hauptmann in a New York broker's office, and although all the transactions were carried in Hauptmann's name, it was really Fisch who was conducting the market operations and who furnished the capital.

The question of the banking and brokerage accounts is looked upon by both sides as very important in its bearing on the motive of the crime. The state asserts Hauptmann wanted money in order to live without working, and to satisfy his passion for stock market speculation.

WAR flamed again in Manchukuo as the Japanese massed 4,000 troops in preparation for a drive into Chahar province, west of Jehol and northwest of Peiping. Infantry and aviation units are being sent from Chengteh, capital of Jehol province, against Tanin and Tokochen, adjacent to the Jehol-Chahar border. The Japanese claim both towns belong to the Manchukuo regime. Notice to vacate the towns has already been issued to the Chinese controller of the province.

Japan's action is seen by Chinese leaders as a determined gesture to intimidate Mongolian princes of Inner Mongolia and to cut the overland route connecting Peiping with Urga, capital of Soviet controlled Outer Mongolia.

The situation is viewed with considerable apprehension by Soviet Russia. The drive will bring Japanese military operations into direct contact with the borders of Outer Mongolia, and practically all high officials of the territory who have been attending the Soviet anniversary celebrations in Moscow have hurried back to their provinces.

THE increasing importance of the Orient as an outlet for American trade, and the swift convergence of European air lines upon that area have prompted rapid advancement of plans for establishment of an experimental air transport service which is expected to reduce transportation time between the Orient and the New world by 60 flying hours.

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, it has been announced, will take a leading part in blazing the new trail across the Pacific. At present he is awaiting the outcome of the trial of Bruno Hauptmann, accused of the Lindbergh baby murder. Mrs. Lindbergh is not expected to accompany her husband on the trip.

St. Paul—A program to encourage formers to make use of the credit facilities of the federal housing administration to repair and modernize their homes was started at a meeting of the state advisory committee.

Winona—Mrs. H. M. Lambertson, Jr., of Winona, a surprise candidate, was elected Democratic national committeewoman for Minnesota at a four-hour session of the Democratic state central committee in St. Paul.

Moorhead—A verdict of acquittal ended the trial of J. Cameron Thomson, Northwest Bancorporation president, when a jury of two women and 10 men of Clay county voted him not guilty of fraud and swindling in connection with stock sales, as charged by the state.

Hibbing—Appointment of C. F. Jack Vance, for seven years football coach at Evanston High school, as backfield coach at Northwestern university, was announced by K. L. (Tug) Wilson, athletic director. Vance coached the local high school teams before going to Evanston.

St. Paul—L. P. Zimmerman, acting relief administrator for Minnesota for several months, will become deputy administrator, and it was reported to mean that Governor Floyd B. Olson, who resigned as administrator during the campaign, may again assume the position as head of the relief agency.

Parkers Prairie—Two children burned to death here when fire, caused by an overheated stove, destroyed the home of Robert Welch. The victims were Wallace Welch, 3, and his infant brother, Lawrence. They were trapped by the flames while their mother, who was outside when the fire started, was unable to aid them.

Minneapolis—Uncle Sam may not collect a penny off your income, but he wants to know what you are making. Single persons earning more than $1,000 annually and married persons whose incomes exceed $2,500 annually are subject to prosecution if they fail to file federal income tax declarations, declared Fred C. Helweg, division chief of the internal revenue bureau here.

Minneapolis—Twenty-nine counties in Minnesota that have reported to date have cut their 1934 tax levies, payable in 1935, a total of $370,000, the Minnesota Taxpayers' Association which is making the tabulations announced. This is the fifth successive year that the local taxing units in the state have reduced levies over previous years, the total reduction in the period being $45,000,000, in all the units which include counties, cities and villages, townships and school districts.

Fairmont—The Fairmont city council had a $45,000 load lifted from its shoulders. The sum represents the city's share of the $65,000 sewage disposal plant, the balance of $20,000 having been a federal grant. The city water and light commission informed the city council it would take over the disposal plant bonds and retire them as they mature from earnings of the municipal light and power plant. The light and power plant also has contributed $16,000 toward municipal expenses in the past two years.

Duluth—Options on 35,447 acres of land in Minnesota totaling $92,805 were approved and 1,159,621 acres in new national forest purchase units in the national forest reservation commission in Washington. The options approved in the state were in Meseba forest, 5,785 acres, $12,867; Superior national forest, 17,743 acres, $47,648, and Chippewa National forest, 11,919 acres, $32,290. The new additions to national forests approved for Minnesota were 356,236 acres in Cass county and 803,385 acres in Lake and St. Louis counties.

Aprons That Are Chic and Useful

2060

The housewife who takes pride in her kitchen usually takes great interest in a goodly supply of chic aprons, and where could you find two lovelier models than those shown today. Both are included in the one pattern and both have slenderizing front panels and that fashionable half-belted waistline. The upper design gives fine opportunity for using rick-rack braid to set off the lines of its smart V neck and spacious pockets. The lower sketch boasts a youthfully rounded neckline and jaunty capelike shoulders, and would be as pretty as can be made up in a dainty dotted swiss, edged with embroidery.

Pattern 2060 is available in sizes small, medium and large. Medium size, each apron takes one and a half yards 36-inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly NAME, ADDRESS and STYLE NUMBER. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin decides to adopt a baby in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles.

She was a pretty child, of olive complexion, with very dark blue eyes and rich, shiny, jet black hair. She was unusually intelligent and affectionate, of quick sympathy and winning, gracious ways. She was the apple of Mr. Gatlin's eye, and by the time she was ten years old he no longer cared a snap of his finger for his wife.

If Penelope was Mr. Gatlin's refuge, he also was hers. She never complained to him—doubtless because she feared her foster mother, who had succeeded in inculcating in the child a duty complex quite out of proportion to the lady's deserts. Nevertheless it was understood between them that they were a pair of outlaws; mutual sympathy drew them closer together each day; their mutual love was a sweet and holy sentiment.

Mr. Gatlin's nerves did not improve through the years, although when Penelope was ten years old, a wandering evangelist came to town and commenced a furious campaign of conversion and curing by prayer every disease that flesh is heir to; and Mrs. Gatlin became "converted." Thereafter, life for Mr. Gatlin and Penelope became almost unbearable.

In a moment of insane fury, Mr. Gatlin performed what he considered a long neglected duty. He took Mrs. Gatlin's classical countenance in both hands, bumped her head repeatedly against the wall and told her that if she ever opened her mouth again in his presence without his permission he'd just about kill her. She didn't. She sued him for divorce and had Penelope on the witness stand to prove that Mr. Gatlin had beaten her; that he had remained away from home until late at night and refused to reveal his rendezvous. Mr. Gatlin entered a cross-complaint and petitioned to have Penelope allocated to him.

Unfortunately the judge was a pudding-head. He refused to accept Mr. Gatlin's explanation that he had laid hands on Mrs. Gatlin but once, and that only in a moment of frenzy. But he did not state where he had been in the habit of spending his evenings so suspiciously. He couldn't afford to. He was a prominent business man. However, the judge should have known. Probably he did, but even so he was unsympathetic. He granted Mrs. Gatlin the divorce, liberal alimony and the custody of Penelope; whereupon the honorable court was treated to the spectacle of Mr. Gatlin and Penelope weeping in each other's arms. However, Mr. Gatlin was permitted to have Penelope to himself two Sunday afternoons in each month and one-half of each school vacation.

The first Sunday afternoon Mr. Gatlin availed himself of this privilege, his quondam spouse had hysterics, for with the malevolence of a devil Mr. Gatlin announced he was taking Penelope to a ball game. He took her, too, and they had a gorgeous time together until a home run sailed into the bleachers and struck Penelope violently on her pretty little nose. Mr. Gatlin, with the unconscious form in his arms, fled to a hospital, where he was foolish enough to telephone Mrs. Gatlin what had occurred. She appeared on the scene and carried Penelope home at once.

Mr. Gatlin knew what she was up to. She was going to cure Penelope's fractured nose by faith—and he had no faith in such therapy. He followed with a doctor, demanding at the front door to be admitted—a request which was ignored. So he kicked in the panels of the front door, which he had no business to do because it was no longer his, Mrs. Gatlin having acquired it in the property settlement. Thereupon she summoned the police by telephone and had him arrested, and the next morning he was tried, found guilty and placed under bond of a thousand dollars to remain away from the place for one year.

He didn't do it, because he knew what would happen to Penelope if he did. And he could afford a thousand dollars—fifty thousand dollars if need be—to prevent that! He attacked within twenty-four hours—at night, but he was quiet about it. He remembered he had never surrendered his latch-key, so he entered quietly and kidnaped Penelope.

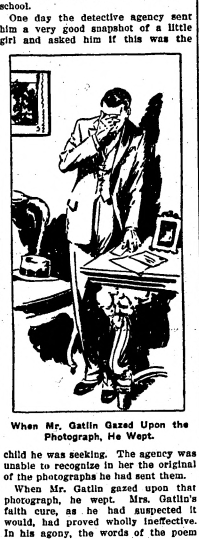
Within two hours he was arrested en route to a San Francisco hospital in a motor car with Penelope. For disobeying the magistrate, he was adjudged guilty of contempt of court, his bond of a thousand dollars forfeited—and he was sentenced to thirty days in the county jail. Mrs. Gatlin preferred a charge of kidnaping against him, which is a felony, and since Mr. Gatlin knew he would be tried on that charge when he emerged from jail he improved the shining hours by swearing to a warrant charging Mrs. Gatlin with insanity. Promptly she was brought before a board of alienists who declared her sane, and in order to avoid investigation into Mr. Gatlin's charge that she was denying Penelope medical attention, she turned her house over to an agent and disappeared—with Penelope.

From his cell in the county jail, Mr. Gatlin issued orders to his attorneys to find Penelope and take legal steps to prevent his ex-wife from removing her again beyond the jurisdiction of the court that had granted their divorce. A diligent search of three months failed of its object, so Mr. Gatlin neglected to deposit any alimony to his ex-wife's credit. He knew she could manage very well without the alimony. But he also knew Louise. She would have what was coming to her or know the reason why.

When six months had passed, Mr. Gatlin decided he had never been acquainted with her, for she failed to make any demand upon him for her alimony; hence he realized she preferred, by keeping Penelope from him, to cause him the maximum of suffering rather than reveal her whereabouts by making a claim for the alimony due her. A year and a day from the date of the granting of her interlocutory degree, her attorneys petitioned for the final decree, which was granted. Mr. Gatlin thereupon discovered she was living in Paris.

This news brought him no comfort. She was beyond reach of United States law. However, he had detectives place her under surveillance. They reported her as living alone, so Mr. Gatlin concluded she had placed Penelope in a school.

One day the detective agency sent him a very good snapshot of a little girl and asked him if this was the child he was seeking. The agency was unable to recognize in her the original of the photographs he had sent them.



When Mr. Gatlin Gazed Upon the Photograph, He Wept.

When Mr. Gatlin gazed upon that photograph, he wept. Mrs. Gatlin's faith cure, as he had suspected it would, had proved wholly ineffective. In his agony, the words of the poem came back to him:

> And you, my sweet Penelope, out there
> somewhere you wait for me,
> With buds of roses in your hair and
> kisses on your mouth.

He sold his retail shoe business and placed all of his assets in a trust fund, the income to be paid to him during his lifetime and to Penelope after his death. He saved out of this trust fund, however, ten thousand dollars, with which he purchased a letter of credit and a ticket to Cherbourg.

In the interim Mr. Gatlin's detectives had ascertained that Penelope was in a school in Switzerland; he planned to go to that school, abduct Penelope and—his plans were a trifle hazy, but he intended to mature them as he crossed the Atlantic. Once in possession of Penelope, he would see to it that she should never know unhappiness again, if any effort of his could prevent it. He was worth half a million dollars—half in cash and the remainder in real estate that was rapidly appreciating in value. He could afford to retire. They would go somewhere and lose themselves.

En route to the station—the first leg of his journey—the automobile in which he was riding was struck by another car and turned over. Mr. Gatlin was thrown out and suffered a basal fracture of the skull, from which he died six hours later.

CHAPTER II

Stephen Burt, M. D., was the sort of man whose waiting room always would have been crowded, even if he had not been one quarter as capable as his colleagues knew him to be. He was a man of sweet simplicity, absolute honesty and overwhelming sympathy; in short, he possessed the ideal personality for a successful physician.

Miss Lanning was his office nurse. In training schools for nurses—at least it was so in the hospital where Miss Lanning was trained—nurses and interns develop the sort of democracy and comradeship which delights in nicknames—and in dispensing with formality. Quite early in her professional career, therefore, Miss Lanning became known as Lanny. She was a not very good looking, capable, tremendously intelligent, forceful, driving person, exactly the type that would inevitably become an old maid.

When Lanny was thirty years old and Stephen Burt was sixteen, she had him for a patient. He had measles. "What a nice, well-mannered boy!" she thought, the first day she had him. "What a dear lad!" she reflected the second day. "What a good, kind, considerate patient!" she exclaimed to the doctor on the third day. "He must have had a sweet, sensible mother."

"Perhaps," the doctor had replied. "I never knew her and neither did the boy. She died at his birth. He's man-raised. His father is an old friend and patient of mine."

"Has he a stepmother?" Even then, Lanny realized she would be a victim of a pang of jealousy if the doctor answered in the affirmative, for already the boy had aroused her maternal instinct. She was relieved to learn that his father had foisted no such trial upon the boy.

On the fourth day of his illness she called him "dearie." On the fifth day, when she proffered him castor oil, he rebelled; but when Lanny said: "Now, darling, I'll feel bad if you refuse to obey me," the boy had been instantly contrite.

"I'm sorry, Lanny," he apologized. "I'm a pig to oppose you." And then he groaned and took it—and Lanny kissed him and wanted to weep over him because he was such a dear and hadn't any mother—nor even a stepmother!

"Lanny," he said to her on the seventh day, "do you know I love you a lot? I wish dad would marry you, so you could be with me all the time."

Lanny's heart swelled with the poignant grief of her baffled maternity at that honest boyish avowal.

On the eighth day he developed double pneumonia, as a sequel to the measles. He almost died—and so did Lanny. The doctor swore—and so did Stephen's father—that nothing but Lanny's devoted nursing brought him through. She wept the day she realized if she drew another day's salary as his nurse, she would be accepting money under false pretenses; and she wept on two counts. First, because she was leaving Stephen, and second, because Stephen's father insisted on being too grateful for her services.

"There is a reward due you, Miss Lanning," he told her, "over and beyond the trifling remuneration given you in exchange for your devoted services. That's a debt Steve and I can never repay, but the boy thinks we ought to make a pretense at payment and so do I." And he opened her hand-bag and slipped an envelope in it.

When she got back to the nurses' home, where she lived between calls, she discovered he had given her five thousand dollars! Young Stephen had already given her his photograph, indorsed: "To my dear Lanny, with love from Steve."

Nursing is the most personal and impersonal profession in the world. Lanny never expected to see Stephen Burt again, but she sent him at Christmas a four-ounce Fairy fishing rod from Hardy's in London. It cost her a month's wages. She knew his father was a fishing enthusiast and would probably inculcate the same enthusiasm in his boy. Steve had sent her roses on her birthday; and his love, by telegraph, Christmas eve, together with an exquisite little watch to replace the dollar timepiece she used to count pulse beats. On New Year's day, a year later, he made a formal call and she was out on a case; so the day she was relieved she called upon him.

"Hello, Lanny," he said—and kissed her. "I wanted to see you to get some advice. Do you think, Lanny, that I'd make a half decent doctor?"

"God made you for a doctor," Lanny assured him. "You'll not have to be more than a mediocre doctor to be financially successful. You were born with the ideal personality."

"Thanks, Lanny. I want to be a doctor, but I want to be a good one, too, so you tell me what I am to do about it. I've just graduated from high school. Made the honor roll," he confided shyly.

"How far up the honor roll?" Lanny's query had almost a fierce quality in it.

"Number one."

"And you were out of school two months of your last term. I'm proud of you, Stevie."

"Where shall I go to college, Lanny?"

"Where do you intend to practice when you're a doctor, Stevie?"

"Right here, in San Francisco."

"In that event you should attend a local university. You'll go to Stanford university," Lanny decided. "If you graduate with honor there you're bound to get an interneship in Stanford University hospital. About two years of that and you'll know what you want to specialize in, so off you'll go for a post-graduate course in Berlin, Vienna and London for four years. Then you'll return and I'll be your office nurse and manager. How's that for a program?"

"Just dandy, Lanny."

"It means ten years of grind, Stevie, but don't let time frighten you," she warned anxiously. "Once you know what you know and know that you know it, others will not be long discovering it also, and you'll be years ahead of the half-baked medical dunces this medical world is cursed with."

He flattered her immensely by taking her to luncheon and the matinee.

Lafayette's Visits to U. S.

Lafayette came to this country in 1777 and engaged with the colonists in their struggle for independence. He returned to France in 1779. He returned here in six months and participated in the battle of Yorktown. He visited this country in 1784 and in 1824.

Give Thought to Abnormal Child

Neglecting and Spoiling Are Both Extremes to Be Avoided.

Depending on what kind of parents they have, handicapped children are classified into three groups by Dr. John Ruhrah, author of "The Parent and the Handicapped Child," in Hygeia Magazine. The crippled child may be neglected, or he may be spoiled, or he may be treated sensibly and correctly.

The parents of the neglected child will feel outraged that such a thing as a handicapped child has been wished on them. They are liable to worry a bit and then they shut the child out of their lives and emotions as far as possible and feel no responsibility for his preparation for life.

The second set of parents make pity, of themselves and of the child, the biggest stumbling block in the way of educating the child. If the parent pities the child, the child will pity himself instead of making the best of his condition. The child is allowed to become spoiled, irritable, exacting, wanting everything his own way and doing nothing for himself.

There is the third set of parents who are quick to realize that they have a problem on their hands, and they set about learning how best to solve it. The child must be taught first that he is to behave as other children do as far as he is able, taking into consideration his handicap. The child can be taught independence if the parent finds out what the child can do for himself and what he cannot do, and then does only what is necessary. Children like to do things for themselves and it is one way they learn not only to do things, but to be independent. This also applies to teaching the child to make decisions for himself. Children who are never allowed to decide things for themselves grow up into men and women who have a hard time, and no one needs self-confidence and independence more than the handicapped person.

Idleness is bad and makes children unhappy. The handicapped child should be kept occupied with games and hobbies in which he is interested, but there should be a careful steering between overexertion and underexertion. All physically handicapped children need extra rest, which should be a part of the daily routine. Too much exercise is worse than none.

LONGEST RAIL BRIDGE

A British firm of engineers recently completed building the longest railway bridge in the world. It is the Lower Zambesi bridge, erected to provide uninterrupted railway communication between Beira and Lake Nyasa, in East Africa, and is 11,650 feet, or nearly two miles and a quarter, in length. There are six approach spans and 33 main spans, the latter being supported by concrete piers sunk in the bed of the river, or on mass concrete bases founded on the rock at the river bank. Hell Gate bridge, in New York is nearly 2,000 feet longer than the Lower Zambesi bridge, but 10,818 feet of this is over land and only a total of 2,735 feet is over three separate branches of the East river, whereas the entire length of the Lower Zambesi bridge is over the water during the winter season.

There is positively no excuse for an automobile driver endangering his life and others at at railroad crossings. I cannot find one plausible reason. Can you?

Is it necessary to drive across railroad tracks without first ascertaining whether a train is approaching or not? If the vision is obscured, stop, look, and listen. Better get out and make sure before proceeding. You will live longer.

Even gates are no barrier to some. About three hundred motorists are killed annually at crossings by driving through lowered gates. Is their eyesight bak? Probably not. It is a case of dumb driving with no brain cells working.

Stop, look, and listen, its safer Your family will appreciate your doing this.

A VALENTINE BRIDGE TEA

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY refuses to be relegated to the era of lavender-and-old-lace. In spite of its heritage of lace-paper valentines packed away in scented boxes, the envelopes bearing handwriting in fine old script of another day, this day of romance and delightful surprises continues in favor with each generation.

Tea-and-Talk

Today, with the vogue for bridge teas, instead of the more elaborate bridge luncheon, Valentine's Day comes along as a particularly seasonable date for entertaining with a Valentine Bridge tea. Possibly one reason for the popularity of the bridge tea is the fact that it can include not only bridge fans of your acquaintance but also other friends who wish to come in late in the afternoon for tea-and-talk. This does not interfere with the game which can be started early in the afternoon, so that the real bridge enthusiasts have plenty of time to play before the later arrivals.

It will give your tea a touch of days-gone-by if you make a point of sending invitations, instead of resorting to the telephone. If you can't find old-fashioned pink lacey valentines in your shops, make some by using a light cardboard stock, cutting it heart-shaped, covering with a heart-shaped piece of lace-paper dolly and then pasting two small pink hearts on top of the lace-paper, in the center of the valentine. Write two lines of the invitation on each heart, letting the lines read thus:

Be my Valentine guest.
Please arrive
For bridge at two,
Or tea at five.

If you would like a game for those who come a little early, but who don't play bridge, try "Sweet Scents," which is an appropriate Valentine contest to see whose nose knows. Get samples of perfume from the favorites of your various friends. Place a bit of cotton, previously dipped in the perfume or sachet in a small bottle tightly corked. Each bottle should be numbered. Let each one smell each kind and write down the fragrance which they detect, writing down also the number of the bottle. It is surprising how difficult it is to distinguish the odors after smelling a variety of them. Instead of perfumes, if you prefer, you can use spices from the pantry—clove, cinnamon, sassafras, almond extract, etc. The prize should be a small bottle of good perfume.

Here is a simple but delightful Valentine tea party menu with tested recipes:

Frozen Fruit Salad
Shrimp and Caper Sandwiches
Piquant Ham Sandwiches
Tea Candy Hearts Cashews

The following recipes are simple to prepare and designed to serve eight persons:

Frozen Fruit Salad: Cream one package of cream cheese, add two-thirds cup mayonnaise and one cup of cream beaten, mixing until smooth. Soften one-half teaspoon gelatin in one tablespoon cold water. Add two tablespoons sugar to one cup of crushed canned pineapple, bring to boiling and pour over the gelatin mixture, stirring until dissolved. Cool. Add this to the mayonnaise and cream mixture. Then add one banana, cut in small cubes, and one-half cup of halved, canned, red pitted cherries. (Substitute maraschino cherries, if you prefer). Then add one-half cup of chopped nuts. Freeze in refrigerator trays. Serve on crisp lettuce hearts. This serves eight persons.

Shrimp and Caper Sandwiches: Drain one can of shrimp and mince finely. Add two tablespoons chopped capers, one-eighth teaspoon salt and five tablespoons Thousand Island Dressing. Spread between thinly sliced and buttered whole wheat bread.

Piquant Ham Sandwiches: Mix the contents of a small can of deviled ham, one teaspoon chopped mustard pickles, one tablespoon chopped walnuts and one tablespoon mayonnaise. Spread between buttered slices of white bread.*

Patronize The Showman

It has now been some time since we have had a good show in town. Mr. Davidson who has been giving the people of this community good talking shows in the past, will again give the public here shows regular each week.

Mr. Davidson will be here on Tuesday evening, February 19th with a dandy picture and good comedy. He also will give a free dance after the show to all the patrons.

Where can you go and see a good show and have a dance for the same price as Mr. Davidson, is giving you high class entertainment of that kind here? If you show your appreciation for what he is doing for the people here by attending his shows, we know that you will always find him ready to give you the best.

Let us see you overtax the capacity of the Community Hall Tuesday night for a starter.

Saving 9 Cents A Week

If the reduced automobile license fees of the past two years are continued by the legislature, the average motorist will save nine and six tenths cents a week, according to a statement by N. W. Elsberg, highway commissioner.

"If this saving is more important to the people as a whole than providing a $14, 000, 000 highway employment program at a cost to the state of only $7,000,000, then the reduced fees should be continued," Mr. Elsberg said.

"If an employment program offering jobs for between 14,000 and 15,000 men in all the counties, financed half by federal funds, is more important than the $5 a year saving to the motorist, then the normal license fees of 1932 should be restored.

"This is the whole problem before the legislature. Which way the desision goes is not vitally important to the highway department. The department will have plenty to do in maintaining the enlarged system if we do not match the federal aid of $7,000,000 offered us. The only difference will be that men who would have jobs if we match the money will be on the relief if we don't".

Propose Aute Fee Cut

An attempt will be made by the majority leaders in the Legislature to have both houses act this week on bills to reduce motor vehicle license fees permanently to the 1933-34 level.

Representative F. F. Moore of Wheaton, chairman of the House Motor Vehicles committee, announced Monday that a session of the committee would be held on Wednesday, when it was hoped final action on the bill would be taken.

The Senate Motor Vehicles committee, headed by Senator William L. Roepke of Faribault, held the final hearing on the bill to reduce fees Wednesday afternoon, when Highway department officials were also again heard.

Inasmuch as sentiment in both Senate and House committees is reported overwhelmingly in favor of continuing the reduced rates, it is expected the bills will be reported favorably to both both groups, and could be passed under suspension of the rules before the end of this week.

A bill extending the time for payment of 1935 licence fees from February 15 to March 15 already has passed both houses and been signed by Governor Olson, and leaders in the Legislature are anxious to obtain final action on the reduction measure so the half-million motorists in the state will know what they are to pay.

The reduction in effect in 1933-34, which would be made permanent under the pending bills, averaged approximately 36 per cent, with lowe priced cars benefiting the most.

The principal argument against the reduction has been that it would lower revenus of the Highway department to the point where it would be unable to match expected Federal aid totaling approximately 7 million dollars during the next biennium.

Ask Legislature For Help

St. Paul—Legal tangles over a half-million dollar conservation project Monday forced state officials into a decision to call on the legislature for help.

Unable to reach an agreement with federal representatives over condemnation proceedings, officials of the department of conservation started drawing a bill in an effort to hasten work on the Mud Lake bird sanctuary project east of Holt.

The bill, to be introduced one day this week, will ask the legislature to authorize the conservation department to carry on the condemnation of 52,000 acres for the nesting and feeding grounds.

It had been assumed the federal government, financing the project, would go ahead with condemnation, but "differences in proper procedure" intervened, Commissioner E.V. Willard said.

Willard, pointing out "there is no issue in the matter between the government and ourselves," said the legislative authority will be sought so as to get the project under way before funds in Washington are withdrawn.

The bill, besides enabling condemnation by the commission, would provide for conveyor rights for transfer of the land to government hands.

A crowd of about forty ladies gave Mrs. John Hagberg a birth day party at her home Wednesday afternoon.

BANKING EVOLUTION

By R. S. HECHT
President American Bankers Association

R. S. HECHT

BANKING at one time was a private business, but more recently has developed into a profession—a semi-public profession. This change has not come suddenly but is the result of an evolutionary process. Banking has grown and changed with the growth and change of our country.

The banker who has survived the trials and tribulations of the past few years has proven himself a man of courage and ability, and we may well expect him to meet the problems that lie before him with resolution and sound judgment.

Changes of momentous importance have occurred in our economic structures and bankers have had a difficult road to travel. Some will argue that all of these changes were evolutionary and inevitable, while others look upon many of them as revolutionary and unnecessary. It is extremely difficult to trace with any degree of accuracy the real causes for many of our troubles and it is not always easy in judging these developments to distinguish properly between cause and effect.

Unfortunately it has become the fashion to blame on our banking system all the troubles which the depression has brought. As a consequence we hear much of needed reform of banking by law. No one will deny that certain defects have developed in our existing banking laws which need correction, and that certain abuses were committed which no one wishes to defend or have remain possible in the future. Never before were bankers more determined than they are today to bring about whatever changes in our banking system are called for by the public welfare.

The best results can and will be accomplished by normal processes and gradual adjustments of our present private banking structure—suitably supervised by proper authority—rather than by the passage of still more drastic laws, offering panaceas in the form of more government-owned or government-controlled financial organizations.

The Basis of Good Laws

Lasting laws relating to any phase of human need are formed and modelled in the rough school of practical human experience and are usually the result of sound evolutionary processes rather than of sudden impulses to change fundamental principles.

If we analyze the new banking picture which has developed during the past eighteen months, we cannot help but arrive at the conclusion that evolutionary changes which have taken place in banking, and the economic life of the nation of which it is a part, have justified much of the banking legislation recently passed. As we look ahead and consider the new problems which are facing us we must inevitably come to the conclusion that some further changes in our banking laws will become necessary.

It is not enough that bankers merely acquiesce in banking imposed by law. Zeal for evolutionary banking reform must be more aggressive than that. Banking practice itself, without compulsion of law, can and should reflect the changes and lessons of the times and difficulties through which the nation has passed and, even to a greater extent than law, render banking more truly a good public servant by voluntary self-reform. In no small measure is this accomplished by the better training of the members of the banking fraternity and by instilling constantly higher ideals in those who are ultimately responsible for bank management.

As we march on into the world of tomorrow the banker has a greater opportunity for usefulness than ever before, and I hope that the service he will render to society will be so conscientious, so constructive and so satisfactory as to merit general approval and assure him his logical high place and leadership.

Honored At Winter Shows

Two very prominent Marshall county livestock exhibitors were singally honored at the Northwest School Farmers' Week and Red River Valley Winter Shows for their contribution to the development of the livestock and dairy cattle industry of the Red River Valley. These men were C. L. Spaulding, Warren, breeder of Holstein cattle, who was presented with a suitably engraved plaque by the Minnesota Red River Valley Dairymens' Association, and L. Lamberson, Warren, breeder of Polled Shorthorns, who received a similar plaqua from the Minnesota Livestock Breeders' Association.

Mr. Spaulding, now of Minneapolis, has developed one of the greatest herds of Holsteins in the state, including many championship cows. Mr. Lamberson began farming in 1897. He imported his first cattle 34 years ago. Mr. Lamberson has now retired, but he still takes a keen interest in livestock production.

These men were selected by the livestock and dairy breeders of Marshall county and recommended to the Red River Valley Dairymens' association at the Red River Valley Livestock Breeders' association for recognition. The custom of selecting one dairy cattle breeder and one general livestock breeder from each Red River Valley county will be made a permanent feature of the Winter Shows.

The honored breeders, following their recognition, formed an informal club which will assist the two breeders' association in developing a plan of selecting future members.

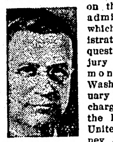
ICKES ASKS GRAND JURY TO INVESTIGATE CHARGES OF GRAFT IN PWA FUNDS

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

"HONEST HAROLD" Ickes has been subjected to lots of abuse by congressmen and others, but he does not intend to let anything be put over on the Public Works administration, of which he is the administrator. At his request a special grand jury has been summoned to meet in Washington on February 6 to inquire into charges of graft in the PWA. Assistant United States Attorney John W. Fihelly has the matter in hand for the government and will present first testimony concerning the $4,000,000 canal project in Texas. It was asserted that the contract for this project was withdrawn after Mr. Ickes' investigators had uncovered evidence that there was a huge conspiracy to defraud the United States. Eight or ten persons, including federal officials, are said to be involved. Mr. Ickes himself said:



Sec'y Ickes

"The Public Works administration investigation division has made a long and careful study of the Texas project upon the direction of the administrator (Ickes) and presented to the proper prosecuting officials of the government a full report for such action as they deem proper to take."

This Texas case may consume several weeks, and afterward the grand jury is expected to investigate some other projects and also charges of fraud in the War department.

DURING the debate in the house on an administration bill to increase by $9,000,000,000 the amount of long-term securities the treasury can issue, Representative Reed of New York quoted Secretary Morgenthau as saying that the treasury could not finance the work relief program unless congress broadened its bond-issuing authority. So the house passed the measure at once.

The bill, prepared by the Treasury department, places the administration squarely against inflation. It provides authority to raise money necessary for the public works, social security and similar measures, meet federal deficits, and might even be used to provide funds for payment of the soldiers' bonus.

Under provisions of the measure there would be ten-year bonds in amounts as small as $25, and as explained by the Treasury department, would be sold below par. There would be no interest, but each six months the bonds would appreciate in value at the rate of 2½ per cent, plus compounded earnings.

Huge sums are involved: first, the creation of a revolving bond authorization fund of $2,500,000,000; and second, the consolidation of the two present revolving funds of $10,000,000,000 each into a joint $20,000,000,000 fund for bills, certificates and notes.

WHEN the senate passes the $4,000,000,000 work relief measure, as it certainly will after all the orators get through, there need be no fussing as to who is to administer the huge fund. President Roosevelt himself, according in an authority high in administration circles, will undertake that job and will allocate the money to the various agencies as he sees fit. There will be no new set-up for this purpose, unless it may be a small group of advisors selected by Mr. Roosevelt. These may be members of the cabinet or technical experts—more likely the latter. This information was given the senate finance committee as it began consideration of the bill, and was designed to quiet some of the opposition and also to curb the ambition of certain gentlemen who had hoped to handle the $4,000,000,000. It did not, however, silence those senators of both parties who still contend that too much power is given the President when he is handed such a vast sum to dispose of as he pleases.

As passed by the house by a huge majority and under "gag rule" the bill appropriates, in addition to the $4,000,000,000 for the President's work relief program, $880,000,000 for immediate relief expenditure. And that is the way it will go through the senate.

THE Hauptmann trial grinds on. Crowds jam the Flemington courthouse each day in the hope of witnessing something "sensational," there are the usual clashes between attorneys for the state and for the defense, the prisoner continues to maintain his composure under the terrific pressure to which he has been subjected, and except for the prominence of Colonel Lindbergh, the case has been about on a par with the usual murder trial.

New developments which he has assured the press will be "a big surprise" to Bruno Hauptmann have been promised by David T. Wilentz, New Jersey attorney general. The exact nature of this information has not been divulged, but is expected to be introduced soon.

The state has built up a good case in the opinion of most of those who have been following the trial. Every kind of evidence except that of eye witnesses and fingerprints has been introduced, and the defense will have to overcome the weight of this testimony if Hauptmann is to escape the electric chair in Trenton. Meanwhile Attorney Edward J. Reilly, famous New York criminal lawyer, is saying little, and preparing one of his famous surprises, or at least so some believe.

"SOMETHING went wrong with the steering apparatus." That seems to be the only explanation for the tragedy that overtook the Ward liner Mohawk off the New Jersey coast and that cost the lives of 15 of the vessel's passengers and 31 members of the crew. In no other way could anyone account for the weird fact that the Mohawk, a fast ship, was rammed by the freighter Talisman when both were outbound from New York and the Mohawk had started several hours before the Talisman. The liner had hove to below Ambrose Light to calibrate its compass; then, as she was under way again and passing the freighter she sheered sharply to port and ran directly across the Talisman's bow, was rammed and sank within half an hour. Both ships sent out SOS calls at once and the Mohawk's life boats were promptly launched. The survivors were picked up by two other liners, and the bodies of most of those killed were gathered up by coast guard vessels.

An investigation of the tragedy was started promptly on orders of Joseph Weaver, chief of the federal bureau of navigation. Another federal inquiry also got under way at the offices of United States Attorney Martin Conboy, where the Talisman crew was questioned.

THAT serio-comic "civil war" in Huey Long's domain is becoming more serious than comical and almost any day may develop into real warfare. It was centered for the present at the state capital. Two hundred armed men, directed by leaders of the Square Deal association, seized the parish court house in East Baton Rouge and held it until assured that one of their friends who had been arrested was released. They then dispersed with a warning from one John Appel to "be sure you have enough ammunition and be ready for the call at any time."

Huey Long

The Kingfish was in New Orleans at the time, but he hastened to Baton Rouge while Governor Allen called out some troops and proclaimed partial martial law in the capital. Huey immediately ordered the recently appointed Judge J. D. Womack to start an investigation of what he described as a plot to murder him, in which "four sheriffs and a district attorney" were involved. The senator declared:

"We picked up two men, one of them was going to drive the murder car. It was all fixed up. He was going to block my car on the highway between here and New Orleans, make it stop and force me in the ditch, and then 14 or 16 were going to come along in another car and kill me.

"We found all the stuff in the fellow's car. There was sheriff's equipment, and everything."

Maybe Huey was right, for one Sidney Songy testified at the inquiry that he had been given a gun, ammunition and gas bombs to kill the senator.

Long blamed the Standard Oil company for the armed assembly of his enemies in Baton Rouge and said that unless the company stopped the "violence" his compromise with it over the 5-cent oil refinery tax would be called off.

Despite this warning another armed group of Square Dealers gathered at the Baton Rouge air field; but someone betrayed them and a detachment of the National Guard advanced on them in battle array. The sight of machine guns was enough for the citizenry; they surrendered, were disarmed, placed under technical arrest and permitted to go home.

POSSIBILITY of a move by the Italian government to make a protectorate out of Ethiopia was seen by European statesmen. Exploitation of the announcement of the slaying of a French Somaliland administrator and 96 French Somaliland employees and Somalis was said to indicate that a movement was on for Italy to take over the mountainous African kingdom to restore order. The consent of France and Great Britain to the plan has been obtained, it was reported.

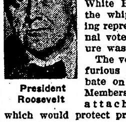
Premier Mussolini

A number of recent developments point toward some action by the Italian government. Premier Mussolini recently took over the office of minister of colonies; Gen. Emilio de Bono, former minister of colonies, was named high commissioner of Italian East Africa; military roads have been constructed through Italian Somaliland to the Ethiopian frontier; and the Italians have recently taken over a bigger share in the operation of the Djibouti and Addis Abbaba railway.

War in Ethiopia would involve considerable expense due to the rugged nature of the country, and this is seen by some as a reason why the Italian government has not acted sooner. The Ethiopian emperor has been buying all the arms and munitions he can, it has been reported, in preparation for the impending trouble.

ONE of the American navy's best administrators and most famous fighters disappeared from the scene with the death of Admiral Robert Edward Coontz at Bremerton, Wash., after two months of illness. He was seventy years old and on the retired list. Admiral Coontz was active in the navy for 47 years and during that time he served as commandant of midshipmen at Annapolis, governor of Guam, commandant of the Puget Sound navy yard and of the Fifth naval district. For four years after the World war he was chief of operations. His policy was expressed in the phrase "An American navy second to none."

ADMINISTRATION forces using steam roller tactics crushed all opposition to jam the President's $4,800,000,000 relief program through the house. Efforts to fight the grant of such unprecedented authority to the President were unavailing as the White House cracked the whip over revolting representatives. Final vote on the measure was 328 to 78.



President Roosevelt

The vote climaxed a furious eight-hour debate on the measure. Members attempted to attach amendments which would protect private industry from government projects which might be launched under the relief plan. When this failed they endeavored to allocate the money for specific purposes.

When the debate had reached its height, the President sent a message to the house declaring it would be impossible to segregate items for which the money would be expended, but that the huge outlay of sums would be devoted to public projects and that after the immediate crisis of unemployment had passed it was his hope that the country could set aside $500,000,000 a year for the "national plan."

The White House message was the signal for the Democratic majority to push the message across with little change from its original form. On the final vote 26 Republicans voted for the bill. Seven Progressives and three Farmer-Laborites also registered affirmative votes. Ten Democrats, five from Georgia, three from Virginia, and two from Indiana, voted with the opposition.

Because of the gag rule adopted by the house, only amendments offered by the appropriations committee could be considered in vital sections of the measure. Such minor amendments as were decided upon went through without serious opposition.

One of the amendments striking out a list of projects that might be included in spending the $4,000,000,000 and leaving the vast sum to be used for "federal or nonfederal projects" actually broadened the powers of the President. The $800,000,000 will be used at the President's discretion for relief purposes while the program is being put into effect.

Another amendment struck out a subsection which gave the President authority to postpone the end of any existing government agency. This was a move to satisfy certain Democrats who were opposed to Secretary Ickes, and his PWA program which expires in June. Another clause granting authority to the President to acquire personal property by the power of eminent domain was also removed, as was the section granting the Chief Executive the power to impose two years' imprisonment on any violator. The only other amendment which succeeded in passage was one which provided that an accounting be made for all moneys spent.

Minority Leader Snell attacked the bill, declaring that the money involved amounted to one-eighth of the national income, and that the house was entitled to know what the money was for. Later in conceding the minority's defeat he said that if the opposition was free to speak its mind, the bill would be defeated two to one, but that under the executive lash, there was no chance of defeating it.

RECOMMENDATIONS that America's air defense facilities be greatly increased will be made by President Roosevelt in a special message soon to be sent to congress, it has been indicated by those close to the administration. Construction of a series of air bases for the United States, the addition of 4,000 planes to the service, and building a huge dirigible will be among the projects which the President approves.

The proposed construction is in accord with a report just made by the special aviation commission. It is the purpose of the commission to lease the dirigible to a commercial firm as a sister ship to the Graf Zeppelin which will start regular transatlantic service within a few weeks.

JAPAN'S foreign minister, Koki Hirota, warned Soviet Russia that she should stop fortifying the Siberian frontier north of Manchukuo if friendly relations are to be continued between the two countries. His remarks, made in an address before the imperial diet, had special significance in view of reports that Japanese troops are invading Chahar province to prevent Sovietization of that region.

Russian fortifications in the Far East, particularly of the strategic crossings of the Amur river, are becoming increasingly irksome to the Japanese army in Manchukuo. Other projects to which Japan is objecting are double-tracking of the Trans-Siberian railway to Vladivostok and remodeling of the strong fortifications of that Pacific port.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Madelia—An ice carnival was held here and an ice queen was crowned.

Minneapolis—Zurah Temple is holding its annual indoor circus at the auditorium the week of February 13.

Duluth—After new cold records were set over the state, a south wind brought relief from the frigid weather.

Detroit Lakes—Mrs. Fannie Dey, 96, oldest resident here, died of old age infirmities. Survivors include a daughter living here.

Minneapolis—The new postoffice may not be occupied until late in the spring to permit painting of the interior, Postmaster W. C. Robertson said.

Hastings — Public and parochial schools of Hastings were closed, due to prevalence of scarlet fever. Fifteen cases of the disease and one death have been reported.

International Falls—Striking waitresses here won out in their efforts to obtain a minimum wage of $10 a week and meals and a minimum of eight hours consecutive work.

Minneapolis—Postal authorities confiscated more than 1,000 books of lottery tickets on two horseraces in the British Isles in March, which were addressed to local persons.

Duluth—Minnesota iron mines shipped ore valued at $42,829,000 out of the state in 1934, a gain over the previous year, the report of F. A. Wildes, director of the division of lands and minerals, reveals.

Shakopee—Christ Andreson, 33-year old Minneapolis bank robber, was given a life term in Stillwater prison for participating in the $1,600 holdup of the First State Bank of Newmarket two months ago.

Gonvick—A plank hurtling off a whirling saw struck and killed Thomas Hetlanl, 50 years old. Hetland was working on the skidway at the Berger sawmill and the plank, flying 25 feet into the air, hit him on the head.

Faribault—A sixth victim to perish from the recent extreme cold. Martin Gess, 63 years old, found unconscious near Kenyon after being missing for a night, died at a Faribault hospital from freezing and exposure.

Glenwood—Two persons were burned to death when fire destroyed the L. W. Perkins residence here. Betty Perkins and Martha Kjildahl, the latter a maid, were victims of the blaze which started from a coal stove explosion.

Brainerd—Clad in noisy plaid shirts men of Brainerd on May 15 will begin setting the stage for the Paul Bunyan celebration to be sponsored by the Brainerd Chamber of Commerce. Every male will cease shaving for the event.

Minneapolis—Guy A. Howard, for 22 years in charge of the Minneapolis automobile license bureau for the state, has been removed by Mike Holm, secretary of state. W. L. Roust of Mankato, for 14 years an employe of the secretary of state's office, has been placed in charge of the bureau.

Windom—Cats and a sparrow were blamed for setting Joe Ellsing's barn ablaze. Ellsing set a lighted lantern down in the hay mow where he was working. A sparrow fluttered into the glare and several cats took chase, upsetting the lamp. Ellsing saved his cattle before the structure was destroyed.

Excelsior—If proper tests prove the feasibility of using artesian wells, the restoration of Lake Minnetonka water levels could be accomplished in three years at a total cost of $339,775, according to the report of engineers who completed a year's study of the problem of saving the world famous lake from drying up.

Moose Lake—Five hundred school children are attending classes in churches and public buildings as the result of a fire which wiped out the Moose Lake school with loss estimated at $78,000. The school board hurriedly met following destruction of the building and decided to apply for PWA funds to rebuild as soon as possible.

Albert Lea—The Minnesota SERA announced allocation of $15,000 to finance resettlement of 12 Albert Lea families on farm lands, setting in motion the third state relocation project. Selected by an Albert Lea business men's benefit association, formed to sponsor the relocation project, the 12 families will be settled on small tracts of fertile land near Albert Lea. All have agricultural backgrounds, in addition to various industrial skills.

Walker—Helpless to combat the flames because of a frozen water system, firemen nevertheless rescued the 36 patients of an Indian sanatorium at Onigum, Chippewa village on Leech lake, where fire destroyed the building. Flames from a boiler room explosion trapped inmates of the sanatorium. Patients most seriously ill were taken to the state tuberculosis sanatorium near Walker, while others were placed in the Onigum general hospital and at homes.

Ortonville—Seeking feed aid for drouth stricken farmers, a committee representing the Big Stone county commissioner went to St. Paul to present their plight to the state legislature, and to request aid. Many head of livestock have died from lack of feed in the county. Seventy-five horses, 150 cattle and sheep, and 60 hogs perished. The federal government has allowed farmers a maximum of $25 each per month for feed, but this was held insufficient. Additional aid will be sought.

TRUE GHOST STORIES

By MADAME SCHUMANN-HEINK

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK'S great spirit will not be daunted, just as her great voice still rings forth strong and clear. At the age of seventy, she is again meeting the caprices and demands of a daily song engagement before the public.

"Tell you a ghost story?" she replied in her deep, resonant voice.

"Ach, I will tell you why Schumann-Heink spends Christmas Eve alone.

She rose to her feet. The bare, cold walls of her theater dressing room were flooded with the richness of her warm personality.

"Eight years ago this Christmas Eve I was in Chicago. When I returned to my hotel room, overlooking the lake, night had come. The room was dark. I sat by the window. From my chair I could look out over Michigan avenue into a park beyond. In the park I saw a great Christmas tree. It was beautiful, a giant evergreen, a hundred feet or more. Out of the night it brought me memories of other days when my children were young.

"As I looked at it, I began to pray, and I cried. I prayed to God to take care of my children who could not be with me this night.

"I prayed to him to do just one thing for me this night. To let me see, once again, the faces of my two boys who were gone, of my little Hans who died in my arms; of my dear, sweet August, who served as an officer on a submarine for Germany during the war and whose submarine went down and never was heard from. If he would only let me see those two dear boys—once again.

"As I prayed there came a cold wind against my cheek, just as though some one had opened an outside door. Quick, I wiped away my tears because I thought some one was coming into the room.

"I looked up. Before me were the faces of my boys, my Hans and my August! I stood up, I opened my arms to them, I screamed for joy—and the faces went away. Call this the imagination of a poor old woman, if you will, but I saw my boys! I saw my sweet boys!

"Every year now I will not go out on Christmas Eve. I will not allow anyone to come near my room. I wait, I pray, I hope for the return of those faces. Not since that day, eight years ago, have I seen them. I know, Schumann-Heink knows, that they will come again."

Actor.

"IT WAS with a heavy heart that I had to go to the theater every day to play a part, while my young brother lay desperately ill," related Glenn Hunter, famous portrayer of juvenile roles.

"At one part of the play the whole cast, with the exception of myself, was on the stage. This wait always occurred during a matinee, a few minutes before 4. I dreaded this wait. I did not want to be alone.

"Mary Boland's dressing room was nearest the telephone. I went into this dressing room hoping the phone would ring with a good message for me.

"The theater, off-stage, in the dressing rooms, was strangely quiet, except for the ticking of my watch. I took my watch out of my pocket. It was exactly 4 o'clock. I put it away.

"Then clearly, distinctly, came four slow, long knocks at my door. A pause separated each one. Quickly, I jumped to my feet and opened the door. There was no one in sight. I searched the dim corridor and could find no one. Shivers ran up and down my back. I asked the electricians and the stage hands if they had seen anyone going to or from the dressing room. They had not.

"The cue came for my entrance on the stage. Again I entered into my part.

"When I returned home I found my brother dead. I asked mother what time he died.

"'Four o'clock,' she said."

Earliest Game Laws

The earliest game laws in America probably were the hunting privileges granted in 1629 by the West India Co. to persons starting colonies in New Netherlands (New York), and the provisions regarding the right of hunting in the Massachusetts Bay Colonial Ordinance of 1647 and the New Jersey Concessions Agreement of 1678. The first federal game law was passed in 1832 and is the oldest one on the statute books. It was in force until the admission of Oklahoma as a state in 1907. It prohibited the capture of game in the Indian territory by any persons other than Indians, except for subsistence.—New York World-Telegram.

Matter of Cake

"Thomas, what is the matter with your brother?" asked the mother of the boys.

"He's crying," replied Thomas, "because I'm eating my cake and won't give him any."

"Is his own cake finished?" asked the mother.

"Yes, and he cried while I was eating that, too."

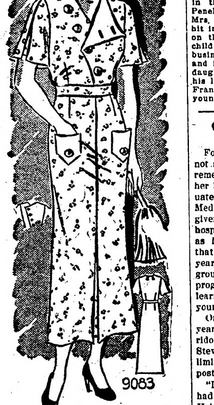
DESIGN HAS ALL THE BEST POINTS OF HOUSE DRESS

PATTERN 9083



Believe it or not, there's a four-point plan of convenience and flattery included in this neatly styled house dress. Let's add them up. First: the bodice may be worn with the contrasting rever, as shown in the larger sketch, or it may button all the way up to a smart point. Second: the sleeves boast little inverted pleats, jaunty to look at and very comfortable when working. Third: the slenderizing line sweeping down the middle front of the frock ends in another inverted pleat to give the slim skirt adequate fullness. And finally, the patch pockets with their important buttons are both useful and chic!

Pattern 9083 may be ordered only in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires 4 yards 36 inch fabric and ¾ yard contrasting.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York, N. Y.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin decides to adopt a baby in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. Ten-year-old Penelope is given into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin. At a baseball game a ball, hit into the bleachers, strikes Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin retires from business, wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for his daughter when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, is a rising young psychiatrist.

For the next four years Lanny did not see her boy, but he wrote her and remembered her at Christmas and on her birthdays. He was an honor graduate from the Leland Stanford Junior Medical school and was immediately given an interneship at the University hospital in San Francisco. Inasmuch as Lanny frequently had patients at that hospital, they met several times a year. Lanny kept her ear to the ground, harkening to reports of his progress from worthwhile sources, and learned that he was regarded as a young doctor of distinct promise.

One day, after he had been two years an interne, they met in the corridor. "I've been wanting to see you, Stevie," Lanny began without any preliminary fencing. "It's time for your postgraduate course in Europe."

"Impossible, Lanny. My father has had a frightful reversal of fortune. He's done a father's full duty by me and I'm not going to graft off him and perhaps sacrifice him in his old age. I'm self-supporting now and even saving a little from my salary. In a few years I shall be able to afford a modest office and go in for general practice."

"You've followed my program thus far and you'll continue until it's finished," Lanny announced. "I'll loan you the money. The five thousand dollars your father gave me has grown to seventy-five hundred dollars—and I've saved two thousand more, so I'm going to bank you, and you shall pay me six per cent on the money you borrow, and secure me by life insurance." She was thoughtful for a few moments. "Well, perhaps three years abroad will benefit you more than four years would an ordinary man. So we'll cut the program to three years. After all, you must have some comforts; you've got to live like a gentleman. You will resign here today and I'll have the money for you tomorrow."

"Oh, Lanny, you dear old sport, I can't do that!"

Thereupon Lanny struck him in a vital spot. Her stern and lonely soul was touched. Not often did she indulge herself in the weakness of tears, but they flooded her eyes now and her breast heaved.

He was always touched at the sight of suffering; the vast underlying sympathy in his nature would never have it otherwise. Abruptly she left him! She knew he would seek her out later, to protest at greater length, to avow himself her eternal debtor for the offer and again decline it.

He called upon her at her lodgings that night—and Lanny won. It was a hard battle, but when Lanny, so to speak, lowered her head and went in to win, usually she succeeded.

Well, she had her way, and when he returned from Europe she had an office ready for him. She would be forty years old on her next birthday, and after eighteen years of the drudgery of private nursing she looked forward to her position in Stephen Burt's office with pleasurable anticipation.

She met him at the ferry depot, and he took her to his heart and kissed her five times—twice on each cheek and once on the lips. "Well, old pal," he said almost immediately, "I'm a specialist. Neurologist and psychiatrist, and you're to be my first patient. I must go over you thoroughly and see what makes you act the way you do."

Success was Stephen's. Modest at first, of course, but of rapid growth, and Lanny knew why. His patients fell in love with him and advertised him to their friends.

In two years Stephen Burt had repaid Lanny with interest; the third year he moved into new, sunny, roomy and beautifully furnished offices, with a waiting room as large as all of his previous offices had been. He joined the best club in town; he joined a country club, and resolutely Lanny drove him out of the office on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons to play golf. She denied him the privilege of naming his own fees because she knew they would be too modest; she kept his free list to a minimum; knowing all his friends, she supervised his social duties; she kept his books and was a very devil of a collector; she wrote all his business letters and signed them for him; she invested his money for him, and since she was no mean psychologist, she could read a woman patient as she would a book. She was his Admirable Crichton, and he rewarded her with his confidence, his affectionate friendship and a perfectly dazzling salary raise each Christmas.

He always kissed her at six o'clock on the twenty-fourth day of December in each year for the five years preceding the late winter afternoon when Mr. Daniel McNamara called in behalf of the strangest patient Lanny's boy had ever been asked to accept.

It had been a long, hard day. Doctor Burt was tired, and a Mrs. Reginald Merton, who was rich and idle, not very intelligent and hence neurasthenic, had been fatiguing him with a recital of her imaginary aches, pains and megrims.

He pressed a button under the desk, tapping out a code message to Lanny, and waited patiently.

He knew she would appear momentarily and say: "I'm sorry Doctor Burt, but Professor Finnegan has just telephoned that you are fifteen minutes late to your engagement to meet the great German savant, Herr Doktor, Uffitz."

He waited three minutes and sent another code message to Lanny, adding the word "Help!" Still Lanny did not appear, so he said with his disarming smile: "Mrs. Merton, the five o'clock whistle has blown, and I can't listen to another word. I've just remembered a most pressing engagement, so now if you do not go at once I shall have to throw you out."

He had her by the arm and out the door before she could think of another symptom. Then he locked the door, put both legs up on the desk and loaded and lighted his pipe, just as the door to his nurse's office opened and Lanny said:

"I'm so sorry, but Professor Finnegan—"

"She's gone. Where did you go, leaving me here to suffer?"

"I was in the waiting room placating an insistent visitor. I told him you had gone for the day, but he flashed some sort of police badge at me, said he wasn't nutty and that his business was private."

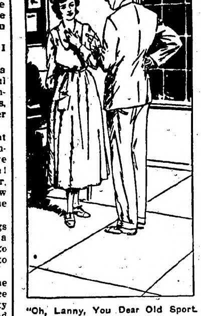
"Whenever you admit a person whose business is private and personal I am called upon for mental and physical effort, sans a fee, Lanny. I'm tired."

"What you need, dearie," said Lanny, "is a nice, long, cool, highball."

"And while you're on the job, get me one, too," a deep voice spoke from the door behind her.

"It's that police person," Lanny cried.

"It is," the police person agreed without malice, "and even if I am a cop, I'm too smart to be fooled by the fibs of any woman. How are you, Doc?"



"Oh, Lanny, You Dear Old Sport. I Can't Do That!"

"Tired," he murmured. "Worn to a razor edge talking sanely to the insane and the semi-sane, the sub-normal and the abnormal. You appear sane, officer. Are you?"

"I'd be afraid to take a bet I am, Doc. I handle my share o' nuts, too, and there's times they make me think I'm bugs instead o' them. My name's Dan McNamara and I'm the chief of police."

"Sit down, Chief. Drag over that armchair." He smiled at Lanny and held up two fingers.

That smile melted her. It always did. For five years she had been trying to bully him, and his smile had always defeated her, for which reason she often had a brainstorm and threatened to resign his service. And she would have done it, too, for she was a forceful woman, only for the fear that he might replace her with a nurse who didn't understand him—a la-de-la young thing, half-baked professionally, who would fall in love with him and make him marry her. He was so kind and sympathetic Lanny knew he would marry her, just to keep her from feeling bad.

"D—n his sympathy," she growled, as she prepared the drinks in an inner room. "That's why he's worked to death. He'll die young—overwork—angina, the young fool! That big, fresh, heavy-footed cop! How dare he force his way in—the big bum! And getting a drink for his dirty work!"

She sniffed and served the highballs. "You're mighty sweet, Lanny," Doctor Burt told her. "Now, run along home."

Lanny did not go. She knew that big moocher of a chief of police would praise such old liquor and his host would offer him a second helping.

"I've got a girl down at Central station," Dan McNamara was saying. "Shoplifting detail picked her up in a department store where she'd pinched a dozen and a half silk stockings. Petit larceny and caught with the goods. I sent a good man around to try to square the case with the department store people, but they insist on pressing charges and that's too bad because she's got a couple of priors against her. Out on probation—suspended sentence, you understand, Doc. And now she'll do two years in the Big House. 'S tough on the girl."

"What's your interest in her, if she's a confirmed thief?"

"Well, maybe she wouldn't be a thief if she'd had the breaks," he defended. "Somebody must have given her a sweet bust on the nose, because her beak's been broke and nothing's left of it but a saddle."

"Is she tough?"

"Is she tough? Doc, she's so tough I know it ain't natural. A girl as tough as her must be looney. But there ain't nothing tough about her eyes or her mouth—and that's where you can always find toughness that's been bred in the bone. There's something about this girl that's different. Doc. I don't know what it is but I know this much: she wasn't always tough. I want you to give her the once over."

"I understand there is a psychologist and psychiatrist — Doctor Blethen — who does all of the medico-legal work for the department, Chief. I wouldn't care to examine the girl except on his invitation."

"Yes, I know. Question of ethics, and while the question is being debated this girl gets hauled into court and takes the rap on the old charge of grand theft. I know Blethen. I've tried him and he says this girl is a natural hoodlum, and mentally and physically healthy. He says she's got more intelligence than any ten girls in Vassar. She must be smart, too, because she told him he was a fool, and I agree with her."

Doctor Burt was silent, for he was intensely ethical and would not criticize a fellow doctor.

"I've heard a lot about you," the chief of police continued. "You're regarded as the best psychiatrist and neurologist in San Francisco. So don't talk to me about the capable Doc Blethen. I want you to look this girl over."

His huge face brightened as he summoned a thought that would bolster up his plea. "She don't cuss me, Doc. I've asked her all about herself, and I'm sure she tells me all she knows, but she don't know anything. She's bound to like you, Doc, and when she likes anybody—now, Doc, I've got a notion you can get her confidence to such an extent you can prong down into her soul and locate the trouble. I hear men like you do things like that nowadays."

Doctor Burt smiled. "Sometimes we uncover complexes or mental reflexes; frequently we do not. And when we have uncovered them we cannot always cure them. You say this girl has a ruined nose? Does it affect her appearance greatly?"

"She's ugly when you look at her the first time, Doc, but after you've talked with her and looked some more the shock sort of wears off. I got a notion that if her nose could be straightened up she'd be a goodlooking girl. And maybe if her mind could be straightened, she'd be a good girl."

"Know anything about her antecedents, her background?"

"I don't know and I can't find out. She won't tell me."

"It may be," Doctor Burt suggested, "that she doesn't know. Has Blethen finished with the case?"

"Yes, sir. He told me not to bother him about her no more."

Doctor Burt indicated his telephone. "Call him up, Chief, and ask him if he has any objection to having me give her an unofficial examination."

McNamara did so. Following a brief conversation, he turned the telephone over to Stephen.

Stephen took the telephone. "Doctor Blethen? Burt speaking. The chief came to my office about that girl he has at the central station. Notwithstanding your report he has asked me, as a personal favor to see the girl. You understand, however—"

"Yes, I understand. Burt, she's a bad lot."

"Something the chief said has mildly aroused my curiosity. If you would care to invite me to discuss her case—understand I have no desire to intrude—"

"I'm through with her, Burt. Help yourself, old man. However, take a tip from me and don't let that fellow McNamara sell himself to you. If you do he'll keep you busy. I doubt if any man on earth can run a criminal down as promptly as McNamara; he has a photographic brain and never forgets a face or a fact; but after he's landed a yegg in his cooler he develops an abnormal yearning to find out what made him act that way. Mac's a softy."

"Exactly. Thank you, Blethen. Still, a blind pig will sometimes find an acorn, and something he said—Good-by."

Lanny entered. "There's a young woman in the waiting room," she announced. "She said to me, 'Where the h—l's that bonehead of a chief gone?'" Lanny looked at Dan McNamara severely over the rims of her spectacles. "Friend of yours?" she queried witheringly.

"Yes," McNamara admitted, "and Doc's new patient. Bring her in and he'll give her the once over."

But Lanny shook her head. "This nut shop is closed for the day," she told him. "Bring her around at one o'clock tomorrow. The doctor has fifteen minutes then."

TO BE CONTINUED.

MAN ONCE FREE FROM DISEASE?

All Bodily Ills Attributed to Contacts.

It is believed that there was no such thing as disease in the earliest ages of man, that is about 10,000 B. C.

It was only when the contacts of village life, commercial routes and the domestication of animals were established that circumstances became favorable for the spread of disease from one person to another and from animals to man.

Man's conception of danger was to meet the saber-toothed tiger with nothing but a club with which to defend himself.

Disease in those times was thought to be the influence of demons or spirits, and to cure disease the spirit must be induced to leave the body.

The disease could be got out quicker by cutting holes or beating a man.

Sometimes nauseous medicines were administered to coax the spirit out of the body, while at other times charms and incantations were used in order to transfer the spirit to another person.

Protection from disease was effected by wearing charms and by making predictions founded upon a study of the stars.

In spite of the passage of 10,000 years we still take nauseating medicines, use charms, depend upon our luck to escape disease, and cut holes in the body in order to eradicate it.

The Egyptians knew more about the prevention of disease and were healthier than any other ancient people.

In the beginning of time religion dictated such medical practice as was carried out, and this led to cleanliness, which, of course, is the first principle of hygiene.

Excellent sewage systems have been found in ancient civilization, and water closets, flushing systems, sedimentation tanks, water systems were present 3000 B. C. Moses was educated along Egyptian lines and his ideas of public health were transmitted to the Jews.

Moses learned from the Egyptians that if the people were to be healthy an inhabited area must be kept free from the accumulations of refuse, the latter being disposed of by burying it in the soil.

The second principle was that of segregation of all those who had an infectious disease, and the third dwelt with personal hygiene, cleanliness of food, and avoidance of contact with those who had an obvious contagious disease.

The ancient Greeks gathered up the existing knowledge and gave it a scientific bent, so that by 600 B. C. a great deal was known about hygiene.

Their greatest contribution was the idea of personal fitness, that children should be trained from infancy to be healthy. On this basis, gymnasiums, hot and cold baths, pure water, and fresh air were available to everyone.

By 300 B. C. cities were laid out with straight streets, with parks, open spaces, and plenty of room for sunlight. Hospitals were built by the Greeks, using hydrotherapy, dieting, and suggestion in the treatment of illnesses.

In ancient Rome the houses were constructed of brick and stone, containing numerous windows and were heated by hot air furnaces, while the hospital system was greatly enlarged.—Detroit News.

Church in Brewery

Men working at a brewery at Halstead, Essex, England, regularly attend services at a church situated in the middle of the brewery.

Services are held every Sunday afternoon so that the employees, who work throughout the week surrounded by barrels and beer, may meet together for spiritual refreshment.

On special occasions, such as harvest festivals and Christmas services, local clergymen assist the brewery men in conducting the services. In their spare time the men keep their unique place of worship spick-and-span and are extremely proud of it.

Glory

True glory is the unanimous approbation of good men, for their praise is not bought with money, and they alone are able to estimate real merit at its proper value.

WHEN YOU TAKE A LAXATIVE

... use a spoon

It isn't what brand of laxative you take that's so important—it's the form. A liquid laxative can be taken in any required amount. If only a little is needed, you need never take a bit too much.

Doctors favor the easily measured liquid laxatives. Instead of any form that does not encourage variation from the fixed dose. A fixed dose may be an overdose for you—or your child.

Always remember this one thing about constipation: the secret of any real relief is reduced dosage.

Give the bowels only as much help as may be needed, and less help as the need grows less. You will find Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin an excellent aid in regulating the bowels. It contains senna and cascara (natural laxatives) and it will clear-up any bilious, sluggish condition without upset. Delightful taste, and pleasant action. Your druggist has it.

Three Simple Steps to Ease a Sore Throat in Three Minutes

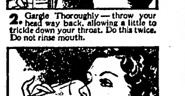
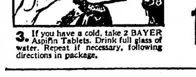
1. Crush and stir 3 BAYER Aspirin Tablets in ⅓ glass of water.



2. Gargle Thoroughly — throw your head way back, allowing a little to trickle down your throat. Do this twice. Do not rinse mouth.



3. If you have a cold, take 2 BAYER Aspirin Tablets. Drink full glass of water. Repeat if necessary, following directions in package.

Modern Scientific Method Wonderfully Easy

REMEMBER PICTURES HERE

Here's a safe, modern and effective way to relieve sore throat. A way that eases the pain, rawness and irritation in as little as two or three minutes. Many doctors advise it and millions are following this way. Try it.

All you do is crush and stir 3 BAYER Aspirin Tablets in ⅓ glass of water and gargle with it twice—as pictured here. (If you have signs of a cold, take BAYER Aspirin and drink plenty of water.)

Get real BAYER Aspirin Tablets for this purpose. They disintegrate quickly and completely, making a gargle without irritating particles.

BAYER Aspirin prices have been decisively reduced, so there's no point now in accepting other than the real Bayer article you want.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN The Safety Man

The safety of a community rests with the officials of that community. Regulations, safe practices and safety campaigns should be inaugrated. Do not have a safety campaign with intense zeal and interest for a few weeks, and then let it die. Go slow but make progress.

Enlist the school officials to make safer conditions for the children.

Enlist the Boy Scouts for their help in the community.

Enlist the fire department for their services in teaching fire prevention.

Enlist the police force.

Enlist the civic clubs, mens' societies, the American Legion, Veterans Organizations, etc.

Enlist industry and its executives.

1 Cent Gas Tax Not Enough

An increase of one cent a gallon in the state gasoline tax would increase state highway revenues by $2,200,000 a year, and would provide $1,100,000 a year for distribution to counties for use on county aid roads, says a highway department bulletin.

On the other hand, restoration of the automobile license fees to the 1932 normal level would provide probably more than $3,500,000 for the trunk system.

An increase of about $3,800,000 in annual revenues of the highway department is needed if Minnesota's allotment of federal aid for this year and next is to be matched, the department estimates. A cent increase in the gas tax would therefore fall about $1,600,000 short of meeting federal aid requirements. The federal government has offered Minnesota nearly $7,000,000 for a highway employment program this year and next, provided Minnesota puts up an equal amount.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN The Safety Man

If all the persons who died because of reckless driving were laid end to end, they would still be very dead.

That is a fact. So is this: Ninety per cent of all motor accidents can be charged up to bad judgement, carelessness, and ignorance. Many subdivisions can be made from these three headings, but the answer will be the same.

You cannot put the blame on the car. It is a mass of steel. It needs motive power. It requires a driver to start and steer it. It will go where directed. It will hit what it is directed at. It never leaves the curb or goes through a stop light of its own accord. It is too dumb for that. But, put a dumb driver in the seat and "mischief thou art afoot."

Think, think, then proceed.

State-Wide Game Survey

Many townships in Marshall county are included in a statewide survey of wild life that is new being conducted by the Division of Game and Fish of the Minnesota Department of Conservation. Walter Quist, state game warden located at Thief River Falls, is in direct charge of survey work in this county.

Completion of the survey will result in an inventory of 43 species of upland game, big and small game and furbearers in each of the 2,437 townships or part townships in the state, Ralph T. King of the state university, in charge of the survey, announced. The survey was authorized by the Minnesota Conservation Commission. E. V. Willard, Commissioner of Conservation, Erling Swenson and Charles McFarlane, director and deputy director, respectively, of the Division of Game and Fish, are keeping in close touch with the work.

Status of each wild life species will be recorded with the township as a unit. Data will include information relative to range boundaries, centers of distribution, blank areas, and will aid in location and size of game refuges, opening and closing of hunting areas, and in extending ranges into unproductive sections. Shifting of wild life population will be better understood.

"This survey will be the initial step necessary in any scientifically sound game management program which cannot be undertaken without first determining what we have, where it is located and its present condition," Mr. King said.

ADS. WILL TELL BANKERS' STORY

American Bankers Association President Announces Move to Stimulate Newspaper Advertising

NEW YORK.—Plans for stimulating wider use of informative newspaper advertising by banks in promoting public understanding and confidence in regard to existing banking conditions and methods have been announced by R. S. Hecht, President of the American Bankers Association, as a part of his organization's activities in aid of business recovery.

A general groundwork was prepared through a nationwide survey of advertising by banks relative to their willingness to extend justifiable loans to industry and trade. This, he said, revealed that a large number in all parts of the country are pursuing aggressive policies along this line and encouraging their customers to develop forward-looking business plans. "It is our aim to aid in fostering this constructive attitude wherever possible," he said.

The Theme of New Advertising

The association's Advertising Department, under the direct supervision of the general executive officers, has prepared, at the headquarters in New York City, an informative advertising series for the use of member banks in the association to aid them in developing in their own communities better general public understanding regarding banking, Mr. Hecht said.

"The underlying theme of this advertising is that sound banking is based on helpful human relations and that it has a unity of interest with the people of its community which binds them together with a common purpose," he said.

"We are confident that if a clear understanding of this is brought home to the people in all our banking communities, it will go far in restoring the public confidence which good banking deserves. A bank in which people deservedly believe is doubly safe. It is to the public interest for the people to have confidence in their banks.

The Place of Advertising

"We feel that bank advertising has a special public duty to perform in this connection under existing conditions. The copy which will be supplied in the service we have developed will not only aid the individual bank in promoting the use of its own facilities but is also aimed to bring about with the aid of newspaper advertising a clearer public viewpoint regarding the essential part it occupies in the life of its community."

Mr. Hecht emphasized in regard to the new advertising facilities being offered to the members of the association that they are not a profit making venture and that there is no intention to disturb existing advertising arrangements, the idea being that these institutional services shall supplement rather than replace present plans, or that they will give assistance to member banks now lacking satisfactory arrangements.

MANY BANKS LONG LIVED

In the United States—
168 Banks over 100 years old.
2,472 Banks over 50 years old.
10,391 Banks over 25 years old.

There are in the United States 168 banks that have been in continuous existence for more than one hundred years. There are 2,472 banks over fifty years old, while 64% of all the banks in this country, or 10,391, are twenty-five years old or older.

In other words, practically two-thirds of the banks in this country have come through several successive periods of depression and panic, including 1907, 1914, 1920 and 1929-33.

The Oldest Bank

The oldest bank in the country, which is in Boston, was chartered February 17, 1784.

In the 64% of banks that are twenty-five years old or older is lodged a major portion of the banking resources of the nation. In commenting recently upon the stability of a great majority of the banks in the United States, Dr. Harold Stonier, Educational Director of the American Bankers Association, said:

"The fact that we have so many banks that have been in existence a long period of years is an eloquent tribute to the genius of American managerial ability, for no other country has experienced such wild gambling eras and resultant periods of business stagnation as those through which our country has passed at frequent intervals during the past century."

Hilmer Lunke and family of Thief River Falls visited at the Ole Lunke home Sunday.

Annual Driver Fee Asked

Annual payment of motor vehicle drivers license fees and the licensing of real estate brokers and salesmen under a regulatory state board are sought in two of the 28 new measures introduced in the Minnesota house Monday.

Old-age pensions of $45 monthly for eligibles 65 years old, are proposed in a bill by Representative Harold Barker of Elbow Lake, containing the same provisions as the measure under consideration in the senate.

The drivers license measure, introduced by Rep. Warren Hastings of Two Harbors, chairman of the house committee on highways, would amend the present law by making the 25 cent fee payable each year. The present law does not fix a limit for duration of the license.

The revised measure excempts chauffeurs, members of the federal military and naval forces, highway workers and non-residents over 16 year old.

Rep. W. K. Nissen of Winona seeks to assist realtors in maintaining high standards of practice in his bill proposing a state real estate brokers board of three members to be appointed by the governor. The board would require brokers and salesmen to be licensed and prohibit them from transactions through unlicensed operators. Violation would be misdemeanors punishable by fines of from $25 to $250 or jail imprisonment of from 10 to 60 days.

HOW ONE FARMER HELPED HIMSELF

A farmer accustomed to keeping records found that it cost $10.50 to produce an acre of corn. His average yield was 33 bushels, selling for 50 cents per bushel. On this basis he was producing without either profit or loss.

A study of his costs indicated means by which the yields might be increased without proportional expenses. By making use of facts discovered at the Experiment Stations, the farmer secured an increased yield of four and one-half bushels per acre (37½ bushels, instead of 33). By increasing the yield and holding down expenses, this farmer was able to make a profit of six cents per bushel.

Some Stew

If you have people with big appetites to cook for—and not much time to prepare things, don't get in a stew. Stay out of it. You can do better on the outside, just stirring it occasionally, for it is a simple matter if you have the proper canned ingredients. Here are some excellent stews for cold days:

With Dumplings Or With Rice

Beef Stew with Dumplings: Saute gently twelve small onions in two tablespoons of drippings for a few minutes. Add two large potatoes cut in chunks and saute a few minutes longer. Add two cups boiling water, two teaspoons salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper and two teaspoons kitchen bouquet. Cook until the potatoes and onions are almost tender. Add two cups of canned tomatoes and the contents of a 12-ounce can of roast beef in large pieces. Mix two tablespoons flour with two tablespoons cold water and add, a little at a time, to thicken the stew. Cook for about five minutes. Then drop on top of the stew, soft baking-powder biscuit dough which has been made with shortening. Cover tightly and steam for twelve minutes. This serves six persons.

Chicken and Mushroom Stew with Rice: Saute mushrooms from two 8-ounce cans (reserving the liquor) in four tablespoons of butter for five minutes. Melt two tablespoons of butter, add two tablespoons chopped onion and saute for three minutes. Then add one tablespoon curry powder and four tablespoons flour. Stir until smooth. Add the mushroom liquor slowly, then add two cans milk, stirring constantly until creamy and thick. Add one teaspoon lemon juice and season to taste with salt. Add to the mushrooms, and then add the chicken from a 12-ounce can. Stew the mixture very gently for five to ten minutes. Pour out onto a platter and surround with a border of fluffy boiled rice. This serves six persons liberally.

Now Science Explains Why So Many People Past 40

Feel That They're Slipping Losing Their "Grip" on Things

Many people 'round 40 think they're "growing old." They feel tired a lot . . . "weak." Have headaches, dizziness, stomach upsets.

Well, scientists say the cause of all this, in a great many cases, is simply an acid condition of the stomach. Nothing more.

All you have to do is to neutralize the excess stomach acidity.

When you have one of these acid stomach upsets, take Phillips' Milk of Magnesia after meals and before going to bed. That's all!

Try this. Soon you'll feel like another person! Take either the familiar liquid "PHILLIPS'" or the convenient new Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets.

ALSO IN TABLET FORM: Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets are now on sale at all drug stores everywhere. Each tiny tablet is the equivalent of a teaspoonful of Genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, which he names "Penelope," in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. Ten-year-old Penelope is given into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin. At a baseball game a ball strikes Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin retires from business, wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for his daughter when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt is a rising young psychiatrist. He is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" was in part responsible.

—4—

"Lanny!" Stephen reproved her. Then to Dan McNamara: "Do you mean to tell me you left her out there unguarded? How would you explain her escape—if she had chosen to disappear?"

"I don't think she'd duck, Doc. But even if she tried it, I got a plain clothes man on guard."

"Please bring the patient in, Lanny," Stephen pleaded. "And then you might—" he glanced eloquently at their empty glasses. Lanny glared at him so he smiled—and she ceased to glare. But she went on mumbling.

Dan McNamara shook his head sagely. "Nothing wrong with that woman's thinking apparatus," he informed Stephen.

And then Lanny ushered the new patient in. She paused just inside the door, swept the room with a slow glance and permitted her gaze to come to rest on Stephen Burt, who rose and bowed to her. Instantly the frozen hostility in her glance faded and she smiled. "Reminds me of a gargoyle," Stephen reflected.

"Meet my friend, Dr. Stephen Burt, Nance," Dan McNamara introduced her airily. "Doc, this is Nance Belden, alias Dorothy Case, alias Fay Barham, alias Elizabeth Vernon."

Stephen said politely that he was delighted to make her acquaintance, and Nance replied with acrid directness, "Why?" Whereat Stephen Burt laughed and set a chair for her. Nance plumped herself down in it with a weary sigh, jerked off her jaunty hat and threw it on Stephen's desk. "All right, Steve. Shoot! What's the idea of the big convention? Another fishing expedition?"

"Now, Nance," Dan McNamara soothed her, "you cut that out. You're not talking to Doc Blethen. Doc Burt's a gentleman."

Nance remembered her manners. "My error," she apologized.

From the doorway leading into the waiting room, Lanny gazed upon the girl with frank disapproval. Over Nance's shoulder she caught Stephen's eye and shook her head sorrowfully.

"The old girl's shocked!" Nance laughed softly without looking around, while Lanny disappeared.

"How do you know, Miss Belden?" Stephen inquired.

"Mirror," and Nance Belden pointed.

"Close your eyes," Stephen commended, "and describe this room to me."

"All right. There are two empty highball glasses on the telephone stand back of you." She sniffed. "Bourbon. The stand's three feet high and the telephone book is in the compartment under the top of the stand. The telephone is one of those combination receiver-mouthpiece things like they use in English stage scenes, and the telephone cord is white. The desk is solid walnut, I think, flat-topped and clean. You have a bronze combination inkwell, pen-rack, and pin-tray. There is a blue crayon pencil and a red crayon pencil and a black, gold-banded fountain pen on the pen rack. The fountain pen has green ink in it. I know because on the calendar pad on the desk, which is opened at November 23—although this is the 24th—you've written something with the pen very recently. You're sitting in a walnut swivel chair, brown leather upholstered, and a high back up to your shoulder tops. The Chief's chair is an over-stuffed rocker, and if you give him another drink he'll fall asleep in it. On the wall back of you, there is a framed diploma in Latin, issued to Stephen John Burt by Leland Stanford Junior University Medical school, and about four feet from it is the Oath of Hippocrates in a black frame, like the diploma. The print is old English and done in black and red. Across the room, in back of the chief, is a walnut bookcase, built in detachable tiers, and there's a white washstand in the corner close by it. The rug is beige colored and Chinese, and on the wall in back of me, where you can look at it readily, is a framed photograph of your father. It must be a photograph of your father because he looks a great deal like you. In back of me a door leads into the old lady's den and"—here Nance opened her handbag, took out a small mirror, held it up and opened her eyes an instant—"yes, I thought so. That door is ajar and the old lady is listening to every word I say.

"Now, I'll describe you. You're a darling. You're tall and you haven't started to grow a tummy yet. You're about thirty-two or three years old, your hair is dark brown and your eyes dark blue, and you have nice teeth, and they show when you smile. You have nice hands and your nails were manicured this morning, but you have a dirty spot on the finger-nail of your right index finger—no, it isn't dirt. It's iodine. Pardon! My error. Do I win first prize, Doc?"

"In a walk, Miss Belden. You are absolutely the most amazing person I have ever examined. You are one in a million—one of those rare persons who not only see everything at a glance but take a mental photograph of it. And remember it. Yes, you win a prize."

"I'll have a highball with you boys," said Miss Belden composedly.

"You'll not, you little—this and that," Lanny countered from behind the door. "The very idea!"

"Then the party breaks up here and now," Miss Belden informed Stephen.

"Lanny," Stephen called. "I hope you aren't forgetting the laws of hospitality."

"Come on, kid," the girl entreated Lanny. "Buy me one and I'll get the chief to do something nice for you in return."

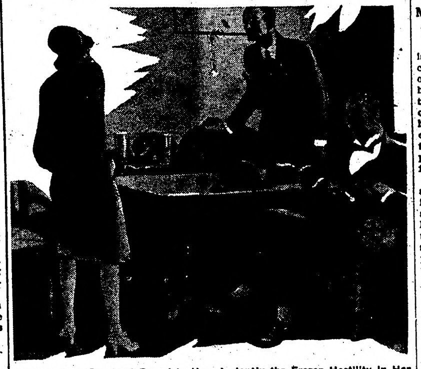
"What influence has the likes of you with the chief of police?" Lanny was emerging with two highballs.

"Do you drive a car, Miss Lanning?"

Nance Belden whistled sharply to Dan McNamara.

"Get out your card, Dan. Here's the fountain pen. Write as I dictate. Ready: 'To all traffic officers: The bearer, Miss Rebecca Lanning, has the freedom of the city. She has my authority to park where she pleases and she shall not be tagged. She cannot be arrested for anything except murder and even then she must not ride in the wagon. Signed: Dan McNamara, Chief of Police.'"

Dan McNamara obeyed, Nance Belden viseed the card, blotted it and handed it to Lanny. "Now, you tell 'em all who's kind to you, Rebecca. I'm some kid, am I not? You bet I'm some kid. Dan knows it and your boss knows it and if, by now, you don't know it, I hope Steve fires you."



Stephen Burt Rose and Bowed to Her. Instantly the Frozen Hostility in Her Glance Faded, and She Smiled.

"You are some kid. I admit it. Thank you, dear. You shall have a highball."

"Have one yourself," Nance suggested grandly. "Let's all be sociable, eh. Steve?"

"Miss Belden—" Steve began.

"Call me Nance," the strange young creature interrupted. "Why all the formality?"

"Have you any objection, Nance, to telling me your real name?"

"None at all. I don't know my real name."

"Who were your parents?"

"I don't know."

"Why did you steal the silk stockings?"

Nance threw back her head and laughed. "Why you silly, I had runs in every pair I owned."

"Poor dear!" Lanny was speaking. Her hand strayed over the girl's jet black, shiny bob; her fingers sought a shell-like ear and tugged it gently.

Nance looked up at the nurse, surprise and friendliness shining in her eyes.

"Why, you're sweet, aren't you? Why, you darling!" And she lifted her face for Lanny to kiss. Lanny kissed her. Trust Lanny for that.

"It's too late to go further tonight, Dan." Lanny said. "Bring her in at nine tomorrow morning."

"Can't, Lanny." With a bound the excellent McNamara had landed beside Lanny in the garden of friendship, as one might say. "She's due in the police court at nine o'clock for sentence. Right away she'll be waltzed over to the Superior court to the judge that gave her a suspended sentence two years ago. She hasn't made good, so he'll sign the commitment papers, and it'll be some time before we see our Nancy again."

"Has she an attorney?"

"The public defender, that's all."

Lanny looked at Stephen. Stephen looked at Lanny. Both nodded.

"Get the best in town, Dan," Lanny urged the chief. "Doctor Burt will appear in court and plead for a stay of sentence. We'll tell that judge a few things about criminal psychology and just why it would be frightful social injustice to put this girl in San Quentin."

She turned to Nance Belden, drew the girl's face down on her breast and patted the rouged cheek. "See you tomorrow, dearie," she promised. "Be a good girl now and be nice to Dan McNamara, because he's one of the best friends you'll ever have."

"Kiss me again, please," Nance whispered. And when Lanny had complied, the girl came around the desk to Stephen Burt. "I want you to kiss me, too," she said. "You're sweet—thank you a lot."

When Dan McNamara and his prisoner had departed, Lanny and Stephen looked at each other throughout a long silence, which Lanny was first to break.

"That girl's clean, Stevie. Not a touch of the slattern about her. She could pass the Binet intelligence test so fast she'd meet it on her way back. And she isn't tough at all. She's only trying to be, and she finds it uphill work."

"Defense mechanism largely," he said. "Better go home, Lanny. Get a good night's sleep and try to forget what a sad world we live in."

"It'd be a d—d sight sadder if you didn't live in it," she snapped.

Under stress of emotion, Lanny, as she grew older, occasionally indulged herself in a little mild profanity. Stephen didn't mind. He knew she was disillusioned, middle-aged in point of years, but old with the wisdom and sadness of the world, as only a doctor or a trained nurse can be; that she had earned her privileges. As a surgical nurse she had been sworn at by doctors whose nerves grew taut as piano wires, during a dangerous operation, and she had learned to give as good as she received—wherefore the men of her world respected her and liked her, for her courage and efficiency.

"See to it that you're on hand in court tomorrow morning, Stevie, with a sweet line of scientific argument to bewilder that judge and the district attorney," she charged a little later. "Good night, my dear boy."

Dear old Lanny! Once more had occurred to her the miracle of love. A stranger—a bit of flotsam and jetsam on the muddy sea of life—had looked behind her brusque, businesslike, belligerent exterior and found the great warm heart that yearned so for affection and understanding. Hers was a strange nature. She was so strong, and so possessed of the urge to share her strength with those she loved, particularly if they evinced any affection for her, that she was singularly democratic in her choice of beneficiary. Nance Belden, like Stephen Burt, had appealed to her thwarted mother love, and nothing that the girl had been, nothing she might ever be, would alter Lanny's opinion, formed on an instant's notice, that the girl was an angel. A dark angel, perchance, and like Lucifer, fallen from high place, but—an angel nevertheless.

* * * * * * *

The presence of Chief of Police Daniel McNamara cleared a lane through the corridor of the Hall of Justice, in which the police courts of San Francisco are located.

He paused before a courtroom door. "Nance is in there," he told Stephen. "I'll not go in with you. I'd have a week of rotten publicity in all the papers if I appeared to have any special interest in the case. Her lawyer's name is Tyrrell and he'll call you as an expert witness."

Still Hope for Us

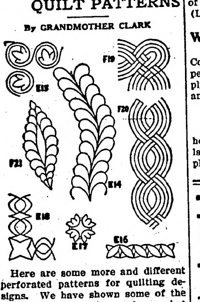
Honesty is more prevalent than many cynics suppose. A psychologist recently picked the names of a hundred men and women in many walks of life from a telephone directory and sent each a $1 bill in a letter, stating that it was a refund of an overpayment on a previous bill. Within a few days, 63 of them had returned the money with a note saying he had made a mistake.—Collier's Weekly.

Aquatic Snails

Aquatic snails are of two forms, according as they live in quiet, weedy marshes or in the depths of our lakes and rivers. The first mentioned need only thin, hornlike shells, while the river-snails require thick and strong coats of limy texture in order to withstand the rough treatment swift currents may give them, and protection against their peculiar enemies.

NEW ASSORTMENT IN PERFORATED QUILT PATTERNS

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



Here are some more and different perforated patterns for quilting designs. We have shown some of the other patterns in these columns, but realizing how interested quilters are in obtaining perforated patterns of as many designs as possible, know that these will be welcomed by them. The transfer of the design is so easy, with stamping powder, that once used, you will want no other kind, unless we haven't the design you want.

The above assortment consists of the following:

E-14 Feather Border 6 inch, E-15 Tulip Border and Corner 3 inches, E-16 Border 1⅓ inches, E-17 Tulip Motif 3 inches, E-18 Border and Corner 2⅓ inches, F-19 Scroll-Corner 4⅓ inches, F-20 Scroll Border 4⅓ inches, F-21 Feather Border Motif 4 inches.

This package No. 33C contains the above eight patterns already perforated on bond paper and good for many stampings, also some blue stamping powder and instructions.

If you want to do neater quilting, send 15c for this package No. 33C to our Quilt department and receive this by mail postpaid.

Mantilla Common Form of Headgear in Spain

The mantilla is so thoroughly Spanish that it has not been able to keep clear of politics. When King Amadeo of Savoy took the throne in 1870, and he and his queen received hostile treatment as strangers, the women of the aristocracy are reported to have ostentatiously avoided the use of hats and to have worn the mantilla on all occasions in order to emphasize their repudiation of things foreign.

Even today in some parts of Spain a woman would be looked at askance if she went to mass wearing a hat, and might quite easily be refused holy communion. At the same time, the hat for women is regarded as a sign of worldly prosperity, and the phrase "senorita de sombrero" (girl with a hat) is often used to denote that the person in question is not of the working class.

The making of hats for women has always been a restricted business in Spain, and now that Spanish men have suddenly adopted the hatless fashion the phrase "as mad as a hatter" has acquired topical relevance. Indeed, six workers in the hat industry visited the minister of industry and commerce, petitioning him to introduce a law obliging all Spaniards to wear hats when outdoors. Alas for their hopes—the minister of industry and commerce never wears a hat himself, except when official ceremony requires it.

Unique English Hotel

The first all-glass hotel ever constructed in this country has been opened, near Doncaster. Designed on modern lines, even the chimney pots are made of glass. It has a flat roof and the exterior of the building is faced with shell-pink and turquoise-blue glass with a base of black. Floors, walls, table tops—all are made of glass. A portrayal of Doncaster races, exquisitely etched into the glass, is a feature of the lounge.—Pearson's Weekly (London).

The "liquid test" . . . It ENDS bowel worries for many people

This is a test that tells you whether the system needs a cathartic change. If you have constant sluggish spells or bilious attacks, and laxatives seem to make things worse, it would be wise to try this:

Stop all use of any laxative that does not encourage variation from a "fixed dose" (which may be entirely too large a dose for your individual need). Use instead, a liquid laxative that you can measure and regulate as to dose. As necessary to repeat, take smaller doses, less and less often, until the bowels are moving without any help at all.

Doctors use liquid laxatives, and a properly prepared liquid laxative, containing natural laxative agents like senna and cascara is a joy and a comfort; a real help in establishing regularity. Ask your doctor about this! (Doctors use liquid laxatives.) You can get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is a most dependable liquid laxative, at any drug store.

ANGLO-FRENCH PLAN WOULD RESTORE EQUALITY TO GERMAN REICH.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

CONTINENTAL chancelleries turned their attention toward a new plan designed to restore Germany to complete equality among European nations and to strengthen the shaky foundations of peace, as conversations ended between Pierre Laval, French foreign minister, and Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary. Germany will be offered a promise of repeal of the military clauses of the treaty of Versailles in return for re-entering the League of Nations. Such a concession would seem a victory for Hitler's campaign to restore Germany to its place as a sovereign power in Europe.

Pierre Laval

Another proposal arising from the negotiations greatly aids France's campaign for security. Regional defense pacts to provide the nations participating with reciprocal assistance in repelling an unprovoked air attack are part of the plan. France and Great Britain are willing to enter into such a series of pacts, and suggest that other European nations be invited to join. This signifies that either nation must rush planes to the aid of the other in the event of attack from the air. The pact will undoubtedly be concluded between Great Britain and France, no matter what action the other nations take, although no formal announcement has been made.

Some European diplomats are not at all certain that Germany and Poland can be persuaded to change the unreceptive attitude they have so far manifested toward suggestions for their participation in an "eastern Locarno." Germany may be so strongly rearmed by this time that she will not be concerned whether her armaments are legalized.

This, however, is only speculation. Dispatches from Germany have indicated the reich's willingness to engage in any conversations proposed by the Franco-British formula, but she must first be assured of complete equality of status. Hitler has previously hinted that Germany would return to the League of Nations when full equality is accorded, and there is some possibility that the reich will participate in mutual aerial assistance against an air aggressor since this would legalize an air fighting force.

ALMOST unnoticed among the spectacular issues of the day, yet of momentous importance, the case of the United States against Belcher will be set for hearing by the Supreme court within a few days. This case opens up discussion on the constitutionality of the heart of the entire NRA experiment—the power of the federal government to regulate wages and working hours through codes.

Upon this refusal of a small Alabama sawmill operator to comply with the code hangs the entire fate of the NRA, for if the government loses there will be nothing left of NRA except an empty statement of desirable business ethics. If the government cannot control wages and hours in the production of goods intended for interstate commerce, there is a strong likelihood that the course of legislation to extend the NRA beyond June 16 will be strongly affected. Other cases now pending before the court touch upon certain portions of the vital question, but this case goes straight to the basic power of the recovery act. It affords a clear-cut determination of the fundamental issues, because there is no dispute as to facts, no technicalities of law upon which the issue can be avoided. The case comes almost as an original case, since the attorney general took advantage of legal machinery permitting an appeal directly to the Supreme court from the decision of a federal District court without recourse to a Court of Appeals.

What the government's line of defense will be is not known. The case involves all the constitutional objections which might be raised against the recovery act. Decisions of the court in the recent oil cases did not touch upon the constitutionality of the main body of the act, but involved only a special section.

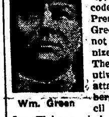
SENATOR BORAH of Idaho, always sternly opposed to action that might lead the United States into foreign entanglements, has surprisingly come forward with a demand that congress investigate the alleged religious persecutions in Mexico and persuade our neighbors to the south to cease them. The excuse for such proposed meddling is that some citizens of the United States may be among the "victims." Through its representatives in Washington the Mexican government calmly denies there is any religious persecution down there, and says all who obey the laws are permitted to worship as they please. If the Borah resolution carries, Mexico may well tell the United States to mind its own business. Representative Fish of New York follows Borah's lead by introducing in the house a resolution calling upon the President to take diplomatic steps toward abatement of what he declares is growing communism in Mexico. He said the communistic trend was directly connected with the alleged religious persecutions, and that entrenchment of communism in Mexico would seriously affect the United States.

SENATOR LONG reopened the hearing concerning the "murder plot" which he says was formed to do away with him, and produced some remarkable testimony. George Davis, a former deputy sheriff of East Baton Rouge parish, swore that he and Fred Parker, another former deputy, hatched the plot and made several attempts to shoot the Kingfish with rifles, failing because they were always too closely watched by Huey's guards. Parker refused to answer questions on constitutional grounds, as did Fred O'Rourke, whom the senator called the chief agent of the Standard Oil Company of Louisiana in the recent armed revolt against his dictatorship. Probably because he wanted to hurry back to Washington, the senator then postponed the hearing indefinitely.

THREE million pounds of steel in the form of a huge gate was slowly lowered into place at the Boulder dam, the great Colorado river was placed under control, and there came into being a new lake which will eventually be the largest ever made by man. In two or three years it will extend back 115 miles from the dam. By June 1 next it will contain about 3,000,000 acre feet of water or one-tenth of its capacity. Only one of the diversion tunnels remains open. It is on the Nevada side and through it will be permitted to flow only enough water to meet the needs of irrigation in the Imperial valley of California.

The big gate just lowered closed tunnel No. 4, which will also be blocked by an immense concrete plug which is now being constructed. The purpose of this "cork" is to form a block half way down the tunnel at the point where another incline tunnel drops from the Arizona spillway that will permit any waters about the dam's level to flow by the spillway.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT renewed the automobile code, with two changes designed to stabilize employment; but the American Federation of Labor, growing daily more dissatisfied with the government's policy, denounced the code extension, and President William Green said: "We will not accept it, recognize nor yield to it." The federation's executive council bitterly attacked Donald Richberg, emergency council director, and Dr. Leo Wolman, chairman of the automobile labor board, asserting they are hostile to the American Federation of Labor. Wolman's board not long ago conducted elections in the Detroit area which revealed that less than 10 per cent of the employees were affiliated with the federation, and presumably for this reason Green and his aids were not consulted in the matter of renewal of the code. President Roosevelt had nothing to say for publication except that he was fully informed concerning the federation's attitude.



Wm. Green

Extension of the code was welcomed by the Automobile Manufacturers' association, its officers declaring there would be steadier work in their factories and that winter unemployment would be greatly reduced. The changes in the code call for the introduction of new models during a 60-day period before or after October 1, and pay and a half for overtime work.

AFTER less than a month in office Gov. Thomas H. Moodie was ousted by the North Dakota Supreme court. The court held Moodie ineligible on the ground that he had voted, and thereby established residence, in Minnesota in 1930. The constitutional provision requires candidates for governor to have lived in the state five consecutive years before election. His successor, Lieut. Gov. Walter H. Welford, will be the fourth governor in seven months. Last June the State Supreme court ordered the removal of William Langer, who had just been convicted of conspiracy to solicit political contributions from federal relief workers.

THE drama that characterized the Hauptmann trial during the first few days is mostly gone, and the case has sunk to the level of the usual legal wrangle. Efforts of the defense to establish an alibi for the ex-carpenter have been only partially successful, and attempts to cast suspicion on Violet Sharpe, Morrow maid who committed suicide, Isidor Fisch, Hauptmann's dead partner, and others have not been particularly impressive. The defense has introduced handwriting experts who have testified that Hauptmann did not write the ransom notes. Even the jury appears to be having difficulty in concentrating on the case. Many predictions are being made that the case will result in a hung jury. Those, however, are only guesses and may be taken for exactly what they are worth.

ORGANIZED labor in America now gives its full support to the international labor organization in Geneva. It was officially announced in the Swiss city that President William Green of the American Federation of Labor, will be the American member of the body. Leon Jouhaux, French labor leader, in a speech at Geneva, expressed the joy of labor representatives of all countries at the co-operation of American labor.

BLOND STANDARD OF BEAUTY RATED ABOVE BRUNETTE

The beauty standard of the blonde is higher than that of the brunette, according to Dr. Charles F. Pabst, chief dermatologist of the Greenpoint hospital, Brooklyn.

"The olive skin of a brunette is not easily marred by a mild inflammation or a small eruption," he said, "but the slightest irritation or blemish is quickly noticed on the fair skin of a blonde, due to her coloring, which accentuates any skin disorder. Therefore, the beauty standard of a blonde is higher than that of a brunette."

Discussing the relationship between a person's skin and personality, Doctor Pabst said that a "peaches and cream complexion is seldom a blessing," and that acne, or pimples, "is nature's check-rein on the spirit of unbridled youth."

"The texture of the skin is chiefly dependent upon the age of the individual. The school girl complexion belongs only to the school girl. It is as foolish for the matron to attempt to regain her girlhood skin as to reappear in pigtails and pinafore. The flushed appearance of the peaches and cream complexion is only too often the sign of the beginning of an inflammation of the skin, or the blush—not of sweet sixteen—but of a feverish condition.

"Seventy-five per cent of the cases of acne occur between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five. It is truly the bane of youth, and young people afflicted with pimples deserve sympathy, for they suffer great humiliation and embarrassment.

"It seems strange that a disfiguring eruption like acne should appear at the time of life when the personal appearance means so much. Perhaps it is nature's check-rein on unbridled youth—an injunction handed down by nature, restraining vain youth from too frequently overstepping the bounds of convention."

Scientists Find Fast Way to Relieve a Cold

Ache and Discomfort Eased Almost Instantly Now

1. Take 2 BAYER Aspirin Tablets. Make sure you get the BAYER Tablets you ask for.
2. Drink a full glass of water. Repeat treatment in 2 hours.
3. If throat is sore, crush and stir 3 BAYER Aspirin Tablets in a third of a glass of water. Gargle twice. This eases throat soreness almost instantly.

NOTE "DIRECTIONS PICTURES"

The simple method pictured here is the way many doctors now treat colds and the aches and pains colds bring with them!

It is recognized as a safe, sure, QUICK way. For it will relieve an ordinary cold almost as fast as you caught it.

Ask your doctor about this. And when you buy, be sure that you get the real BAYER Aspirin Tablets. They dissolve (disintegrate) almost instantly. And thus work almost instantly when you take them. And for a gargle, Genuine Bayer Aspirin Tablets disintegrate with speed and completeness, leaving no irritating particles or grittiness.

BAYER Aspirin prices have been decisively reduced on all sizes, so there's no point now in accepting other than the real Bayer article you want.

Recommend Closed Season

The Minnesota Conservation Commission has gone on record as again favoring a closed season during 1935 on all species of wild duck. Through this action Minnesota again takes the lead in conservation endeavor among the states of the Union, E. V. Willard, Commissioner of Conservation pointed out.

Last summer the Commission wired Federal authorities asking for a closed season. Action taken for this year only reiterates the former stand taken.

It is hoped that the United States Bureau of Biological Survey will see fit to close all duck shooting this year so that depleted wild duck species will be given a chance to regain a foothold and avoid absolute extinction. Mr. Willard said, "If such action is imposible then we recommend that staggered seasons which were in vogue last season be abolished".

Stockholders Had Meeting

The stockholders of the Farmers' Cooperative Creamery held their 28th annual meeting here on Thursday of last week. A good sized crowd that filled all the sitting room in the Community Hall was in attendance.

J. P. Augustine, chairman of the board of directors, presided.

J. P. Augustine and O. H. Nohre were reelected to the board of directors out of a crew of five that were nominated.

Many questions of interest to the creamery patrons were discussed and explained.

The books this year were audited by the Cooperative Auditing Service, Wadena, Minnesota, and F. H. Kaiser, the auditor who footed the books was here and explained the annual statement to patrons.

C. M. Pesek, state food inspector, was here and gave a talk on the new cream grading law that the legislature is trying hard to get thru at this session. All the farmers at the meeting went on record as favoring the new cream grading law.

B. J. Ommodt, fieldman for the creameries in this district was also here and he accredited Mr. Larson, local buttermaker, as being a first class operator at the creamery.

In spite of the drought that we had last summer the local creamery increased the volume of butter sold by better than twelve thousand pounds. The number of pounds of cream received were 193,414.6.

The average net price paid for all butterfat during the year was 25.67 cents. The percent of Land O'Lakes butter made was 62.86 percent.

The creamery had a gain in operation of over a thousand dollars over 1933. This ofsetts the $1,000 loss for 1933 and the net income for 1934 was $46.99.

The net worth of the creamery is $17,899.60. Their totalcurrent liabilities are $2,387.05 The institution has made a wonderful record all thru the years since it was organized.

The Holt Community band furnished a program of music and free lunch was served to all who stayed thru the meeting.

Bottem-Offerdahl

George Offerdahl, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nels Offerdahl and Miss Gladys Bottem, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Bottem, were united in marriage at Warren Saturday afternoon.

The newlyweds will make their home on the farm with the grooms parents in Ringbo.

The News joins their many friends here in wishing them happiness and success.

Frozen Cream

In the past month there has been more or less frozen cream. This is a point that should be watched very carefully as frozen cream is not fit for Land O'Lakes and also is injurious to the test.

Use enough blankets to cover it well while coming to town.

Lets co-operate and make 1935 a better year.

DEFINES BANKERS' PART IN RECOVERY

Head of American Bankers Association Assures the President of Confidence and Desire to Cooperate Among Bankers

WASHINGTON, D. C. — President Roosevelt in his address before the NRA conference here on March 5 announced that he had received the following telegram from Francis M. Law, President of the American Bankers Association:

"On this your first anniversary please allow me in behalf of the country's banks to express our full confidence and our sincere desire to cooperate in your courageous efforts to bring about recovery. The banking structure of the country is sound and liquid and banks have never been in stronger position to function effectively. Conditions have improved to the point where it is no longer necessary for banks to be super-liquid. There is a definite call now for banks, not to extend loose credits or to make improper loans, but for a most sympathetic attitude toward legitimate credit needs and for a recognition of responsibility for their proper and vital part in the program of recovery."

The Soundness of Banking

In an address before a recent trust conference of the association's Trust Division in New York, Mr. Law said:

"A depression cannot long survive a sound banking structure if the banking structure is responsive to legitimate needs and functions in a way that is virile and alive. The most cheering fact of the present situation is the knowledge that banks are in strong position.

"Recovery, even to the most pessimistic, is no longer a myth or a rumor, nor is it merely psychological. Abundant evidence and proof lie on every hand—tangible proof. With a return of confidence the wheels have begun to go round and a great many well managed businesses may look for a profit during this calendar year with fair assurance at least. For what has been achieved let us thank the President, who has labored with courage and patience and vision. Let us thank the Congress, whose members during the emergency have put the public welfare above partisanship. Let us thank one hundred twenty-five million of our own citizens who have refused to be stampeded, but rather who have kept alive the divine spark of faith and hope.

Cause for Confidence

"We may reasonably expect that the recent action of the government in stabilizing the dollar will have a marked tendency to encourage industrial and other business commitments. Business men need not be so exclusively engaged in taking counsel of their fears now that uncertainty does not haunt them.

"Much has been said about the loosing of credit by banks. During the acute period of the depression banks for the most part have not been lending normally, nor should they be blamed. With public confidence shattered the banker was properly concerned in liquidity, having in mind his primary obligation to pay off deposits. The situation has improved to the point where superliquidity no longer seems necessary. Conditions have materially changed. Banks will desire, for every reason, to return to a more normal lending policy. This means a sympathetic attitude and a recognition of responsibility for his proper part in the program of recovery by the banker as he passes upon and meets sound credit requirements of business as it swings into and continues on the upward turn."

Mrs. J. Hagberg, Mrs. Jesse Sorum, Mrs. R. A. Werner, Mrs Dennes Wegge and Bently Nelson made a trip to Fertile, Monday to see their aunt, Mrs. Elizabeth Engebretson, who is very ill.

Centenarian Dies At 109

St. Vincent, Minn. — Funeral services were held in the Catholic shurch here Friday for Mrs. Angeline Gooselaw, believed to be the oldest woman in Minnesota. She was 109 years old last October 3.

Mrs. Gooselaw died at her isolated home north of here where she had lived for 90 years. She never had been seriously ill but for the last two years she had gradually weakened and old age finally caused her death.

The centenarian was born at St. Boniface, a suburb of Winnipeg. Her father, Kozack Zast, was a Frenc-Canadian voyageur and her mother was part Cree Indian.

Until two years ago she was able to perform her household duties and was able to sew without glasses. She picked berries in summer and made quilts in winter.

In 1932 Mrs. Gooselaw enjoyed her first plane ride.

Manitoba and even much of the Red river valley on the American side were claimed as part of Prince Rupert's Land by the Hudson's Bay company when Angeline Zast and August Gooselaw, a young, slim-waisted voyageur, were married at the mission in Pembina in 1841. Angeline was 16 years old then and her husband, a mixed blood, was a few years older. The young couple preferred the wilderness to even the faint hint of civilization at Fort Pembina, Fort Garry and St. Boniface.

After two years at Pembina they selected a spot in the woods a short distance west of the present site of Noyes, Minn. and just half mile south of the international boundry.

The husband died in 1894, but the children were long since grown. There were three daughters and nine sons. The eldest son, who would have been 88 years old now, was drowned 66 years ago. Harry, 85, died a few months ago. The others are Zeb, 81; William, 73; Frank, 68; Jerome, 65; Roger, 63, and August, 61, all of the St. Vincent community, and Alex, 71, of Greenbush; Mrs. Angelic Atchison, 77, St. Vincent; Mrs. Rose Miller, 75, Deerwood, Minn., and Mrs. Emma Goden, 58, who lives near Emerson, Manitoba. Frank, Roger and Mrs. Atchison live at the old home. There are 53 grandchildren and 78 great grandchildren.

Mud Lake Project Rushed

Following recent approval by federal authorities the work of purchasing 52,713 acres in the Mud Lake wild migratory waterfowl resting and nesting area east of Holt is being pushed with the Minnesota Department of Conservation cooperating in "every possible manner," according to E. V. Willard, Conservation Commisioner.

Surveys of the proposed area are completed and physical improvements are planned for early spring as soon as weather permits.

Assurance have been received from Washington that federal officials are interested in obtaining additional areas in this state for migratory waterfowl restoration purposes, Mr. Willard stated.

Jesse Sorum and Bently Nelson spent Saturday in Grand Forks.

U Farm Offers Garden Book

Cutting down the family food bill is not the only advantage of having a home vegetable garden says a new garden bulletin which the Minnesota Agricultural Experiment Station has just printed for free distrubution.

Money can not measure the satisfactions and health advantages which come from a garden which supplies fresh, attractive, high quality vegetables in season and additional supplies for canning and winter storage. Pleasure and education value are afforded thru the gardner's association with growing plants, not to mention that gardening provides a healthful exercise.

Containing more than 60 pages with many diagrams, garden plans and pictures, this bulletin is the most complete handbook ever offered Minnesota gardners No phase of vegetable growing for home use has been overlooked in this publication. It presents in detail every step from locating the garden to harvesting and even to the winter storage of the produce. The bulletin has been written by A. E. Hutchins, vegetable specialist of the Division of Horticulture, who is widely known to Minnesota gardners thru his extensive writings for Minnesota weekly newspapers agricultural publications.

While they last, copies of this booklet on "The Home Vegetable Garden," Minnesota Bulletin 315, may be obtained from county or home demonstration egents, high school agriculture instructors, or by writing the Bulletin Office, University Farm, St. Paul.

No Open Muskrat Season

Action taken recently by the Minnesota Conservation Commission stipulated a closed season on muskrats in all counties of the state for the year 1935. It was pointed out that the severe drouth has threatened the brood stock of muskrats and that an open season would seriously deplete the muskrat population of the state.

Toes And Tomatoes

THE serving of food requires diplomacy. It's so easy to tread on someone's toes, if one isn't careful. There's Uncle John you should have known doesn't eat cooked fruits—yet you served baked apple for dessert. There's the Jones family who doesn't eat meat on Friday—and you served that delicious big steak. Well, what can you be safe in serving when there are so many toes about, waiting to be trod on?

Try toma-toes. Keep on hand a list of delicious dishes made with tomatoes, for almost everyone likes them. Here are some suggestions for tomatoes in various courses of the meal:

A Puree and An Omelet

Tomato and Cauliflower Puree: Cook one medium head of cauliflower until tender. Press through a sieve. Press the contents of one No. 2 can of tomatoes through a sieve also, and add with the contents of one can of consomme and one cup of water to the cauliflower. Bring to boiling. Saute one tablespoon of minced onion in two tablespoons butter for a few minutes. Add three tablespoons flour, stir until smooth, thin with a little of the hot soup, and then add the remainder of the soup and cook until creamy. Season to taste with salt and pepper. This serves six persons.

Omelet with Macaroni and Tomato Sauce: Make a French omelet with four eggs, one-half teaspoon salt, a few grains of pepper and four tablespoons milk. Meanwhile make a tomato sauce of one tablespoon butter, one tablespoon flour, salt and pepper to taste, one-half teaspoon sugar three-fourths cup strained tomatoes and a few drops of onion juice. Add three-fourths cup of cooked macaroni, cut in one-inch pieces, and spread over half the omelet just before folding. This serves four persons liberally.

ROOSEVELT SIGNS CIGARETTE INDUSTRY CODE DESPITE LABOR'S PROTESTS

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

©. Western Newspaper Union.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT extended no olive branches toward the American Federation of Labor when he signed the cigarette industry code, which labor leaders had declared was "unsatisfactory." The breach between the administration and labor is daily growing wider.

S. Clay Williams

The code, finally signed after months of argument between the tobacco industry and labor, calls for a forty-hour week and minimum wages from 25 to 40 cents an hour. Labor leaders also objected to the presence of S. Clay Williams, administration board chairman, who they declare is not in sympathy with labor. The President issued a curt statement informing the federation council that Williams' services had been satisfactory and that he had no intention of removing him without cause.

The executive council of the federation, composed of William Green and presidents of the federation of seventeen international unions, states that some present administration labor policies are bringing increased unrest among workers which may reach the danger point of widespread strikes unless corrected.

Thus far, the President seems to have had the best of the argument. Labor leaders, however, are expected to push the fight for a "prevailing wage" clause in work relief legislation, thus endangering the administration program.

THE President threw all his weight into the battle to bring the revolting senate appropriations committee back into line on his $4,880,000,000 works relief bill, and the committee finally voted to reconsider the McCarran prevailing wage amendment.

Chairman Glass, Virginia's unreconstructed rebel, was requested by the President to inform the committee that insistence on changes they had written into the bill will wreck his plan to end the dole. Another senator, said to be close to the administration, intimated that the President will veto the bill if it is enacted with major changes "that will not permit him to carry out his program."

The McCarran amendment would increase wage rates paid 3,500,000 relief workers to "the prevailing wage scale." The President has advocated $50 a month wage rates, based on his belief that payment of low wages will discourage employables on relief from taking advantage of private work opportunities and shift men from private to government payrolls.

It has been intimated that changes will be suggested by the administration to quiet assertions that the social security program takes authority away from the states.

Senator Adams, California Democrat, has stated that he will ask the committee again to limit the work-relief appropriation of $2,880,000,000, which he estimates is sufficient to continue on the present basis, but not enough to provide the higher wages and carry out the projects the President has in mind. An effort to curtail the program in this way was defeated in the committee a few days ago, although only by a tie vote.

NINE old gentlemen of vast dignity, comprising the United States Supreme court, conferred together for five hours Saturday. Then, through Clerk Charles C. Cropley, Chief Justice Hughes announced that there would be no decisions handed down on the following Monday. Nothing was said about the rest of the week, but it was assumed the ruling on the gold clause cases would not be handed down before February 18. It was thought by the well informed that the delay was due to the slowness with which the dissenters were preparing their views.

Meanwhile anxiety over the matter, at least in government circles, was growing less daily. Attorney General Cummings spent two hours with President Roosevelt going over the plans which have been drawn up for immediate action in the event that the decision goes against the government.

WITH the full approval of the administration, the army and navy are to receive $40,000,000 to carry out a program of national defense which will consist mainly of improved strongholds on the west coast and in the Pacific. The money, which will be shared equally by the two departments, comes from a $300,000,000 public works fund. Some of the navy's part will be spent along the Atlantic, but the greater part will go for shipyards, dry docks and bases on the Pacific coast, at Pearl harbor, Hawaii, and at Coco Solo, Canal Zone, which is a submarine base.

Nearly $11,000,000 of the army's share is to be used in beginning the construction of a great air base in Hawaii. The total cost of this base is estimated at $18,000,000.

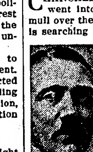
The decision to use most of the money in the Pacific was said to have been influenced by the fact that the fleet has been concentrated in Pacific waters during much of the past two years. Navy officials stressed before the naval committee, that facilities for handling the fighting vessels on the coast are inadequate.

Japan is supposed not to be alarmed by this program, congressional leaders having given public and careful assurance that no "offense" is intended and that such propositions as the Hawaii air base would have been put forward even if Japan had not denounced the Washington naval treaty.

At a meeting of the army high command with the military committee of the house these plans for defense were threshed out thoroughly. Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff, recommended to the committee the purchase of 800 new armored and equipped airplanes at a cost of $90,000,000 to give the army the aerial armada of 2,320 modern aircraft recommended by the Baker aviation committee. These additional aircraft are necessary, MacArthur said in a memorandum, to expand the new general headquarters air force to give it 900 fighting units, for its Pacific, Atlantic and central divisions.

Soon after this meeting the commanders of these three divisions were announced by Brig. Gen. Frank M. Andrews, head of the GHQ air force. Lieut. Col. H. H. Arnold, March field, Calif., was named commander of the first (Pacific) wing with the rank of brigadier general. Lieut. Col. H. C. Pratt, former assistant chief of air corps, was named commander of the second (Atlantic) wing at Langley field, Va., with the rank of brigadier general. Liuet. Col. Gerald C. Brant will command the third (central) wing, Fort Crockett, Texas, with the rank of colonel.

CHANCELLOR ADOLPH HITLER went into a hermit-like retreat to mull over the Anglo-French accord, and is searching for a means that will enable him to extract the remaining teeth from the Versailles treaty. Diplomatic quarters anticipate the reichfuehrer will emerge with counter proposals to the proffered plan.



Chancellor Hitler

What these proposals will be can only be conjectured, but they are expected to deal with the future strength of Germany's standing army, the plan of certain French military circles for lengthening the French enlistment period, and the future course of Russia. In any event he will make an attempt to separate the proposed air alliance from the inclusive security agreement worked out by the British and the French.

The London plan, reich officials have bluntly stated, is not acceptable in its present form, and Germany will not join any new general pact unless some of her colonies are returned. European boundary changes which Germany wants are chiefly those of Memel and Danzig, cut off from the Fatherland by the Versailles pact.

Objections are also seen to the proposal that Germany join the Eastern pact urged by France and the Franco-Italian treaty guaranteeing Austrian independence.

The air alliance, however, is viewed differently by the Nazis, since it would give them either the chance to build an air fleet or get recognition of the fleet that it is generally charged they have already built; Germany would be accepted as an equal partner, touching Nazi pride and thirst for prestige; and the reich has hopes of regaining Britain's waning sympathy since the proposal emanated from London.

Italy, the first nation to reply to the proposals drafted at London, officially stepped into line for an inclusive western European security agreement, affirming her adherence in principle, although making a special exception of the "special situation of Italy with regard to Great Britain, and vice versa." The communique declared that Italy believes the Anglo-French proposals "contain the possibility of an accord with Germany and therefore the beginning of a period of collaboration among the interested powers."

THE jury holds the fate of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, accused of the murder of the Lindbergh child, in its hands. Only four courses are open—acquittal, conviction with the death mandate, conviction with a mandatory life sentence or disagreement. In his final plea to the jury, Edward Reilly, chief defense counsel, bitterly charged that Colonel Lindbergh was betrayed by Violet Sharpe, the dead Morrow maid; Ollie Whately, dead Lindbergh butler; Betty Gow, Lindbergh nursemaid; and Henry Johnson, friend of Miss Gow. He declared that evidence against Hauptmann had been "planted" and that the state bungled the investigation. What impression his fiery speech may have made is known only to the jurors themselves.

SPEEDY police action was necessary to avert new bloodshed in Paris on the anniversary of the uprising caused by popular indignation over the Stavinsky scandal disclosures. Thousands of arrests were made as Communists sought to arouse the public to a repetition of the riots of a year ago, when 19 were killed in the Place de la Concorde. Police gave the Reds no chance to carry out their intended maneuvers. The most harmless looking individuals were escorted a few blocks and let go with farewell kicks while those found carrying weapons were rushed into improvised concentration camps. Premier Flandin was hissed and booed by many fire-eating Nationalists as he attended memorial services in Notre Dame cathedral

THE League of Nations nervously watched Italian mobilization of 100,000 troops, fearful that another situation like that precipitated by the Japanese occupation of Manchukuo was about to be added to its worries. The call to arms was sounded after announcement of another clash between Italian native troops and Ethiopians at Asdub, in which five Italians were killed and six wounded. A previous battle took place several weeks ago.

A government spokesman discloses that Italy is preparing to send reinforcements and officers to Eritrea and Somaliland to organize native troops and strengthen frontier forces. Heavy shipments of war materials have already been made.

While the Italian government has emphatically declared that their preparations are purely defensive, designed to prevent further Ethiopian attacks on frontier posts, rumors are adrift that Il Duce is planning the present drive to establish a protectorate over Emperor Haile Selassie's dominions.

WHETHER he desires it, President Roosevelt will have to face an early test of his strength against that of bonus payment advocates, if present signs are read correctly. Although bonus leaders have been unable to agree among themselves, they insist the plan be brought up for consideration. Some administration leaders have expressed belief such a step is necessary to prevent a revolt on major administration legislation.

Wright Patman

The controversy over possible methods of payment is becoming increasingly bitter. Representative Patman, Texas Democrat, author of a bill to pay the bonus certificates with an issue of new currency, gave out a statement asserting that Commander Frank N. Belgrano of the American Legion wanted to finance payment with a bond issue because the bank of which he is vice president receives $1,350,000 in interest annually on $45,000,000 worth of government bonds.

The American Liberty league also issued a statement applauding the President's stand against paying the bonus. The league said the Legion-backed Vinson bill to finance the bonus through the sale of bonds was "the lesser evil," but asked congress to defeat both it and the Patman measure.

"The President's opposition to immediate payment of the entire face value of the bonus certificates is based on sound principles and deserves to be upheld," the organization added.

STRONG evidence that the government, even in event of an adverse decision on the gold clauses, will keep the $35 an ounce price for gold and 59-cent dollar was contained in a statement from Secretary Morgenthau. The treasury chief stated:

"The country can go about its business with assurances that we are prepared to manage the external value of the dollar as long as it may be necessary."

ACTING with startling rapidity, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration ousted a group of radical New Dealers, which Secretary of Agriculture Wallace said was "for the good of the service." Jerome N. Frank, Lee Pressman and Frank Shea and Gardner Jackson all tendered their resignations. The final fate of Fred C. Howe, Victor Rotnam and Alger Hiss still remain in doubt.

The bloodless purge of the group, known as favored proteges of Rexford G. Tugwell, was unexpected. Evidently signals were confused, because President Roosevelt in his press conference stated that he was uninformed of any such action, but later in the day, Secretary Wallace said the President was aware of the action before it was announced.

Wallace added, however, that Tugwell, who is in Florida, had not been consulted. It may be remembered that Tugwell's fight for Frank resulted in the discharge of George N. Peek as AAA administrator, and it was felt by some that it was to avoid possible trouble with Tugwell that he was not inforced of the plan.

Agricultural Administrator Davis informed newspaper men that the order was necessary to preserve harmony.

"There was mounting difficulty in getting things done," said Administrator Davis. "We believed things would function more smoothly if they were directed by men familiar with farm problems and having a farm background."

Wallace was asked if this statement applied to Tugwell. He hastily replied that Tugwell had an excellent farm background, which may be a distinct surprise to many.

THE much advertised benefits from Russian recognition have been rather less than satisfactory. Neither the wide expansion of trade which was anticipated, or the satisfactory settlement of debts materialized, and following a conference with Soviet representatives, Secretary Cordell Hull admitted that diplomatic dilly-dallying had come to an end.

Hall issued a curt statement that "certain diplomatic changes" had been ordered in Moscow. The acting naval attache will be withdrawn, the consulate generalship will be abolished, and further reductions will be made in the personnel of the embassy, he stated.

The United States' action means a period of strained relations between the two countries, although not to the point of the United States government's withdrawing recognition.

REPUBLICAN PRINCIPLES

By COLONEL FRANK KNOX
Publisher Chicago Daily News.

WE AS Republicans must continue to ceaselessly preach against reckless spending that has already produced racking taxation; we must battle, remorselessly, against monopoly. We must insist upon equality of opportunity for industrial worker and agricultural worker alike, in a parity in earning power.

We must fight valiantly against the threat of a political control of credit. We must stand, unflinchingly, for a single gold standard and a prompt stabilization of the dollar with, or without, international agreement, and always and everywhere we must drive home the fundamental, unescapable, incontrovertible fact that no solid, wholesome, permanent prosperity is possible without sound money and a balanced budget, never forgetting that these have been the firm foundation of permanent prosperity since the beginning of our economic system.

IMPORTS VITAL

By HENRY WALLACE
Secretary of Agriculture.

FOR most of the ten years after the war our imports failed to balance our exports and the excess was made up by exports of long-term capital. In the years from 1931 to 1933 the difference was made up by the exports of short-term capital. And finally, in 1934, the difference was made up largely by the importation of gold. It does not seem likely that we can continue to import gold in large volume.

We are approaching the end of the period when we can continue trade by stop-gap expedients. We now have to face either a contraction in our excess of exports, of which cotton makes up such an important part, or we must make up our minds to bring in larger imports in order to make possible a continued large export trade.

A. F OF L. PROTESTS CODE

By WILLIAM GREEN
Labor Leader.

THE executive council of the A. F. of L. voiced its vigorous protest against the procedure followed in the extension of the Auto code and against the provisions of the section of the codes directly affecting labor.

In paternal fashion, the code, with all its objectionable features, was imposed on labor, and this was done in spite of the fact that labor pleaded for an opportunity to be heard. Its petition was rejected and its counsel denied. Its representatives were not accorded the privilege to speak and advise in the counsels when the final decision on the Automobile code procedure was made.

COUNTRY NEWSPAPERS

By COLUMBUS ROBERTS
Candidate for Georgia Commissioner of Agriculture.

AFTER an experience of several months reading the weekly press of Georgia, I feel myself vastly better informed regarding our state, more confident of the future, better fitted to hold the important office I seek, more inspired to continue my efforts to serve my fellow citizens of Georgia—regardless of whether I win or lose in the race for commissioner of agriculture. . . . A course in country newspaper reading is a splendid tonic for all men in public life—or in any line of business.

PRESENT RISE NATURAL

By CHAS. G. DAWES
Chicago Banker.

THE present rapid and continuing rise in the mass demand for heavy durable goods is a natural and not a forced rise, and it is a rise which always marks the end of a major depression. Its rapidity, which is also natural, takes many business men unawares. This is occurring now and seems to have occurred in a period exactly similar to the present about five and one-half years after the start of the major depression of September, 1873.

THE SAAR TRIUMPH

By ADOLPH HITLER
German Chancellor

THE Saarlanders' decision permits me to make a solemn declaration; that is, with the return of the Saar to Germany we have no more territorial claims to make of France. We want to obtain equality of rights for Germany, but we also want to achieve solidarity among nations.

Fifteen years of injustice have been erased. January 13 marks the end of a state of things that really began 20 years ago.

EXAGGERATE BENEFITS

By COMMANDER D. A. HOBART
American Veterans Association.

MANY people exaggerate the benefits to be derived from immediate payment of the soldiers' bonus, which under the terms of the contract is not due before 1945. There is convincing evidence that prepayment of the bonus, if authorized by congress, would be followed by demands for pensions for all World war veterans and their dependents, regardless of need or disability.

POOR EXCUSE

A couple who live in Champaign planned to do some visiting on a recent Sunday. (Not a crime in a small town, writes Alvin Hamburg, who relays the item). His wife was ready to leave before he was, so she went outside to wait. Some five minutes elapsed before he finally came out of the house, looking pale and shaken.

"Do you know that I've been waiting out here fully 10 minutes?" she said sharply.

"But, dear," he implored, "please don't get angry. I couldn't help it. As I started down stairs I slipped on the top step and fell down the whole flight of stairs."

His wife sniffed.

"Well, what of it?" she demanded. "That shouldn't have taken you so long."—Chicago Tribune.

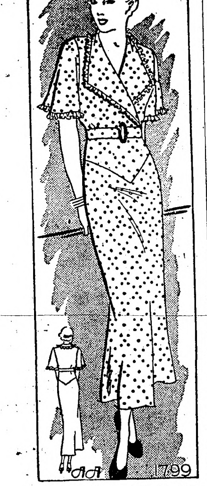
Design Wearer Can Depend On

PATTERN 1799



Anything you do with this design is smart, and you can do many things with it. Don't you like it as it is, made of a crisp, fresh little cotton? Now think of it in navy blue dotted voile with pleated net frills. Could anything be more charming? A surplice front is always one of the most becoming things a woman can wear, and the big revers make this one doubly flattering. The sleeves are as graceful as can be, and the well-proportioned points at the front and the back of the skirt do the most astonishing things for the figure when it is a bit large.

Pattern 1799 is available in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 takes 4¼ yards 36-inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, which he names "Penelope," in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. Ten-year-old Penelope is given into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin. At a baseball game a ball strikes Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin retires from business, wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for his daughter when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt is a rising young psychiatrist. He is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" was in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a responsible criminal and obtains Burt's expert testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's faithful office nurse, is won over to her cause despite Nance's hard-boiled exterior.

CHAPTER III

—5—

Stephen elbowed his way into the courtroom. Nance Belden saw him, and from behind the bars of the prisoner's dock waved to him and called cheerily: "Hello, Steve."

"Silence—you!" the bailiff warned her.

Nance made a face at him; then, observing Stephen lay finger to lip in a warning gesture, she tossed her head, tilted her chin and bent upon the judge a cold and defiant stare.

The bailiff opened the door of the prisoners' dock and beckoned to her.

"Nance Belden," the judge queried, "have you anything to say as to why sentence should not be pronounced upon you?"

"I've got a mouthpiece," the girl retorted. "Ask him!"

From a chair beside the counsels' table a young man arose. "May it please the court, the public defender has withdrawn from this case and I am now counsel for the defendant. My name is David Tyrrell. I am reliably informed, your honor, that, following a fair and impartial trial, this defendant has been convicted of the crime of which she stands accused and is now before the court for sentence."

"Mr. Tyrrell, your client is now under a suspended sentence from the Superior court, for the crime of grand theft. She was there sentenced to two years in San Quentin penitentiary, but paroled for two years. Less than two months have passed since she was paroled, and today she stands before the court for sentence under a charge of petit larceny. The defendant evidently is incorrigible, and I intend to remand her to the Superior court for commitment under the old charge of grand theft."

"I thank your honor. I have been retained in this apparently hopeless case for the purpose of adducing a sound reason why this defendant should be neither sentenced under the present charge nor remanded to the Superior court for commitment under sentence for the former crime. To that end, your honor, I ask leave to present an expert witness to testify to the mental irresponsibility of my client."

"One moment, please, Mr. Tyrrell. Your action would be merely wasting your time and that of the court. I shall remand the prisoner immediately to the Superior court, with a request to the judge thereof that her case be taken up immediately. I sentence this prisoner to ninety days in the county jail, but the sentence will be suspended during her good behavior for one year from date. A bailiff will conduct you, your expert witness and the defendant at once to Department Number Six of the Superior court, and I will immediately telephone to the judge and request that he listen to your expert witness."

As they entered the Superior court the judge glanced at a document which evidently had reached him from the police magistrate's court. "Mr. Tyrrell, I understand you desire to present some expert testimony in an effort to prove the mental irresponsibility of this defendant, Nance Belden. I may state that I have already been in telephonic communication with Doctor Blethen, and have had a complete report from him on this case. You may proceed, however, to present your side of it. Who is your witness?"

"Dr. Stephen Burt, your honor," and Tyrrell indicated Stephen.

"I know all about Doctor Burt," the judge said pleasantly. "I had him in my court a year ago as an expert witness in the matter of the Carter will case," he nodded to Stephen. "This court is very much interested in getting at the facts in this case and it is obliged to you for your voluntary attendance. What is your professional opinion of this girl's mentality?"

"I have not had a fair opportunity to study her, your honor," Stephen replied, "hence I am not in a position to give the court more than a snap decision."

"How long have you studied her?"

"About thirty minutes, your honor."

"H'm-m-m! Doctor Blethen examined her on three different occasions, his examinations embodying a total of about six hours' time."

"With all due deference to my distinguished colleague," Stephen replied with his singularly charming smile, "six hours is not usually considered more than sufficient time to form an approximate opinion, which subsequent investigations may set at variance. If this girl were to become a patient of mine today, I should devote many weeks to an effort to demonstrate that my original opinion regarding her was a error."

"Is she crazy, Doctor Burt?"

"Not in the sense that we customarily employ the term, your honor. I should say, rather, that her psychology is abnormal, that she is neither moral nor immoral, but unmoral. For instance, when I asked her why she stole silk stockings, she told me quite frankly that she did it because there were runs in all her old stockings. That reply was very illuminating. As I talked further with her I noted her valiant moods and quickly came to the conclusion that she is suffering from dissociation by reason of shock. In other words, this girl, who doubtless in happier days possessed a single personality and that a normal one, has now acquired a secondary personality. In plain English, two entirely different people inhabit the one body.

"The first personality, which I shall call A, is the result of acquired instincts, habit, education, and repressions imposed on society by convention and the code of procedure which we call morals. This has been submerged wholly or in part by a second personality, which I shall call B, and when B personality rules her she has amnesia for what I have termed her acquired or normal instincts. Out of her unconscious mind then emerge, as definite impulses to action, the old antipathies to such action, which we medical men term conflicts.

"Let me illustrate. We will assume that at this moment she is possessed of her personality A, and in this state she realizes she has runs in all her stockings—that she must have new stockings, but she sees some stockings which she can readily steal. Normal people often have impulses to steal, your honor, and Nance Belden has an impulse to steal the stockings she needs.

"But here a factor intervenes. She has been taught, from the day she manifested thought, that it is wrong to steal, and this moral lesson has impressed itself upon her conscious mind. With repetition, the thought, becoming a habit, dropped out of her conscious mind to become conserved in her unconscious mind. Conserved there, it became a definite part of her personality—her soul, if you will. Thereafter it was not necessary to remind herself that it was wrong to steal. She knew it was, without having to think about it at all, and this unconscious knowledge was her protection in the fleeting moment of temptation, aroused by her definite need and the knowledge that, lacking money to buy the stockings, and faced with the absolute necessity for acquiring stockings, the sole alternative was to steal them. She got no further than that vague, conscious thought. Immediately the knowledge that it was immoral to steal—that nothing could possibly excuse theft—rose out of her unconscious mind and became a dominating conscious thought. Now, right there appeared the mental phenomenon known among psychiatrists as a complex or conflict. In all conflicts the stronger wins—and in this particular mental conflict, the will not to steal won instantly. It was an older habit of thought. It was an acquired instinct, whereas the impulse to steal was not a habit of thought, because she had never indulged in theft! We say we do a thing on instinct, but really we act after due, if incalculably brief cogitation, based on reason, which is the result of habituation to doing certain things.

"This defendant, your honor, is a healthy girl as far as I can judge from outward appearances. But she is what you often hear referred to as high-strung. And she is so unusually intelligent that I readily realized there must have been a very potent reason for the commission of such an unintelligent act as theft. So immediately I commenced to question her as to her family, her past.

"She could tell me nothing. She is not at all sure that her name is Nance Belden, and I am satisfied that her inability to throw any light on her genesis was not born of a desire to withhold that information. I believe she has amnesia for a certain period of her life, and we know that such a condition is usually the result of a severe mental shock. In such cases the patient usually has an intense desire to forget absolutely the unhappy, unpleasant or terrifying episode or person that produced the shock, and so intense is the power of will in certain highly sensitive people, women particularly, that not infrequently they succeed! Thus amnesia is produced. It is, in a sense, autohypnosis, and your honor undoubtedly is aware that people who have been hypnotized remember nothing of what occurs during the hypnotic state."

"I believe I follow you," the judge murmured.

"I have shown you why the normal Nance Belden would not steal. But now comes that mental shock I spoke of, with consequent amnesia for all of her life that has preceded it; or it may be a part of that life. With the amnesia comes what we term dissociation or mental disintegration. The unconscious overwhelms the conscious; the acquired instincts of morality—social usage—drop out of the conscious into the unconscious, and the thoughts and impulses that have lain dormant and defeated in the unconscious are now in the saddle. Unfortunates who have acquired dual personalities or a dissociated personality go from one personality into the other and back again, with or without amnesia for the preceding state.

"At a time when Nance Belden's second personality (B) ruled her, and she decided to steal those stockings, she was acting under the impulsion of an idea that could not be combated. To steal had become an acquired instinct, or at least a very strong instinct. There may have been a certain amount of repression against the act at first, but gradually that repressive instinct, i. e., her moral instincts, once part of her conscious mind but now relegated to her unconscious mind, grew weaker, until finally the stronger instinct won, and the result is, we have Nance Belden up before your honor for commitment to San Quentin penitentiary on a suspended sentence for grand theft."

"This Girl, Who Doubtless in Happier Days Possessed a Single Personality and That a Normal One, Has Now Acquired a Secondary Personality."

"Have you any theory as to what this mental shock might be, Doctor Burt?"

"I have a very definite theory as to what prepared the ground, so to speak, for the mental shock, but I have not the slightest idea of the nature of the shock."

"This is most interesting, Doctor Burt. Pray explain."

"Look carefully at this defendant, your honor. You see a young woman about five feet, five inches high—normal height for a woman of her age, which I imagine to be about twenty-one or twenty-two. How much do you weigh, Miss Belden?"

"A hundred and twenty-eight Steve."

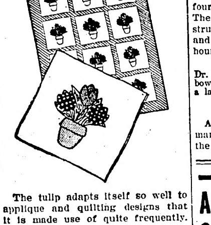
Political Graft in England

Back in Eighteenth century England, political corruption was carried on in an open manner. Gentlemen wishing to buy government positions and office-holders having them for sale advertised in the newspapers. Often, too, prices were mentioned, some running as high as $15,000.

Tulip Has Won Popular Favor

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



The tulip adapts itself so well to applique and quilting designs that it is made use of quite frequently. This combination, showing the entire potted plant, gained popularity immediately after it was released. Tulips in bloom always form a beautiful color scheme, and this tulip pot is also brilliant in prints and greem applique. These stamped blocks are 18 inches, and twelve are required for a quilt about 76 by 97 inches, if you use a nine inch border and four inch strips between blocks. Strips and border widths can be changed to make a quilt any size.

Send 15c to our quilt department for one of these stamped blocks, No. 96-F, and the stamped applique pieces ready to be cut out. Work this up and see what a beautiful quilt can be made of this design. A set of six blocks will be sent for 75c, postpaid.

Cheap Liquid Hydrogen

A low-temperature laboratory has been devised in California, it is announced. Five quarts of liquid hydrogen will be made in an hour at a cost of $2 a quart.

SPEEDY WAR TANKS

The United States army now has a new tank, weighing eight tons which, in demonstrations, has reached a speed of more than 60 miles an hour. It is built "caterpillar" style for difficult travel as well as ordinary wheels for use on more level ground. These new war machines are 12¾ feet long, 6½ feet high and 7 feet wide. It takes four men to operate one of them. The tank was first used as an instrument of war in the World war and had a speed of 6 to 7 miles an hour.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets are best for liver, bowels and stomach. One little Pellet for a laxative—three for a cathartic.—Adv.

Then It Is Natural

As a rule the friendship that a man does not seek, but falls into, is the life-long one.

A CHILD'S LAXATIVE SHOULD BE LIQUID
(Ask any doctor)
For your own comfort, and for your children's safety and future welfare, you should read this:
The bowels cannot be helped to regularity by any laxative that can't be regulated as to dose. That is why doctors use liquid laxatives.
A liquid laxative can always be taken in the right amount. You can gradually reduce the dose. Reduced dosage is the secret of real and safe relief from constipation.
The right liquid laxative dose gives the right amount of help. When repeated, instead of more each time, you take less. Until bowels are moving regularly and thoroughly without any help at all.
The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara, natural laxatives that form no habit — even in children. Its action is gentle, but sure. It will clear up a condition of biliousness or sluggishness without upset. Every druggist has it.

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

Pedestrian, walk with the lights, Do not ignor this warning The lights are put up for your protection, and should be used accordingly. There are just as many pedestrians trying to beat the lights as auto drivers. Why take a chance? Why invite trouble?

Cut on the highways, walk on the left side of the road and face approaching traffic. You can see better and it's safer. The wrong side is the right side to walk on. Sounds queer, but it's right.

All of us are to prone to blame the auto driver when we as pedestrians could exercise more care at crossings and on our highways

Life will be longer, sweeter, and safer when we use just ordinary common sense in walking and driving.

Do You Know?

Do you realize that two months and one week of this grand year of 1935 has already passed and not a thing of any real great importance has happened except the conviction of Hauptman?

The Weather

The weather has been unusual the past week. We have had light snow storms, rain, small hail and wind golore. It has also been plenty cold since Monday night. Everything here is covered an inch thick with clear sleet ice that froze on after the rain Sunday evening.

The roads are next to impassable and if one goes out on them he has to just feel his way around or wake up in the ditch. The surface on the highway is as a shiny as a skating rink.

Mrs. Paul Olson, Mrs. Dennes Wegge and Mrs. A. L. Carlson called at the Sam Lorentson home Monday.

Orlene Hagglund and Milton Hanson visited with the Peter Hanson family in Roseau recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Lorentson and daughter Betty Lou, Lois Hanson, Miss Lanman and Mr. and Mrs. Dennes Wegge visited at the R. A. Werner Saturday afternoon and evening.

Make us happy by paying us for that subscription.

New Law Needed For Mud Lake

An enabeling act is required in order that the Federal Government may be able to complete the purchase of the 52,713 acres approved by the United States Bureau of Biological Survey for the Mud Lake Wild migratory waterfowl project in eastern Marshall county. A bill instigated by the Department of Conservation designed to remove condemnation obstacles was introduced in the legislature Friday by F. A. Green, Representative from Marshall county.

The federal government has arranged to buy the 52,713 acres in the Mud Lake area for approximately $369,000 and spend $100,000 on the public works project. Rehabilitation of needy persons on these lands as well as conservation is the object of this FERA land program under NIRA activities.

"Sportsmen of the state can perform no greater immediate service to the wild life restoration program in Minnesota than by getting behind this bill," E. V. Willard, Commissioner of Conservation, said. "State Senators and Representatives should be urged to support this measure so that the important Mud Lake project can get under way as early as possible.

Federal funds available for improvements within the area must be definitely committed before March 31 or they will revert to the Federal Treasury and be lost to the project. It is to be able to get these funds that the pending enabling act must be passed."

Marshall County Ranks High

That there were only four people killed by automobile accidents in Marshall County in 1934 was probably due to the fact that the Editor here is on the Minnesota Public Safety Commission.

This put Marshall County in 22nd place in the rank of group "AA" of counties having from 10,000 to 20,000 population. Marshall county has 17,003 people according to the 1930 census and at this rate our percentage of lives taken by autos is 23.51 per 100,000 population.

Bought Used Cars

Hilmer Davidson returned on Saturday from Minneapolis where he had purchased a chev coach. Roger and Connely Skoglund also returned with a used Pontiac coach they purchased. Sidney Engstrom who took them down to the city also piloted the bunch back.

Geo. Fricker and Marvin Sandberg made a business trip to Warren on Wednesday.

Auto License Bill Amended

State revenues from motor vehicle license would be increased approximately $1,300,000 annually, without increasin the minimum fees of $5 and $7.50 paid by motorists during the past two years under provisions of an amended bill recommended for passage by the House motor vehicle and motor taxes committee last week.

The committee has been working on the bill since early in the session and action last week followed numerous demands by the public for a decision.

In addition to leaving the minimum tax at $5 for Class A and $7.50 for Class B cars, the amended committee bill restores the 1932 basic rate of 2.4 per cent and the annual depreciation rate to 10 per cent instead of the 20 per cent prevailing during the past two years.

Motor vehicle licenses in 1933 and 1934 produced revenues of $6,600,000 annualy. The bill approved last week would increase the return to approximately 8 million dollars annually, motorist however, still paying approximately $2,100,000 less annualy than before the reduction in 1933.

The House committee hopes that additional funds required will be produced by operating economies in the Minnesota Highway department, said Mr. F. F. Moore, Chairman from Wheaton.

According to late reports it was expected that the license fight would be settled yesterday.

Augustine Is President

At the reorganization meeting of the local creamery board on Monday, Feb. 25th, J. P. Augustine was again chosen as president of the board of directors. O. H. Nohre was named vice-president and T. B. Folden, secretary. The other two directors are E. O. Waagedahl and F. D. Voth.

Hurt In Runaway

J. O. Johnson got bruised up a little on Monday evening as he was going home from town when his team ran away when he was a half a mile out on the road.

On Trip To Ohio

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. McMurray and Hubert McMurray left on Saturday for Ohio where they will spend some time visiting with relatives and friends.

Big Auction Sale March 16

O. H. Dovre is selling out all his livestock, horses and machinery on Saturday, March 16. Read the sale ad on back page.

Injured By Horses

C. E. Smith, farmer living north of town was injured about the head on Tuesday when some of his horses tore down some planking in the barn and kicked a post over on his head. He suffered deep scalp wounds, had to be rushed to a hospital in Thief River Falls far treatment.

Had Operation

Alf Movick was taken suddenly ill with chronic appendicitis on Friday evening and had to be rushed to the St. Lukes hospital in Thief River Falls where he underwent an operation late that night. He expects to be home next week.

Highway Dept. Biennial Report

Work of the state highway department in 1933 and 1934, as outlined in its biennial report just issued, includes the following:

Grading, 529 miles; graveling, 742 miles; bituminous surfacing, 451 miles; paving, 154 miles; paving base, 127 miles; shouldering, 148 miles; new bridges, 54; bridges widened, 39; bridges rebuilt or repaired, 633; grade crossings eliminated, 27; dangerous center piers eliminated in underpasses, 13. In 1935, the report says, it is hoped to eliminate all remaining center piers on the trunk system.

Official mileage of the system, by types, is shown as follows: Total system, 11,339 miles; which is made up of 2,686 miles of concrete paving, 101 miles of bituminous pavement, 3,086 miles of bituminous treated gravel, 4,520 miles of untreated gravel, 74 miles of graded dirt road and 872 miles of ungraded dirt road. A considerable portion of the graveled roads, the report states, hardly comes up to that classification because the graveling is so light and is on inferior grades or foundations. Much of this type of road was added to the system in the 1934 expansion.

Owing to federal regulations governing most of the highway construction of the past biennium, the work was broken up into many small projects widely scattered over the state. This was done as an employment measure and resulted in providing more jobs, says the report, but it also increased the cost of work.

The report was presented to Governor Olson by N. W. Elsberg, highway commissioner, and copies were suppled to the legislature.

Depression Robbery

Depression! Yes it is a heck of a depression for some people. Getting less and less all the time. That is just what we can imagine that the fellow said who robbed the Math Barzen Company elevator office here sometime Saturday night.

The robbery business at this elevator has fallen $9 and some cents below what they got in the last raid early last year. At this time they only got one lone penny and, it may not have been a American one at that.

Mr. Ness, manager at the elevator would like to have the culprits come and pay for the window that they broke in order to get in.

H. O. Hanson and family spent Sunday afternoon at the Mrs. C. Hagglund home.

Assn. Held Annual Meeting

The members of the Holt Co-operative Livestock Shipping Association held their annual meeting here Monday afternoon. O. J. Backlund, local manager, reported that it was a fine meeting and that the farmers seemed satisfied with the business done in 1934.

The Association shipped out 13 cars of stock from here last year and have shipped out two cars so far this year.

A. C. Conklin and O. H. Nohre were elected as members of the board of directors. F. D. Voth retired as director and Mr. Nohre was reelected. Ole J. Backlund will hold the post as manager.

Made Survey Of Refuge

An intensive survey of conditions in the Red Lake Wild Life refuge located north of the Red Lakes was made last week by Charles McFarlane, Deputy Director of the Division of Game and Fish, in company with representatives of the United States Bureau of Biological Survey.

The Red Lake refuge is important to a wild life program in the State, it was pointed out by Erling Swenson, Division Director, because the only known herd of woodland caribou to be found within the entire United States is located within its confines.

Why Ask Us?

Some farmers are already inquiring from us as to what kind of a year it's going to be.

Well sir, we'll tell you right out that we have not as yet had any definite information from any sources as to what the yields or anything else is going to be during the crop months. All we hope is that it will not be any more of this dry weather that we have had the past few years.

Many Bid On Lumber Yard

There were many bids submitted on the Holt Lumber Yard here on Monday according to Geo. Fricker, administrator. As yet no definite action has been taken as to who really will be the successful bidder. Mr. Fricker stated that the court will have to approve the bids first.

Auction Sale March 15

Local Appeal; Feed The Birds

If never before in all your life you felt that you cared to be a sportsman, become one at once and help out in the great emergency that now exists. The rain and sleet storms which we have had the past week has made it practically imposible for our upland game birds to find anything to feed on. All their natural food resources are covered with a thick coating of ice and they have no chance to dig thru the hard crust of snow to reach the ground for feed.

Get the call of the wild in distress and for once share a little eats with the feathered fellow and show them that you really appreciate their plukiness in weathering it out here the year round.

Spend a few cents for feed if you have none. If every good citizen in this community only puts out a peck or two of eats for the bird, we believe all of them can be saved from starving until the sleet ice thaws.

Put some rice, buckwheat, oatmeal, corn or wheat where you see the birds hang out at.

Let's see some of you do this.

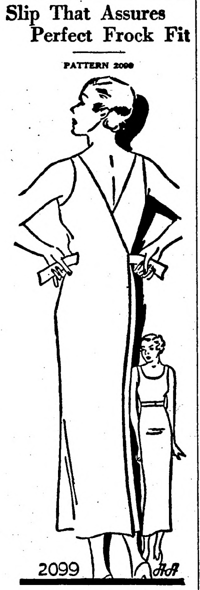
Slip That Assures Perfect Frock Fit

PATTERN 2099



An axiom for nice grooming which every well-dressed woman knows by heart is that no frock can fit any better than the slip that's worn beneath it. That's why it is so important to have an abundance of trim slips in your wardrobe. As you see by the illustration, this model wraps around at the back, and can be perfectly adjusted to the figure by the belt which fastens in front. Result: no bunchiness or wrinkles to spoil the lines of your smartest frocks! And the fact that the back skirt is double makes the slip shadow-proof and long-wearing as well! Washable silk-crepe or sateen or one of the tubbable rayon materials would make up well in this design.

Pattern 2099 is available in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 takes 3¼ yards 39 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth street, New York City.

ADMINISTRATION GOLD LAWS SUSTAINED BY DECISION OF SUPREME COURT.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

President Roosevelt

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT and the New Dealers breathed easier after the United States Supreme court handed down its decision sustaining invalidation of "gold clauses" in private contracts, but not on federal bonds. While it was held that the government must pay off its bonds in gold or its equivalent in devalued currency, another ruling that the Court of Claims had no jurisdiction over such cases means that it would be impossible for holders of federal bonds to collect on their old gold basis. In other words, the holder of a $1,000 federal bond is entitled to a technical value of $1,690, but in reality it would be impractical to make any collection of that amount, since the Court of Claims is the only tribunal before which suits against the government may be taken, and other courts may not entertain such suits without a special act of congress.

The court also held that those who held gold certificates had no cause of action and could not sue the government. The power of congress to deal with currency was fully upheld.

Not only this country, but the entire world, awaited what the "nine lonely old men" of the Supreme court had to say about the Roosevelt monetary policies. The decision is ranked with the court's decisions in the Dartmouth college cases in 1818 which upheld the sanctity of contract, and in the Dred Scott slavery case in 1857 which had much to do with hastening the outbreak of the Civil war.

Briefly, the ruling said:

1. Congress has the power to nullify promises to pay in gold contained in the bonds of private corporations.

2. A gold certificate is worth only its face value in present devalued currency. Congressional power over the currency includes the right to establish circumstances under which gold certificates need not be redeemed in gold or its equivalent.

3. Congress has no authority under the Constitution to abrogate the payment-in-gold clause of government bonds, but, as no actual damage has been shown, therefore there is no basis for suit for recovery.

The decision was read by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, who voted with Justices Brandeis, Stone, Roberts and Cardozo in the majority. Dissenters were Justices McReynolds, Van Devanter, Sutherland and Butler, the four so-called conservatives.

Satisfaction within the administration was evident at once.

Justice McReynolds was spokesman for the dissenters. He unleashed a scathing attack on the majority views. His voice vibrant, he said:

"The Constitution as we have known it is gone."

"If given effect, the enactments here challenged will bring about confiscation of property rights and repudiation of national obligations."

"Just men regard spoliation of citizens by their sovereign with abhorrence, but we are asked to affirm that the Constitution has granted power to accomplish both."

"No definite delegation of such a power exists; and we cannot believe the farseeing framers, who labored with hope of establishing justice and securing the blessings of liberty, intended that the expected government should have authority to annihilate its own obligations and destroy the very rights which they were endeavoring to protect."

Notified that Chief Justice Hughes was reading the decision, President Roosevelt went to the cabinet room, where he listened to telephone reports from an aid. Three cabinet officers were at his side. The Chief Executive was prepared to take swift action to protect the credit of the government in case an adverse decision was handed down, but executive orders were unnecessary. The carefully prepared program was not needed.

After a three-hour conference between the President and administration leaders, Attorney General Cummings said:

"As far as they concern us, the decisions constitute a complete victory for the government all along the line."

The announcement caused stock and commodity markets to soar, and because of the speculative frenzy, the Chicago Board of Trade suspended all trading temporarily in accordance with a recent resolution of the directors. Grain exchanges in other cities did likewise. Stock exchanges remained open and the ticker was soon nine minutes behind the trading. Railroad stocks were particularly strong in view of the decision which held the carriers would not be obliged to liquidate their obligations in the new currency at the present price of gold. Had an adverse decision been handed down, a number of the country's strongest lines would have been forced into bankruptcy.

HOSTILITIES between Senator Long and Postmaster General Farley moved swiftly toward a climax. Without objection the senate adopted Huey's resolution demanding that Secretary of the Interior Ickes supply to that body any information he may have regarding investigations of public works contracts with which Farley may have been connected. The postmaster general, who was in Sarasota, Fla., said merely: "I do not take it seriously."

Long did not get along so well with his demand for a senatorial investigation of Farley. It was referred to the post office committee, and Chairman McKellar said: "If there is anything to be investigated it will be investigated. But I don't know what the acts are. My committee will invite Farley and Long before it and will settle the matter on its merits as shown by the facts adduced."

DR. F. E. Townsend of California, whose pension plan for the aged has gained the support of many thousands of thoughtless citizens, went before the senate finance committee and tried to explain how the government could get out of its economic troubles by paying $200 monthly pensions to all persons over sixty, provided each one must spend his $200 for commodities or services within the country each month. The senators didn't treat the proposition with much seriousness.

Chairman Harrison said that with 10,000,000 or more aged, the plan would cost $24,000,000,000 a year. But a 2 per cent tax would raise only $5,000,000,000, leaving a deficit of $19,000,000,000 a year.

"Yes," Townsend said, "but we will not be able to put 10,000,000 on the pension immediately. It took two years to get 4,000,000 men into the army. We would have to examine each citizen for his citizenship and age, as we examined applicants for the army."

Senator Vandenberg

REPUBLICAN heavy guns, some light ones and a few Democratic mortars bombarded the $4,880,000,000 work relief bill in the senate, and then the administration forces had a breathing spell over the week-end during which they worked hard to win over those members of their own party who were consorting with the enemy. Senator Vandenberg of Michigan attacked the measure with bitterness and sarcasm, suggesting this substitute bill:

"1. Congress hereby appropriates $4,880,000,000 to the President to use as he pleases.

"2. Anybody who doesn't like it is fined $1,000."

Senator Adams of Colorado, Democrat, who fears an appropriation of the size asked will damage the credit of the nation, carried to the floor the amendment that had been beaten in committee, namely, cutting the total amount to $2,880,000,000.

Senator McCarren of Nevada, also a Democrat, was still arguing for his plan that the committee had rejected and the administration opposed, fixing work relief wages at the rates prevailing in different localities. The bill as modified by the senate appropriations committee after long controversy requires that prevailing rates be paid if the President finds wages in private industry are being undermined.

Vandenberg in the course of his speech asserted the bill would permit the government to compete with any business it pleased. In reply to this Senator Mahoney of Wyoming, who had just called on the President, said from the White House steps that Mr. Roosevelt is determined to authorize only projects that will not compete with private industry, and also that he "will use all his influence to maintain rates of wages and standards in private industry."

In a party conference the Republicans agreed to try to limit the bill to one year instead of two. Their reason is that as it stands the measure gives the President authority to allocate funds for projects through the months when the 1936 Presidential campaign will be going on. Most of the Republicans also favored the prevailing wage amendment, and some of them supported the plan fathered by Adams. The administration Democrats were still confident they could put the bill through without serious changes.

LIEUT. GALVIN M. BOLSTER, a member of the crew of the Macon, gave some sensational testimony before the naval board of inquiry into the causes of the disaster that befell the dirigible. He said that several months ago three girders in the ship's tail had sheared, and that only minor repairs had been made because the bureau of aeronautics ordered that the work should not interfere with training flights. Bolster added that this work had not been completed when the Macon started on her last flight, but that he did not consider the craft unsafe for flight over the ocean except in extremely violent air.

The same indication of structural weakness also was given by R. J. Davis, chief boatswain's mate, one of two crewmen on duty near the "casualty" spot in the rear.

All four fins, two horizontal and two vertical, were fastened to the allegedly weak girder, known technically as "No. 17½."

Commander P. L. Katch, judge advocate of the court, made pointed inquiries to determine if progressive bumpings encountered in anchoring the Macon at its Sunnyvale base might have strained the girder. The lower fin was attached to the ground car in the anchoring operation.

Bolster said such was a possibility, but he did not see how such jars could hurt the upper part of the girder, where the casualty occurred.

GERMANY'S reply to the Anglo-French proposals for a European security pact was not very specific but "welcomed the spirit of trustful discussion between the individual governments" and promised that the reich would examine thoroughly "the whole document concerning the European questions contained in it." The note declared the air agreement might be one step toward solution of other problems, and promised that Germany would examine the question of how to avoid the danger of an armaments race. No mention was made of the proposed Danubian and Eastern pacts.

It was believed in London that meetings would soon be held between British and German cabinet ministers.

Andrew Mellon

EVIDENCE introduced in the hearing on the government claim that Andrew W. Mellon, former secretary of the treasury, showed that Mellon has paid the United States government in income taxes in the 21 years since the law was enacted, a total of $21,223,473, or an average of over $1,000,000 a year. The government claims the banker and industrialist has evaded payment of $3,000,000. As the hearing began, the government amended its claim to ask for an additional $9,000 alleged to represent profits on sale of bank stock, which was intended to indicate that the former secretary of the treasury owned bank stock while holding the cabinet post. The treasury secretary is an ex-officio member of the Federal Reserve board on which no member who owns bank stock may serve. Mellon has filed a counter claim alleging overpayment of $139,000 on 1931 taxes and seeks a refund.

A SPECTACULAR break for liberty was made by 31 inmates of the Oklahoma state reformatory at Granite. A tower guard was killed by the prisoners. Thirteen of the convicts were captured within a short time, and posses are engaged in a gigantic man hunt for the remainder. The break folowed investigation into a report of cruel treatment of the inmates. From two smuggled pistols the plot expanded suddenly to its deadly climax. The ring leaders seized a trusty prisoner serving as turnkey, took from him his keys, rounded up all the inside turnkeys and locked them in a cell. The mob then rushed into the visitor's room where they herded about twenty visitors together, and using them as a shield, made their escape. The reformatory is under the administration of Mrs. G. A. Waters, said to be the only woman warden of a male prison in the country.

A NEW assault on Germany's unemployment problem is announced by Nazi leaders, who will put their plan into effect on April 1. The scheme, the most drastic yet announced, will force most young people to give up their paying jobs and join the government labor service which will send them to construction projects, "voluntary" labor camps, and to farms.

In this way, positions will be opened for older men and those with dependents. All jobs for persons under twenty-five will be state-controlled, and the entire labor market will be under Nazi domination. Jobless at the present time are estimated at 2,000,000. Another feature of the campaign is the setting of a definite goal of 800,000 as the number to be left without work as "chronically unemployed."

STEPS to curb the inroads of Japanese landholders in the rich hemp growing province of Davao are being taken by the Philippine government. Strict application of insular laws governing land holdings by aliens will be made, according to Eulogio Rodriguez, secretary of agriculture, who schemes a wholesale cancellation of subleases of public lands, which he maintains are illegal. A recent survey, Rodrigues asserts, shows the Japanese control 126,000 acres in the province, and that leases to 64,372 acres are illegally held.

BRUNO HAUPTMANN will die in the electric chair at Trenton, N. J., during the week of March 18, unless attorneys secure a stay of execution by filing an appeal. The prisoner showed no trace of emotion as the jurors announced their verdict and did not break under the strain until after Justice Trenchard had pronounced sentence, and he was returned to his cell.

The jurors required more than 12 hours to reach their verdict. Two of the women were said to have held out for a recommendation of mercy which would have resulted in a life sentence for the man accused of the murder of the Lindbergh baby, but there was no mention of mercy when the verdict was read.

Forty-eight hours after his conviction, Hauptmann was taken to the state prison at Trenton, N. J., where he was entered as convict No. 17,400. A strict censorship has been clamped down as far as his activities are concerned. Every precaution is being taken to prevent his escape, a special guard has been put over the prisoner, and two men are stationed in the lookout towers armed with riot guns, tear gas and revolvers.

REALM LEADER HITLER refused to exercise his prerogative of mercy and two Berlin society women were beheaded by the official executioner for divulging military secrets. Another woman and a Polish nobleman were sentenced to life 'imprisonment' at hard work.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Slayton—The Slayton Civic and Commerce Association was organized here with an original membership of 80. Judge G. J. Kolander was named president.

Detroit Lakes—A. C. Knudson, democratic candidate for lieutenant governor in the last state election, was re-elected mayor here for the sixth consecutive term.

Windom—Expenditures of approximately $7,000 for buses to carry pupils of the Windom district to and from school was recommended to the school board by a special committee.

Minneapolis—A six weeks' experimental training school for unemployed young men is to be opened under a plan arranged by six Minneapolis industries in co-operation with the Y.M.C.A.

Redwood Falls—The city council has been asked to purchase land and establish a municipal athletic field upon the tract. The American Legion post is one of the sponsors of the project.

Anoka—Decision to rebuild their church, burned in 1930, was made by members of the Congressional church here. The new structure, to be erected on the old site, will cost approximately $12,500.

Moorhead—Herb Crompton, catcher for the 1934 Fargo-Moorhead Northern League champions, will go to New Orleans club of the Southern Association, manager Jack Knight of the Twins announced.

Chatfield—Sixteen Chatfield couples have been married more than 50 years each, residents here discovered this week after Galesville, Wis., reported it had eight couples wed past the half-century mark.

Bird Island—The Bird Island Co-operative Creamery Association observed the twentieth anniversary of its founding with an all-day celebration in connection with the annual business meeting.

Red Wing—Henry Swanson of Minneapolis was elected president and St. Cloud was chosen the 1936 convention city at final business sessions of the Minnesota Grocers and Retail Merchants association.

Stillwater—The Last Buddies' Bully Beef club, direct descendant of the original Last Man's club, will hold its annual dinner here with Charles M. Lockwood, sole survivor of the Last Man's club, as guest of honor.

Stillwater—State leaders of all political faiths passed before the casket of George H. Sullivan to look for the last time at the veteran statesman who served continuously for 27 years in the Minnesota senate. He died February 16.

Winona—The Oaks Night club at Minnesota City, seven miles west of here, was destroyed by fire with loss estimated at $30,000. One thousand dollars in cash hidden in an upstairs bedroom and 25 cases of whisky was included in the loss.

St. Paul—Minnesota state income taxpayers wondering about the delay in getting blanks are advised that there's no rush in getting their 1934 returns in. The deadline, by law, is March 15. But Carl E. Bashe, state income tax supervisor, explained there will be a liberal extension pending action by the legislature to increase rates in the upper brackets. The extension is likely to go beyond May 1.

St. Paul—There will be no open reason for the trapping of muskrats this spring, it was announced following a meeting of the Minnesota Conservation commission. Action to close the season was taken after commissioners heard results of a survey conducted by the division of game and fish, which revealed critical conditions in most parts of the state relative to a satisfactory muskrat population.

Duluth—Plans for construction of a $3,000,000 bridge connecting Duluth with Superior were discussed in St. Paul by a delegation from Duluth meeting with N. W. Elsberg, state highway commissioner. The group considered whether the finances for the proposed project should be sought from PWA funds or whether it can be made a joint proposition between the Minnesota and Wisconsin highway departments.

Minneapolis—Nine more counties in Minnesota were added to the designated drouth area eligible for livestock feed relief, L. P. Zimmerman, acting relief administrator announced in stating there are now 68 counties where such relief can be distributed. The counties added are Kittson, Mahnomen, Pennington, Polk, LeSueur, Rock, Rice, Brown and Dakota. Under present rules the farmers in these counties can secure relief administration loans up to $25 a month, if they do not have more than 10 units of livestock, and the loans can be repaid with labor.

Zumbrota—Revealed by the thawing of a snowbank in which she apparently met death from freezing on New Year's eve, the body of Miss Inga Strand, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Erick Strand, farm residents near here, was found by a posse of 80 Zumbrota residents and farmers searching for the missing girl. Discovery of the body gave the frantic parents the first news they have had of their daughter since she telephoned them from Zumbrota New Year's eve after returning from Minneapolis.

Famed Mounted Police Strictly Up to Date

Today, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police use more motor cars and motor cycles than horses. Their detectives are skilled in finger-prints and the science of ballistics. Canada's Scotland Yard is armed with all that the modern world knows of criminal psychology and methods of detection.

The one-time riders of the plains have been developed into a federal police, charged with the enforcement of the criminal code in six of Canada's nine provinces, and with the enforcement of federal statutes throughout the whole dominion.

Changed conditions in living present the police with new crime problems. Fewer cattle thieves but more pay roll bandits. Fewer Indian raids but the mystery of feuds begun in Europe culminating in a series of murders in the New world. The tentacles of the drug traffic laid hold on city life. Gangsters, bootleggers, "big shots" of the underworld appeared.

At the same time, along the frozen shores of Hudson bay in the Yukon and the far twilit Arctic, which electricity, airplanes, radio have invaded but failed to conquer, the mounted patrols on snowshoes and dog sleds keep order and a benign surveillance over all.

And the tradition they get their man goes on, upheld by the records of scores of recent crimes on file at headquarters in Ottawa.—Dorothy Giles in Cosmopolitan Magazine.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, which he names "Penelope," in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. Ten-year-old Penelope is given into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin. At a baseball game a ball strikes Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin retires from business, wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for his daughter when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" was in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is won over despite Nance's hard-boiled exterior.

"A normal weight, your honor." He took the girl's hand and counted her pulse. Then he took a stethescope from his pocket, placed it against her left breast and listened. Her pulse and heart beat normally, your honor, and from her appearance of general good health we have no reason to suspect pulmonary trouble. Her skin is clear, soft and smooth; it is free from blemishes—another indication of good health. Her hair is fine and lustrous; not dry and lifeless, as is the case of a person of pronounced psychopathic tendencies. Her eyes are full, lambent, kindly, intelligent. Her brow is full, broad and of medium height, her head a little larger than that of the average woman, and she is broad between the ears—because, as she has brains, nature ordained that she should have room for them. She is neatly dressed and decidedly not a slattern. She gives no indication of dissipation—drugs or alcohol. But mark her nose. It is a grand wreck. A nose like that would cause a continuous mental conflict in any woman.

"But for this lamentable facial defect, this girl would be beautiful. Perhaps she remembers, or used to remember, herself as beautiful or attractive; then this accident occurred and lo, she became an ugly duckling. She brooded upon her misfortune; she wept over it, doubtless she thought it very hard that God should afflict her so. Doubtless the knowledge that she was an object of curiosity or derision to strangers and repugnance to her friends made of her a gloomy, depressed recluse. Who knows what wild, desperate and desolate thoughts she became a prey to? Mental conflicts undoubtedly were at work—an impulse to run away, to hide herself, countered by the natural impulse to make the best of the situation, to be brave, to pretend she was not different.

"In the case of a girl whose mind and nerves had been thus harassed over a long period, a new sorrow, constituting a definite mental shock, even if of no great magnitude, might nevertheless be sufficient to bring about the condition of dissociation of personality which I have described."

"Anything else, Doctor Burt?"

"I have given a concise and general outline of the case as it presents itself to me, your honor. This defendant should have treatment. It is quite possible to cure her and I am morally certain I could do so. Her saddle nose can be repaired. I have a very good friend, a specialist in plastic surgery, and I know he would be willing to help, without charge, to make a swan of this ugly duckling."

"And you think you would make her over into a responsible moral citizen?"

"I think so, your honor."

"How would she support herself during the period of treatment? By theft —or worse?" The judge glanced at Nance Belden. "How do you support yourself, young woman?"

"I carry my own check-book," the girl replied.

"You have a private income?"

"Sure, old thing."

"What is its source?"

"I don't know. On the first of every month somebody puts some money in the bank for me and I check against it."

"And that's all you know about it, eh?"

"Sometimes I can remember, but I can't now. It's the time I can't remember that raises h—l with me, Judge. I don't know what name to sign to my checks then or I forget I have a checking account. Then I get hard up and steal."

"How truly remarkable, Miss Belden! Have you ever issued any checks that bounced back on you?"

"Say, are you trying to kid me, Whiskers?"

The judge ignored this obvious contempt of court. "I suppose you have had many sweethearts, Miss Belden?"

Nance Belden's scornful laughter filled the courtroom. "Oh, Judge, you're precious. What sort of a man would pick me for a sweetheart, I ask you? Be yourself, Judge. Now you tell one."

"Why not?" the judge pursued remorselessly.

"Well, maybe because nobody ever asked me," the girl assured him with simple directness. "I don't mind admitting I'd like to have a nice sweetie if I could find one, but what the h—l's the use trying? I'd only have him a little while; then he'd get ashamed of me. What's the use bothering myself? I know a blind fellow that's mad about me. I've often thought of taking the poor gazabo on for my steady sweetie, but he makes me so sad I know it wouldn't last. He has that funny staring look, and when he walks with his arms held straight out, it just breaks my heart."

"Where does he live?"

"God knows—now. I was taking care of him when I got pinched. You see, Judge, I took him to a doctor to see if something couldn't be done for his poor eyes, and the doctor said he could be cured, but it would be expensive. He'd have to go east to a very noted specialist, who would charge a lot for the operation. Well, I paid that doctor his bill and that left me short."

"Did the same doctor say anything to you about your nose?"

"Yes, he said he could cure that himself, and to come in when I was ready and he'd put me in a hospital and operate. Gosh, it's some baby, isn't it, Judge?"

"How did it happen?"

"I don't know."

"You don't know anything, do you?"

"Yes, I know something."

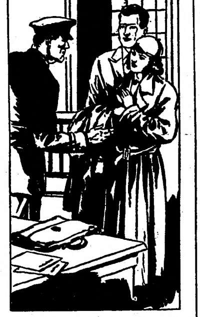
"What is it?"

"You haven't the slightest intention of agreeing with Steve. That sheep-faced mutt, Blethen, has given you an earful. You're one of these judges that believes what he wants to believe. Steve's told you I'm nutty, but Steve's wrong. I'm not. Steve's just a good fellow trying to give the little girl a hand."

"So you believe you're quite sane?"

"Of course I am. There's nothing wrong with me except a bad memory, and a beak like the American eagle."

Stephen sighed and shook his head, seeing which, Nance crossed to his side, put her arm around his neck, and laid her cheek against his. "Steve, darling, you'd be a wonderful sweetheart," she assured him, and laughed.



"If You're a Good Girl, Nance, I'll Not Put the Cuffs on You."

"Your honor," Stephen pleaded, "can't you see she's—"

"I can see she's as intelligent as you say she is, Doctor. In fact, she's more than that. She is very artfully simulating mental irresponsibility by attempting to spoil the good work of her expert witness. It is my conviction that Doctor Blethen was right when he told me she was the smartest, most adroit criminal type he had ever examined. I believe, with him, that she is incorrigible, and incorrigible criminals should be set apart from society."

He turned to his clerk. "I believe the sentence was two years in San Quentin penitentiary. Verify it and prepare the commitment."

"Good G—d," Stephen Burt cried sharply, "you are not going to commit this social outrage, your honor?"

The judge eyed him sourly. "Doctor Burt, you will apologize to the court for that language or I shall fine you fifty dollars for contempt of court."

Stephen Burt drew a fifty-dollar bill from his pocketbook and tossed it on the table.

"Court is adjourned," his honor mumbled, much embarrassed.

The policeman who had brought Nance Belden into Superior court approached her. "If you're a good girl, Nance, I'll not put the cuffs on you."

"You didn't put them on me coming here; so why should you think it necessary now?"

"You're an important prisoner now, Nance. The judge just gave you two years in San Quentin, didn't he?"

Nance Belden turned. "Did he, Steve?"

The doctor nodded miserably.

"And I'll not see you any more, Steve?"

"Of course you shall Nance. I'll come to see you from time to time. I haven't finished with you—not by a long shot, my dear. Tyrrell, you're still retained on this case."

The lawyer waved his hand hopelessly. "We're licked," he stated, without emotion. "This is one hand no lawyer can beat, and I wouldn't try." And Tyrrell shook hands with Stephen and Nance Belden, put on his hat and strode out.

"Come, girlie," the policeman suggested.

"Well," the girl declared, with an effort at nonchalance, "this is a tough break for old lady Belden, isn't it?" She smiled upon him patronizingly. "You're a good scout, Steve. Thanks a lot for all you've done and tried to do. You meant well, but at that I think the old scientific hooey has got you a bit cuckoo, too. I stood for it a while because I thought his nibs might fall for it, but when I saw you weren't going to get to first base with the big boob I called it no contest." She thrust out her little hand. "Well good-by, Steve. I suppose I'm keeping you from other nuts."

She came close to him and looked up at him wistfully; so he stooped and kissed her. At once tears suffused her eyes. "You don't mind what I look like, do you, Doctor Burt? You're kind enough not to feel sorry for me."

Amazingly she had changed—slipped out of one personality into the other as one slips out of a coat. "Will you do something for me, Doctor?" she continued, and he saw that she was all nerves now. "I'm looking for a girl named Penelope. I can't remember her last name, but I do wish you'd try to find her for me, even with so little to go on."

"Where does she live, Nance?"

"Out there, somewhere."

"You've been reading a poem, I think, Nance—a poem that runs:

> And you, my sweet Penelope, out there
> somewhere you wait for me,
> With buds of roses in your hair and
> kisses on your mouth.

She trembled with eagerness. "Why, you know her, Doctor. That's the Penelope I'm looking for."

"Oh, if that's the Penelope, why of course I'll find her for you. Good-by, my poor dear girl, and remember to look for me at the gate the day you're released from San Quentin."

A deputy sheriff took Nance Belden to San Quentin and was decent enough to refrain from handcuffing her en route. The girl was not particularly sad. Indeed she appeared to enjoy the brief trip across the bay in the ferry boat, and the half hour's journey by train to Greenbrae, where the prison bus meets arriving deputy sheriffs and their charges. Even the first glimpse of the penitentiary did not disturb her, for the road that enters the grounds is flanked by the homes of the officials and guards, and well-kept lawns and flower gardens give no hint of the gloom that lies in waiting beyond the main gate.

She was taken first to the warden's office, from here she was passed on to another officer where she was measured by the Bertillon system, thumb-printed and photographed, after which a guard escorted her over to the women's wing of the prison.

The building in which female convicts are housed at San Quentin would readily be mistaken for a hospital were it not for the bars at the windows and the high metal mesh fence that surrounds the grounds. Two young women were hoeing in the flower beds; along the cement walks other women strolled, singly or in pairs, chatting and enjoying the sunshine and fresh salt breeze that blew in from the bay, less than fifty yards distant. About two hundred yards off the beach, some men in skiffs were fishing for striped bass, and with the exception of a guard in a kiosk at the entrance to the grounds, one would have to search in vain for the slightest hint of official surveillance.

"So this is San Quentin," Nance remarked gaily to her escort. "Not so bad, my boy, not so bad."

The guard did not answer. He knew that the realization of restriction rather than high walls constitutes the horror of prison life. He took her into a small lobby, where a pleasant-faced, middle-aged matron greeted the girl cordially.

"Come with me, Nance," she said, and led the girl into her office, where she took charge of Nance's suitcase, opened it and searched it thoroughly.

"You have nice clothes and toilet articles," she commented. "Have you more clothes at home? These will scarcely last two years."

"Yes. May I send for them?" asked Nance eagerly.

"Of course you may. The women inmates of San Quentin are not required to wear a prison uniform, although we furnish one if necessary."

"Hurrah for our side," Nance replied cheerfully.

"You read and write, of course Nance?"

"Do I look like a dumb-bell?"

"Well,"—patiently—"here are the prison rules. Read them, and then obey them strictly. Failure to obey them will lead to disciplinary measures, and repeated infractions may lead to solitary confinement. If you prove to be a good girl, you'll receive credit for good behavior in the shape of a reduction in the length of your sentence. Good conduct will also render you eligible for parole after you have served half of your sentence; if you should get into trouble, tell me about it first. I try to give my girls a square deal, but very few of them try to give me one. If you should think you're not being treated fairly, I'll always be glad to discuss your grievances with you. You will meet some terrible women here and you will also meet some who, had they been spared the unfortunate circumstances which conducted to bring them here, would be ladies. Conviction doesn't mean that a person is devoid of all human attributes. You will keep your person and your cell clean. You will not be locked in your cell unless you misbehave. Your cell—it is really a nice little room—will be sacred to you alone, and you will have the freedom of the building and grounds. I will assign you to a cell and show you up to it. Then you can change your clothes and come down and join the women in the recreation room yonder."

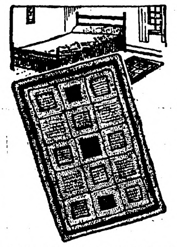
NURSERY BLOCKS CROCHETED RUG

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



This crocheted rug called "Nursery Blocks" is made up of small blocks in different color combinations, assembled and then a border crocheted all around. Each block measures about 8 inches and outer border 4 inches, making a finished size 33 by 50 inches, and requires about 5 lbs. of rag strip material.

A rug made of blocks and then assembled enables you to make a rug in any size or color desired. Make the blocks in any size. Arrange color scheme to suit particular room in which it is to be used, or make it of hit and miss colors and use it anywhere. Either way it remains a practical rug, and easily made up in spare time.

Full instructions for this rug and 25 others can be found in rug book No. 25, containing crocheted and braided rugs, also instructions for crochet stitches used and how to prepare your rag materials for use. This book will be sent to you postpaid upon receipt of 15c.

CHINESE DINNER PARTY

An English woman living in Siam writes about a Chinese dinner. "Before the meal hot scented cloths were handed round on which the guests wiped their hands. No plates, knives, or forks were provided. The food was placed in a big dish in the middle of the table, and the guests helped themselves. For soup a china spoon and individual bowl were provided. Meat was taken out of the dish with chop-sticks. The following was the menu: (1) Crab meat and potato fritters; (2) shark's fin soup; (3) pigeon soup; (4) duck skin (the skin alone is roasted and eaten with a red sauce between bread); (5) pigeon's eggs stewed with mushrooms; (6) turtle soup with lotus seeds; (7) mushrooms stuffed with fish; (8) baked fish with ginger sauce; (9) rice with dried fish eggs, ginger, etc.; (10) rich custard, with fresh fruit and jelly; (11) China tea in bowls without milk or sugar.

"Hot scented cloths were again handed round, and this time they were much needed."

Constipated?

The doctors say . . . Use liquid treatment

Here is the soundest advice anyone can give on the subject of laxatives. It is based on medical opinion. We want you to have the benefit of this information no matter what laxative you may buy:

The secret of real relief from constipation is reduced dosage. You can't regulate the bowels unless you can regulate the help you give them. That is why doctors use a liquid laxative; the dose can be measured to a drop.

Avoid laxatives that you can't cut down in dosage; especially those that seem to require larger doses than when you began their use.

Under the doctor's care, you usually get a liquid laxative. The right liquid laxative gives the right kind of help, and the right amount of help. Smaller and smaller doses—until you don't need any.

The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara—natural laxatives that form no habit.

Modern Three-Minute Way to Ease Sore Throat

Ease Pain, Rawness, Soreness Almost Instantly

Here's a safe, modern and effective way to relieve sore throat. A way that eases the pain, rawness and irritation in as little as two or three minutes. Many doctors advise it and millions are following this way. Try it.

All you do is crush and stir 3 BAYER Aspirin Tablets in ⅓ glass of water and gargle with it twice—as pictured here. (If you have signs of a cold, take BAYER Aspirin and drink plenty of water.)

Get real BAYER Aspirin Tablets for this purpose. They disintegrate quickly and completely, making a gargle without irritating particles.

BAYER Aspirin prices have been decisively reduced, so there's no point now in accepting other than the real Bayer article you want.

Liquor and gas do not mix. Each may be in a separate container, but still are bad company I have no sympathy nor mercy for a drunken auto driver. The laws governing this type of convicted criminal are too lenient. Judges should enforce the laws to the limit.

The killing of innocent citizens by drunken drivers should not be permitted. But when is a man drunk? That should not be the question. A man who has had only one drink of liquor cannot have the same judgement or control that he would have had no liquor been consumed. I can see no plausible argument of defense. It is dangerous to drive under the influence of liquor. It seems hard to get this lesson across to the people.

Drinking and driving are two very separate operations that have nothing in common, and they should not be indulged in at the same time.

Delinquent Tax List

For Marshall County, Minnesota, For The Year 1933

State of Minnesota,
County of Marshall—ss.

District Court,
14th Judicial District.

THE STATE OF MINNESOTA to all Persons, Companies, and Corporations, who have or claim any estate, right, title, or interest in, claim to, or lien upon, any of the several pieces or parcels of land in the list hereto attached described:

The list of taxes and penalties on real property for the County of Marshall remaining delinquent on the first Monday in January, 1935, has been filed in the office of the Clerk of District Court of said County, of which that hereto attached is a copy.

THEREFORE, You and each of you, are hereby required to file in the office of said Clerk, on or before the twentieth day after the publication of this notice and list, your answer in writing, setting forth any objection or defense you may have to the taxes, or any part thereof, upon any parcel of land described in said list, in, to, or on which you may have or claim any estate, right, title, interest, claim or lien, and in default thereof, judgment will be entered against such parcel for the taxes on said list appearing against it, and for all penalties, interest and costs.

You are further notified that at the expiration of five years from the date of the tax judgment sale pursuant to such judgment, each parcel of land sold at such sale, and not redeemed, will become and be the absolute property of the purchaser or of the State, or of his or its assigns, without further right of redemption and without any notice of expiration of the time to redeem the same, "except as provided by Chapter 366, Laws 1933."

Dated February 4th, 1935.

OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNTY BOARD, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA

Meeting held February 5th, 1935 at 10 o'clock A. M. All members present.

Minutes of meeting held January 8th, 9th and 10th read and approved except that resolution approving securities for county deposits offered by the Northwestern Bank & Trust Company of Minneapolis, be corrected to read $69,000.00 instead of $29,000.00.

Commissioner A. W. Sommers offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

BE IT RESOLVED: That $750.00 be appropriated to Marshall County Agricultural Association for the express purposes of advertising the resources of the county through 4-H Club work and other methods.

Commissioner Arthur Anderson seconded the motion and the same being put, was duly carried.

Time for hearing on petition of Newton William Taon to be set off from School District 32 to School District 15 be postponed to March 5th at 2 o'clock P. M. and petition of N[illegible]'s Malm to be set off from School District 125 to School District 86 be held March 5th at 2 o'clock P. M.

Commissioner Ole Bergman offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

BE IT RESOLVED: That the National Surety Corporation bond in the sum of $3,000.00 furnished the county by Mattson Brothers, publishers of the Warren Sheaf, a legal newspaper published in the county of Marshall, be approved.

Commissioner Arthur Anderson seconded the motion and the same being put, was duly carried.

Commissioner A. W. Sommers offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

That, United States Treasury notes Series C-1937 in the sum of $10,000.00 and United States Treasury notes Series B-1938 in the sum of $3,000.00 offered by Peoples State Bank of Warren; and, that, United States 2 1-8% Treasury notes, Series A-1939 due 6-15-39 in the sum of $20,000.00 offered by the Midland National Bank & Trust Company of Minneapolis; and that, the 4% Consolidated Federal Farm Loan bonds, the Twelve Federal Land Banks 1944-16 Nos. 6062C-1D-5E-6F-7H-8J-9K-10L @ $1,000.00 each offered by State Bank of Warren as security for public deposits of this county.

Commissioner Ole Bergman seconded the motion and the same being put, was duly carried.

Commissioner J. J. Pagnac offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

BE IT RESOLVED: That the bill of Louis M. Olson, Register of Deeds, for back pay on a fee basis in the sum of $1,036.28, less the voluntary reduction of $400.00 which he has agreed to take, leaving a balance of $636.28, be approved.

Commissioner Ole Bergman seconded the motion and the same being put, was duly carried.

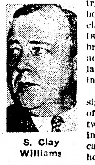
Breach Widens Between Administration and Labor—Hauptmann Sentenced to Death—Inquiries Into Causes of Macon Disaster Get Under Way.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

©, Western Newspaper Union.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT extended no olive branches toward the American Federation of Labor when he signed the cigarette industry code, which labor leaders had declared was "unsatisfactory." The breach between the administration and labor is daily growing wider.



S. Clay Williams

The code, finally signed after months of argument between the tobacco industry and labor, calls for a forty-hour week and minimum wages from 25 to 40 cents an hour. Labor leaders also objected to the presence of S. Clay Williams, administration board chairman, who they declare is not in sympathy with labor. The President issued a curt statement informing the federation council that Williams' services had been satisfactory and that he had no intention of removing him without cause.

The executive council of the federation, composed of William Green and presidents of the federation of seventeen international unions, states that some present administration labor policies are bringing increased unrest among workers which may reach the danger point of widespread strikes unless corrected.

Thus far, the President seems to have had the best of the argument. Labor leaders, however, are expected to push the fight for a "prevailing wage" clause in work relief legislation, thus endangering the administration program.

INQUIRIES into the causes of the "quiver" which ripped away the two gas cells and caused the giant dirigible "Macon" to plunge into the Pacific have been started. Even the surviving 81 officers and men of the "Sky Queen" are not certain just what caused the catastrophe, although Lieut. Com. H. V. Wiley, survivor of the Akron disaster and master of the Macon, was said to have "some ideas" about it. His findings will be placed before the board of inquiry.

Some hints were made about structural weakness of the $2,450,000 craft, but naval officers refused to discuss the subject. In Washington President Roosevelt said there would be no immediate move to replace the ship.

Survivors of the crash told a dramatic story of heroism. Cruising along at a speed of 63 knots, the ship twice lowered its elevation to avoid rain squalls. A short jar was felt, the ship began to take a bow-up position, and Commander Wiley received a report that one of the 12 helium gas cells was gone. The Macon then rose rapidly to 4,600 feet, its nose sticking up at a sharp angle and then slowly sank toward the ocean as the crew made frantic efforts to right the lurching craft.

As it hit the ocean the crew slid down ropes or dived into the heavy swells. Men swam through flame where flares had ignited oil and gasoline, others rescued companions whose lifebelts were lost or broken in long leaps into the sea. The sailors watched the ship crumble under the waves and at last disappear. Only two men were lost. Cruisers rushed to the scene and picked up the survivors.

BRUNO HAUPTMANN will die in the electric chair at Trenton, N. J., during the week of March 18, unless attorneys secure a stay of execution by filing an appeal. The prisoner showed no trace of emotion as the jurors announced their verdict and did not break under the strain until after Justice Trenchard had pronounced sentence, and he was returned to the cell. There, his iron will gave way and he sobbed as he sat on his hard iron cot.

The jurors required more than twelve hours to reach their verdict. Two of the women were said to have held out for a recommendation of mercy which would have resulted in a life sentence for the man accused of the murder of the Lindbergh baby, but there was no mention of mercy when the verdict was read.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT eked out a close victory in the senate appropriations committee, when the amendment to cut $2,000,000,000 off the administration's $4,880,000,000 work relief bill was defeated by the close vote of 12 to 11. Administration forces scored another victory by the adoption of a compromise amendment to the proposal of Senator Pat McCarran for the payment of prevailing wages on all federal projects. Witnesses testified that McCarran's amendment would have increased the cost of putting 3,500,000 men to work by more than $2,000,000,000 and would have defeated the purpose of the bill.

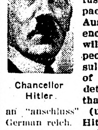
McCarran did not press his amendment in committee when a substitute was offered, but insisted that he will do so on the senate floor. The fight the American Federation of Labor is making on this point is expected to have considerable influence with a number of senators, who fear the wrath of their labor constituents.

The substitute, proposed by Senator Richard B. Russell, and adopted by a vote of 14 to 9, provides that the President shall establish the prevailing rates of pay whenever an investigation discloses that the federal wages of $50 a month are affecting adversely the rates on work of a similar nature. The matter is entirely up to the President, however, and he can take any action or withhold any investigation, just as he sees fit, which may mean much or nothing.

Observers foresee a rocky road ahead for the bill. There is certain to be considerable opposition to it in the senate, although administration leaders claim they have enough votes rounded up to insure victory.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI found Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia is a man not easily frightened. Il Duce's demand for indemnities for Italian colonials killed on the borders of Italian Somaliland were politely, but firmly, refused. The Ethiopians, undismayed by the vast preparations Italy has been making, declared they would fight to their last drop of blood to preserve their independence, that they would not apologize or make reparations for what they maintain is merely defense of their own country. This puts Mussolini in an embarrassing position. He must either send an expeditionary force against the Ethiopians, or back down after mobilizing troops, and that would be a bitter pill for the Italian dictator to swallow.

CHANCELLOR HITLER emerged from his hermit-like seclusion with a number of counter-proposals which he offered in reply to the Franco-British proposals. Der Fuehrer, a government spokesman stated, would definitely refuse to join any pact guaranteeing Austria's independence unless "the will of the Austrian people is first consulted" by means of a plebiscite to determine whether that nation desires an "anschluss" (union) with the German reich. Hitler will also follow Poland's stand, and will have nothing to do with the French-sponsored eastern securities agreement "if it is to be based on mutual assistance," although he is willing to join an air pact provided it allows Germany an air force equal to Soviet Russia's. Hitler seems particularly anxious to avoid any agreement which would bind Germany to Russia and perhaps result in aiding Russia in event of war between that country and Japan.



Chancellor Hitler

From the tone of Hitler's demands, he evidently did not entirely believe that France and Great Britain were not preparing some trap for him. The Hitler reply demands that Germany must be given absolute equality of armaments before anything else can be discussed, and that Germany will negotiate an air pact if her relations with Soviet Russia are considered, and if England, France, Belgium and Italy agree to consult each other before any action is taken. He also insists that the general question of disarmament is allied with the air pact and must be settled at the same time.

When notified that Der Reichfuehrer would make reservations, official British sources indicated that Germany must either accept or reject the agreement in its entirety, and stated partial acceptance would not be agreeable to Great Britain. All of which may be true, or it may be just the old horse-trading spirit which seems to break out in the best diplomatic circles.

DISPATCHES from Bolivia, which must be taken with several grains of salt, indicate that the Bolivians are meeting with success in defending Villa Montes, their last important stronghold in the disputed Gran Chaco, and that the scissors-like offensive of General Estigarribia, Paraguayan commander in chief, is seriously menaced. It was reported the Bolivians, struggling desperately to relieve the pressure on Villa Montes, had defeated the Paraguayans in the Nancorainza sector "after three days of bitter fighting." This offensive, it was thought, might force Estigarribia's northern wing to retreat.

FRANCIS BIDDLE and his national labor relations board took a hand in the controversy between the administration and the American Federation of Labor by offering a suggestion that section 7-A of the recovery act "should be clarified." William Green and his fellow leaders of the federation have long contended that the clause, guaranteeing employees rights to bargain collectively, should be enlarged to specify that the majority of employees should have the right to choose the spokesmen for all employees, and that company unions should be barred. The national labor board, which submitted a report of its first six months' work, defended the majority rule at length. As is well known, the administration desires section 7-A continued unchanged in the new NRA law which is in the process of making.

MORE trouble looms for the blue eagle, according to Senators McCarran and Nye, who introduced a resolution for a senatorial investigation of NRA officials, whom they charge with widespread violation of law, corruption and graft. The senators requested that it be referred to the commerce committee of which Senator Copeland is chairman and of which Nye is a member. Administration forces, it is said, will put up a fight to have it steered into the hands of the finance committee, which is packed with old line Democrats, and where it would be permitted an early death. The resolution caused considerable flurry among New Dealers. Although Nye has been a constant foe of NRA. McCarran's attack comes as a surprise to the administration forces.

WHETHER he desires it, President Roosevelt will have to face an early test of his strength against that of bonus payment advocates. If present signs are read correctly. Although bonus leaders have been unable to agree among themselves they insist the plan be brought up for consideration. Some administration leaders have expressed belief such a step is necessary to prevent a revolt on major administration legislation.

Wright Patman

The controversy over possible methods of payment is becoming increasingly bitter. Representative Patman, Texas Democrat, author of a bill to pay the bonus certificates with an issue of new currency, gave out a statement asserting that Commander Frank N. Belgrano of the American Legion wanted to finance payment with a bond issue because the bank of which he is vice president receives $1,350,000 in interest annually on $45,000,000 worth of government bonds.

The American Liberty league also issued a statement applauding the President's stand against paying the bonus. The league said the Legion backed Vinson bill to finance the bonus through the sale of bonds was "the lesser evil," but asked congress to defeat both it and the Patman measure.

Its statement also said immediate payment would encourage a drive for pensions "involving huge additional costs for an indefinite period of years."

GEN. ROBERT E. WOOD, head of a Chicago mail order house, has been appointed chairman of the special business committee to advise the administration in spending the $4,880,000,000 work relief fund. This act was interpreted as definite assurance the government does not intend to compete with private industry in its make-work program.

NINE old gentlemen of vast dignity, comprising the United States Supreme court, conferred together for five hours Saturday. Then, through Clerk Charles C. Cropley, Chief Justice Hughes announced that there would be no decisions handed down on the following Monday. Nothing was said about the rest of the week, but it was assumed the ruling on the gold clause cases would not be handed down before February 18. It was thought by the well informed that the delay was due to the slowness with which the dissenters were preparing their views.

Meanwhile anxiety over the matter, at least in government circles was growing less daily. Attorney General Cummings spent two hours with President Roosevelt going over the plans which have been drawn up for immediate action in the event that the decision goes against the government.

STRONG evidence that the government, even in the event of an adverse decision on the gold clauses will keep the $35 an ounce price for gold and 59-cent dollar was contained in a statement from Secretary Morgenthau. The treasury chief stated:

"The country can go about its business with assurances that we are prepared to manage the external value of the dollar as long as it may be necessary."

Mr Morgenthau disclosed that the 2,000 million dollar stabilization fund would be used if necessary to keep the dollar on an even keel until congress can take remedial action, by passing the new laws which are now being prepared by the treasury.

BANKING EVOLUTION

By R. S. HECHT
President American Bankers Association

BANKING at one time was a private business, but more recently has developed into a profession—a semi-public profession. This change has not come suddenly but is the result of an evolutionary process. Banking has grown and changed with the growth and change of our country.

R. S. HECHT

The banker who has survived the trials and tribulations of the past few years has proven himself a man of courage and ability, and we may well expect him to meet the problems that lie before him with resolution and sound judgment.

Unfortunately it has become the fashion to blame on our banking system all the troubles which the depression has brought. As a consequence we hear much of needed reform of banking by law. No one will deny that certain defects have developed in our existing banking laws which need correction, and that certain abuses were committed which no one wishes to defend or have remain possible in the future. Never before were bankers more determined than they are today to bring about whatever changes in our banking system are called for by the public welfare.

The Basis of Good Laws

The best results can and will be accomplished by normal processes and gradual adjustments of our present private banking structure—suitably supervised by proper authority—rather than by the passage of still more drastic laws, offering panaceas in the form of more government-owned or government-controlled financial organizations.

Lasting laws relating to any phase of human need are formed and modelled in the rough school of practical human experience and are usually the result of sound evolutionary processes rather than of sudden impulses to change fundamental principles.

If we analyze the new banking picture which has developed during the past eighteen months, we cannot help but arrive at the conclusion that evolutionary changes which have taken place in banking, and the economic life of the nation of which it is a part, have justified much of the banking legislation recently passed. As we look ahead and consider the new problems which are facing us we must inevitably come to the conclusion that some further changes in our banking laws will become necessary.

Voluntary Reform

It is not enough that bankers merely acquiesce in banking imposed by law. Zeal for evolutionary banking reform must be more aggressive than that. Banking practice itself, without compulsion of law, can and should reflect the changes and lessons of the times and difficulties through which the nation has passed and, even to a greater extent than law, render banking more truly a good public servant by voluntary self-reform. In no small measure is this accomplished by the better training of the members of the banking fraternity and by instilling constantly higher ideals in those who are ultimately responsible for bank management.

As we march on into the world of tomorrow the banker has a greater opportunity for usefulness than ever before, and I hope that the service he will render to society will be so conscientious, so constructive and so satisfactory as to merit general approval and assure him his logical high place and leadership.

NATIONAL SAVINGS MARK INCREASES

NEW YORK. – The annual savings compilation of the American Bankers Association for the year ending June 30, 1934, shows that for the first time since 1930 total savings in all American banks recorded an annual increase.

A statement by W. Espey Albig, Deputy Manager of the association in charge of its Savings Division in the organization's monthly magazine "Banking," says that savings deposited in banks as of June 30, 1934, gained 3.5 per cent as compared with a year earlier.

"The aggregate is an increase over last year of $742,132,000, the first since the year which closed June 30, 1930," he says. "This is a notable achievement, for the decline since 1930 had been precipitate and all-embracing. In that year savings had reached the all-time high of $28,478,631,000. A year ago the amount was $21,125,534,000, a loss in three years of $7 353,097,000. This year the figure stands at $21,867,666,000.

"Depositors, too, have gained in number, going from 39,262,442 on June 30, 1933, to 39,562,174 on June 30 this year, a gain of 299,732. Four years ago there were 52,729,432 depositors, or one depositor for each 2.3 persons in the country. Now there is one account for each 3.2 persons."

American Bankers' Association President Announces Move to Stimulate Bank Newspaper Advertising

NEW YORK.—Plans for stimulating wider use of informative newspaper advertising by banks in promoting public understanding and confidence in regard to exsiting banking conditions and methods have been announced by R. S. Hecht, President of the American Bankers Association, as a part of his organization's activities in aid of recovery.

A general groundwork was prepared through a nationwide survey of advertising by banks relative to their willingness to extend justifiable loans to industry and trade. This, he said, revealed that a large number in all parts of the country are pursuing aggressive policies along this line and encouraging their customers to develop forward-looking business plans. "It is our aim to aid in fostering this constructive attitude wherever possible," he said.

The association's Advertising Department, under the direct supervision of the general executive officers, has prepared, at the headquarters in New York City, an informative advertising series for the use of member banks in the association to aid them in developing in their own communities better general public understanding regarding banking, Mr. Hecht said.

The Theme of New Advertising

"The underlying theme of this advertising is that sound banking is based on helpful human relations and that it has a unity of interest with the people of its community which binds them together with a common purpose," he said.

"We are confident that if a clear understanding of this is brought home to the people in all our banking communities, it will go far in restoring the public confidence which good banking deserves. A bank in which people deservedly believe is doubly safe. It is to the public interest for the people to have confidence in their banks.

"We feel that bank advertising has a special public duty to perform in this connection under existing conditions. The copy which will be supplied in the service we have developed will not only aid the individual bank in promoting the use of its own facilities but is also aimed to bring about with the aid of newspaper advertising a clearer public viewpoint regarding its essential place in the life of its community."

Mr. Hecht emphasized in regard to the new advertising facilities being offered to the members of the association that they are not a profit making venture and that there is no intention to disturb existing advertising arrangements, the idea being that these institutional services shall supplement rather than replace present plans, or that they will give assistance to member banks lacking satisfactory arrangements.

MANY BANKS LONG LIVED

In the United States—
168 Banks over 100 years old.
2,472 Banks over 50 years old.
10,391 Banks over 25 years old.

There are in the United States 168 banks that have been in continuous existence for more than one hundred years. There are 2,472 banks over fifty years old, while 64% of all the banks in this country, or 10,391, are twenty-five years old or older.

In other words, practically two-thirds of the banks in this country have come through several successive periods of depression and panic, including 1907, 1914, 1920 and 1929-33.

The oldest bank in the country is in Boston, having been chartered February 17, 1784.

In the 64% of banks that are twenty-five years old or older is lodged a major portion of the banking resources of the nation. In commenting recently upon the stability of a great majority of the banks in the United States, Dr. Harold Stonier, Educational Director of the American Bankers Association, said:

"The fact that we have so many banks that have been in existence a long period of years is an eloquent tribute to the genius of American managerial ability, for no other country has experienced such wild gambling eras and resultant periods of business stagnation as those through which our country has passed at frequent intervals during the past century"

NEW WEALTH FROM SOIL

New wealth which comes from the soil is of special interest to those to whom falls the responsibility of maintaining our credit structure.

Unless agriculture is successful farm borrowers cannot ultimately succeed, neither can the banks they serve. Foreclosure sales are not a sound basis for good farming or good banking. Bankers, therefore, are as much interested in the permanent success of the agricultural industry as are the farmers, whether the deposits come directly from farm patrons, or indirectly through the ordinary channels of business.—D. H. Otis, Director of Agriculture, American Bankers Association.

The Milky Way To Health

The Consumers' Council of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, has collected information on the quantity of milk purchased by families with children in public schools in 59 cities of the United States. A considerable number of these families bought no fresh milk at all and the average quantity bought by all was enough for only about one glass per person each day.

A quart of milk a day for every child, or a pint for each adult, is desirable — even necessary for health. Some Minnesota farm families are not using that amount even though the milk is produced at home and might be used in even larger quantities.

No one food in the world can satisfy all the food needs of the human body, but milk comes nearest to doing it. It is most important for its calcium, which is bone building material; its proteins for muscle building; its easily digested fat, and some sugar for body fuel; its vitamins A and G especially, though it contains other vitamins as well.—Eva L. Blair.

Consumer Like An Elephant

At a recent conference on consumer problems, a speaker said, "The consumer is like an elephant—very large, very clumsy, very small eyes, and easily led around by someone one-fiftieth his size, but at least he may go on a rampage. Consumers everywhere are beginning to realize it is their business to know about quality, standards, brands, and all the rest of the factors which mean getting or not getting one's money's worth when purchasing food, clothing or house furnishings and equipment. Consumer power in the last two years has gained. The present economic planning aims to maintain our standard of living and to take care of the problems of the consumer. The Consumers' Council of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the Consumers' Advisory Board of the N. R. A., and the recently established Consumers' Division of the National Emergency Council will examine the operation of codes, marketing agreements, and licenses from the standpoint of consumer interests and to represent the consumer in the formulation of new policies in the recovery program.—Julia O. Newton.

Repairs For Furniture

Loose joints and wooden pulls in furniture can be fastened with glue, prepared as follows: To 1 part of carpenter's flake glue, add 1½ parts hot water. Mix and melt over hot water. Use hot. All old glue must be scraped off. When surfaces are clean and dry, the hot glue may be applied and joints bound with narrow strips of muslin. Too much glue may prevent the parts from coming into contact, so that a joint will not hold well; the parts should be pressed together very firmly, so as to squeeze out as much glue as possible. Allow three or four hours for the glue to dry and then remove bindings and excess glue.—Mary May Miller.

Early Chicks For Fall Eggs

All during October and November, and even in December, I received reports of flocks of pullets that were not laying yet. One way out of that difficulty is to have the chicks hatched earlier, remembering that it takes about 6 months to mature a pullet. If you do your own hatching with hens, you just about have to wait until the hens get ready to sit, which brings some of your chicks out pretty late.

If you buy your chicks you may be more fortunate. But even a warning is necessary here. Put in your order early. No hatchery man likes to hatch chicks on the mere chance that someone may buy them. So your last minute orders are likely to be filled with the tag-ends and left overs. Especially will this be true if the baby chick code is again in force next spring. Under this code you may be sure every possible effort is going to be made to prevent huge surpluses of chicks being hatched. So hatching will run pretty close to the orders received. Decide what time you can best handle your chicks and put in your order soon.

Perhaps your equipment isn't good enough to warrant these early chicks. It is not too late to put brooder houses and the like into good condition. Write to the Bulletin Room, University Farm, St. Paul, if you wish copies of Bulletin 83, Colony Brooder Houses, or Bulletin 163, Chick Equipment.—Cora Cooke.

Those "Protective" Foods

To be fair to ourselves, we need to know and to keep in mind certain principles of diet. To satisfy the needs of the human body, we need foods to build the structure, to give it warmth and energy, and to keep it in good working order. To get enough of the food substance that serves these purposes we draw upon at least five classes of food: milk for one; vegetables and fruits for another; bread and cereals for a third; meat, fish, eggs or cheese for a fourth; and finally, fats and sugars. Because there is little danger of our neglecting bread or meat, nutritionists advise us to make sure, first of all, of the "protective" foods. These are milk, vegetables and fruits, and eggs. These foods give good value in minerals and vitamins and proteins; they "protect" your diet, as they say. But they will leave you short in calories. So you should supplement them with bread and meat and potatoes to make up your calories quota.—Inez Hobart.

Tuberculin Best Aid In Fight On Tuberculosis

Physicians Laud Christmas Seal Campaign To Demonstrate Its Use

Most people who are sick with consumption had the germ of the disease in their bodies for a long time, sometimes for years, before they began to suffer with typical symptoms.

This fact is cited by the Public Health Education Committee of the Minnesota State Medical Association today as good reason for hailing with enthusiasm the new standardized tuberculin developed under the auspices of the National Tuberculin Association.

A standardized tuberculin affords a reliable means of finding the people who are harboring the germ in their bodies long before they show any sign of illness and so by proper measures prevent the illness according to the doctors. As long as we have no actual "cure", that is, a drug or process that will actually kill the germ in the human body and heal its ravages, the use of the tuberculin test as a matter of routine on all children whether they are suspected of having been in contact with tuberculosis or not will help us to recognize the disease at a time when normal resistance of the body can combat the infection.

Parents are especially urged in this bulletin to see that their children are tested to find out this important fact and then promptly placed in anti-tuberculosis regime if the test shows they have been infected.

Tuberculosis should be regarded as a preventable disease, according to the medical authorities, and the tuberculin test is the most valuable means at hand to find infected individuals. It will not prevent the disease as does vaccination against small pox and immunization against diphtheria, but gives us the opportunity to start preventative measures at a time when they will prevent the further development of the disease.

The Christmas Seal program of bringing the test to Minnesota schools is especially lauded by the doctors as the first step in the education of parents in the prevention of tuberculosis. Christmas Seal purchasers who have not yet paid for the Christmas Seals that finance this work are urged to send in their pennies as soon as possible so that the program may be continued without curtailment this year.

GUESSES 15 OF 17 ELECTION WINNERS

Virginia—When Louis Rones of Virginia consults the political oracle, she seldom fails to advise him correctly. With a record as political pronosticator in the past, Rones made 15 correct guesses of winners out of 17 tries in the last election. Although right in his guesser, Rones admitted losing a large number of candidates whom he hoped would win, and for whom he voted as a matter of principle and conscience.

Self Help Is Best Help

It is forecast that the government is going to make a change in its policy toward agaiculture. It will have less to say about what the farmer should do and not do — and will leave more up to the farmer himself.

Progressive American farmers will welcome that change. And they will also welcome the chance it will give them to show the stuff they are made of. Farmers face great problems—and the only way they will ever be satisfactorily solved is by the efforts and work of the farmers themselves. Even if government, by fiat, could make all rosy in the agricultural world, it wold be of small worth if the farmer became a financial and mental dependent in the process.

Today several millions of farmers are banded together in cooperative associations, handling dairy products, cotton, walnuts, wheat and other goods. The co-ops are controlled by the farmers—the reflect farm sentiment and farm ambitions. They represent real private initiative through collective action that doesn't ask for favors, that doesn't depend for existence on government, and that get results. Cooperatives are the best weapons the farmer could have for fighting depression,

Expect Gold Rush In Spring

A rush of gold prospectors, some seeking fortune and others a living wage, soon will head toward the hills of the western states and Alaska to dig and pan the yellow metal. The approach of warmer weather will see prospectors busy in Nevada. Alaska expects a great gold rush in half a dozen fields, with experienced miners and prospectors believing the price of gold may soar from $35 to $41.50 an ounce. Pan and rocker mining is being carried on along small streams in southwestern Oregon, with the men satisfied if they make a living wage.

Big Yearly State Road Budget

If Minnesota is to provide "reasonably adequate" highway service for the public on the expanded state system, an annual expenditure of approximately $22,000,000 should be made on trunk highways.

This is the conclusion of experts of the United States Bureau of Public Roads who spent the past year in making an exhaustive study of Minnesoa's highway problems at the request of the Citizens' Interim Highway committee authorized by the 1933 Legislature.

A summary of the study has been presented to the Interim committee and N. W. Elsberg, highway commissioner, by Dr. Henry Trumbower and H. R. Briggs, who supervised the work. Dr. Trumbower is economist for the Bureau of Public Roads and head of the economnics department of the Universityty of Wisconsin. Mr. Briggs is statistician for the Bureau of Public Roads at Washington.

The $22,000,000 annual expenditure which is recommended by Dr. Trumbower and Mr. Briggs for the present 11,300 mile trunk system is about the amount which was spent yearly on the old 6,700 mile system. If expenditures on the enlarged system were made on the same scale as on the old system, the yearly amount would be more than $36,000,000, their report states.

On the basis of state revenues existing in 1933 and 1934, without federal aid, the highway department would have only slightly more than $13,000,000 a year income for the trunk system Commissioner Elsberg estimates. If the Legislature provides suffient additional revenues to match federal aid, this amount will be brought up to about $20,000,000 a year, including the aid allowance of $3,400,000.

Regarding the general costs of the Minnesota highway system, the report says: "Judged by similar states where studies have been made, the Minnesoto highway expenditures in general are not abnormal, and those made by the local units of government -- especially the towns -- seem low. The imposts against motor vehicles in Minnesota are less than those in adjoining states and in the country as a whole."

As to the division of trunk highway costs between the large cities and the rural districts, the report states that in 1932, rural residents paid 33 per cent of the motor vehicle licence fees and gas tax, while they accounted for 30 per of the traffic on the trunk system. The report concludes that the city areas contribute slightly less in trunk highway revenues than their proportion of travel would call for.

Minnesotans To Get Homes

Families and unmarried laborers from drouth areas or submarginal lands in Northern Minnesota will be among a group to be "transplanted" to Alaska in a sample migration sponsored by the Federal government thru its rural rehabilitation division.

This was announced in Washington recently, according to the Associated Press. Other families and unmarried men will be selected and moved from northern portions of Michigan and from Wisconsin.

A total of 200 families and 400 unmarried men will be moved, leaving in May for the Metanuska valley, where claims will be staked out on 8,000 acres of public land.

Because the climate of Minnesota, Wisconsin and northern Michigan are similar to that of the Alaskan area to be used, farmers from this section are being picked, according to Lawrence Westbrook of Washington, an official of the rural rehabilitation activities. Selections of some of the families and individuals has been made tentatively, Westbrook disclosed, and others will be chosen next week.

Landing at Seward, Alaska, the settlers will be moved with their baggage to Anchorage, fifty miles from the valley. They will be sheltered under tents.

Officials said the summer would be devoted to clearing a part of the forty acre homestead tracts allotted each family, building cabins and a school, and preparing for the first crop next spring.

Some of the 400 unmarried men will operate land clearing machinery supplied by the Rural Rehabilitation Corporation. Others will work at a co-operative creamery to supply Anchorage, the Willow creek gold field, and nearby coal mine communities.

Grains and peas are expected to be the chief products from the 100-day growing season. Clearing the remainder of the land, officials said, will give the settlers plenty to do in the long winter months.

David Williams, an assistant to Westbrook, said some of the settlers would be moved from unproductive farms retired from cultivation under the relief administration's five to seven million acre land purchase program.

Williams said an initial outlay of $500,000, already available, would be used to demonstrate the possibilities of the settlement. Later, if it proves successful, more families will be sent out. The unmarried men are not expected to remain indefinitely.

Moen-Sorenson Nuptials

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the Mission church parsonage on Thursday afternoon, March 7, when Miss Helen Moen became the bride of Stanley Sorenson. Rev. State Land Sale April 4

That part of 330,000 acres of Minnesota agricultural land enticing bids will fall under the auctioneer's hammer shortly with the annual state land sales about to go forward.

Largely in 40-acre parcels, the 330,000 acres will be offered for sale in 21 counties, starting April 1 in Wilkin and Otter Tail counties and progressing for nearly three weeks at 19 other points, including Warren April 4 and Thief River Falls April 8.

The sales lists, announced recently by F. A. Wildes, chief of the state division of lands and minerals, reveal the greater areas offered in Roseau, St. Louis and Marshall counties.

When the gavel falls, the high bidder must be ready to pay 15 per cent of the purchase price, the rest payable over the next 40 years, under regulations governing the sale. Appraised value of timber and improvement must be paid in full at the time of sale.

A purchasor is limited to 320 acres and agrees to waive mineral right to the state.

The number of land units offered by townships in Marshall county and appraisal ranges include:

Marshall, Warren, April 4, 1:30 p. m., 308 units — Excell township, 32, $5 to $7; Holt, 15, $5 to $7; Spruc Valley, 32, $5 to $12; New Solum, 36, $5 to $12; Newfolden, 25, $6 to $10; New Maine, 30, $5 to $9; Viking, 18, $6 to $15; Marsh Grove, 13, $6 to $10; West Valley, 20, $6 to $10; Lincoln, 24, $5 to $10; Comstock, 22, $6 to $12; Foldahl, 15, $5 to $8; Wright, 19, $5; Nelson Park, 17, $5 to $8; Wanger, 2, $8; Vega, 2, $20; Donnelly, 4, $9.50; Fork, 7, $10 to $15; Eagle Point, 6, $13.50 to $14.50. April 15 Set For Auto Tax

Headed for a deadlock on the controversial question of what tax should be imposed on automobiles for the next two years, the House on Tuesday, according to a news dispatch from St. Paul, emulated the Senate in extening for another month the final day for paying the 1935 license fees.

The vote was 109 to 0 on the proposal to extend the time from March 15 to April 15. The Senate already has passed a similar bill.

Under existing laws, license fees must be paid by February 15. However, in view of diverse opinions in House and Senate as to whether the license fees should be restored to the 1932 level or maintained at the same rate as existed the last two years, the Legislature granted time extensions until the differences are ironed out.

Strong Appeal in Braided Rag Rug

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

Braided rugs appeal to many rug makers because the work is simple and requires no tools. They, however, are not as durable as the crocheted rug, owing to the fact that the braided strands are sewed together, and for this reason we advise to sew with a strong waxed thread.

The above "Pin Wheel" rug measures 35 inches and requires about 4 pounds of cotton rag rug material. The center section has a black background and the 3 section design is white. The outer circle and inner center are of hit-and-miss mixed colors.

Cut strips 1¼ inches wide. Fold edges under and then fold again to make a strip about one-half inch wide. Use three strips in braiding.

Start in the center and sew 8 rows of braid around, keeping work flat. Start next row on opposite side of where the previous row ended. Work around, changing colors for 9 rows, as illustrated. To change color sew strips of new color desired to the ones in use. Start again at different place for 8 outside rows, then sew on the last row separately. This rug has 26 rows.

If you are interested in making rag rugs, send 15c to our Rug Department for book No. 25, which contains 26 rugs in braiding and crochet. Instructions are given with each rug, also directions for braiding and crocheting rugs and how to prepare your rags into strips to get the best results.

ADMINISTRATION FORCES IN DEADLOCK WITH LABOR ON WORK RELIEF BILL.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

DETERMINED not to accept the McCarran-Federation of Labor prevailing wage amendment, the administration forces in the senate sent the work relief bill back to the committee. What will happen now to the President's big program is problematical. Senator Byrnes of South Carolina, one of the administration men, declared the measure had met its death.

Senator Huey Long

Insisting he was expressing his own belief and not talking for the President, Byrnes said, "There is no prospect" of reviving the works program and "The committee probably will do nothing about it."

"The President stated that if the McCarran amendment were adopted he would not sign the bill," Byrnes said. "The senate adopted it, therefore, so as far as the works part is concerned, the bill is gone."

He expressed the thought the committee would report out an appropriation of $880,000,000 or $1,880,000,000 to carry out the present relief program for six months or a year.

The general opinion in Washington seemed to be that the latter part of Byrnes' statement was correct, and that the committee would delay reporting the public works part of the bill until the states and municipalities which would largely benefit from it could bring pressure to bear on their senators.

Adoption of the McCarran amendment by the senate was brought about only after a hard fight and by means of a rather tricky shifting of pairs in which Huey Long took a leading part. It won by a margin of one vote, whereupon Senator Robinson, Democratic leader, moved that the bill be sent back to the committee. This was done, Senator Glass expressing the hope that the committee would report out a bill "that will not be quite so controversial."

Senator Long, who loses no opportunity to pester the administration and to display his political shrewdness, has started a movement for the specification of $2,500,000,000 of the work relief measure's total for the purpose of highway construction. Highway commissions in every state were asked by him to indorse this plan. Long said he had discussed it with some other senators and that they liked it.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT paid a short visit to his home in Hyde Park, N. Y., and from there went to New England, especially to see his son, Franklin, Jr., initiated into the exclusive Harvard Fly club at Harvard university. In order that he might keep in close touch with Washington, one of his secretaries, Mr. McIntyre, maintained an office at Poughkeepsie, near Hyde Park, and another, Mr. Early, remained at the White House.

It was understood that during the trip the President was preparing a message to congress recommending that the present government policy of ocean mail contracts be supplanted by direct subsidy grants to American steamship lines. His decision in favor of this quite radical change has been influenced by the report of a committee of experts that has been studying the question. Probably the proposition will meet with opposition from many congressmen and senators who are not from seaboard states.

FEDERAL JUDGE W. I. GRUBB of Alabama gave the New Deal a sharp rap that threatens the great electric power development in the Tennessee valley. He ruled that the Tennessee Valley Authority has no legal authority to dispose of surplus power generated at hydro-electric plants on the Tennessee river. The administration is depending on this enterprise to bring about the lowering of private power plant rates, and it was believed there would be an immediate appeal from the decision.

In Washington especial note was taken of the fact that Judge Grubb made permanent an injunction restraining 14 north Alabama cities and towns from negotiating with the Public Works administration for loans to build electric distribution systems. There was speculation as to what effect, if any, this might have nationally on PWA's policy of giving financial encouragement to municipal power developments.

CELEBRATING the seventeenth anniversary of the establishment of its army of 960,000 men, Soviet Russia renewed its defiance of "imperialistic" nations. All over the country there were fetes, and the speakers took occasion not only to glorify the Red warriors but also to attack Germany and Japan. Karl Radek, one of the chief spokesmen for the Soviet government, wrote in Izvestia:

"We cannot fold our hands when we know that the imperialists plan to attack us. Raging imperialistic cliques to the east and west of us are openly proclaiming programs of war against us."

In connection with the celebration figures were published showing that, in addition to the army, there are 13,000,000 civilians who are now members of a nation-wide organization for chemical and air defense; 3,000,000 volunteer automobile drivers, 720,000 expert civilian marksmen, and nearly half a million trained parachute jumpers as well as tens of thousands of glider pilots.

MUSSOLINI has sent 5,000 more Italian troops to east Africa, making 10,000 that have been dispatched for the possible war with the empire of Ethiopia. With the latest contingent went Gen. Rudolfo Graziani, who will be in command of the expeditionary army. The soldiers were given a fine send-off at Naples, Crown Prince Humbert being present.

A spokesman for the government said the negotiations with Emperor Haile Selassie were progressing slowly and very badly, and he was pessimistic as to the outcome. Cynical observers of the proceedings do not believe Mussolini is especially eager to avoid conflict with Ethiopia. Pointing to the well-known fact that Italy wishes to expand its territory to accommodate its people, they predict a movement comparable to that of Japan in Manchuria, justified by much the same arguments used by the Japanese.

POSSIBILITIES of a merger of Democrats with Republicans in fighting for repeal of the "pink slip" or income tax publicity section of the 1934 revenue act was seen as Representative Bell, Missouri, pleaded for immediate passage of his bill eliminating the publicity provision.

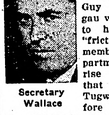
"Not only is there fear on the part of the people of the country on account of gangsters and racketeers," Bell asserted "but there also is concern among business men, because their competitors will have the opportunity of nosing into their secret files.

Bell added that his bill would leave intact the features of the 1926 revenue act which permitted house and senate committees or any government official, upon order of the President, to have a copy of any income tax return that might be filed.

A statement from Raymond Pitcairn, national chairman of the Sentinels of the Republic, called upon all income tax payers to withhold filing their returns until March 15, to give Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and revenue department officials time to appear before congressional committees, and to give congress an opportunity to repeal the law. Pitcairn also challenged Senator LaFollette, sponsor of the income publicity move, to a national radio debate. LaFollette ignored the challenge.

VICTOR A. CHRISTGAU, demoted from his position of second ranking officer of the AAA in the recent shake-up which involved several alleged radicals, resigned in protest. Chester C. Davis, administrator, had not accepted the resignation and Secretary of Agriculture Wallace was attempting to persuade Christgau to change his mind.

Wallace hinted that there had been differences between Christgau and A. H. Lauterbach, chief of the AAA dairy section, over the milk policy. A protege of Undersecretary Rexford Guy Tugwell, Christgau was also supposed to have encountered "friction" with other members of the department. This gave rise to new rumors that Brain Truster Tugwell will resign before his influence in the AAA is too severely curtailed by the demotion and ouster of his confreres.



Secretary Wallace

Meanwhile amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment act were declared to conceal dangerous, arbitrary and autocratic powers over farmers, manufacturers and distributors of farm products, by the legislative committee of the agricultural industries conference in Washington. The committee cited the provision that the AAA may require that a licensed processor purchase only from those who sign contracts. It charges that the amendments make no provision for the farmer to express himself in the matter of licenses, but contain provisions for price control, markets, production and purchasing. Through indirect restriction of the farmer's market, these provisions are equivalent to a licensing of the farmer, according to the committee. "The entire economic life of communities could be directed from Washington," the committee said.

DR. F. E. TOWNSEND of California, whose pension plan for the aged has gained the support of many thousands of thoughtless citizens, went before the senate finance committee and tried to explain how the government could get out of its economic troubles by paying $200 monthly pensions to all persons over sixty, provided each one must spend his $200 for commodities or services within the country each month. The senators didn't treat the proposition with much seriousness.

BREAKING the tenth commandment is breaking the law in England. Alexander Frederick Churchill Sim of Cookham Dean, Berkshire, coveted the "perfect" serving maid of his neighbor, Herbert Mercer Stretch, and enticed her away from him. For this the civil court fined Sim $125. It assessed him another $1,250 for asserting in a telegram that Stretch borrowed money from the maid, Edith Saville.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Fairmont—Mrs. Ella May Bulock, 66, widow, is dead after saving the lives of her grown son and four children when fire consumed her home here.

Fergus Falls—John Rorsum, Battle Lake, lost the sight of one eye, necessitating its removal when a splinter struck him while he was chopping wood.

Brushville—Nick Alderman of St. George, on his first day's relief work, was killed when a gravel pit caved in on him. Max Struffert, another worker, suffered a brkoen leg.

St. Paul—Governor Floyd B. Olson signed the $50,000 emergency relief bill for the purchase of feed for drouth stricken counties of the state. More liberal federal aid is promised.

St. Vincent—Mrs. Angeline Gooselaw, 109, one of Minnesota's oldest inhabitants died here. Her death occurred at her isolated farm home north of here, where she was said to have lived for 90 years.

Stillwater—State leaders of all political faiths passed before the casket of George H. Sullivan to look for the last time at the veteran statesman who served continuously for 27 years in the Minnesota senate. He died February 16.

Albert Lea—Eight men held in connection with disturbances during a strike at the Potter foundry here several weeks ago were sentenced by District Judge Fred Senn of Waseca to serve two months in the county jail with three defendants given the option of a $200 fine.

Mahnomen—As a threat to Mahnomen merchants dealing in oleomargarine, a group of dairy farmers bought the entire stock and set it ablaze on the Mahnomen's busiest street intersection. Dealers were warned to stop selling the product unless they wanted to be boycotted.

Graceville—Werner Stegeman of Beaver Creek and Lester Hanson of Graceville received the grand trophies when awards in the twenty-first annual livestock and plant judging contests for students in the agricultural college at University farm were announced in Minneapolis.

St. Paul—Plans for Minnesota's fifth year of grasshopper eradication work were announced by A. G. Ruggles, state entomologist, who took up with county agents and control leaders throughout the state the matter of early spring investigations to learn if grasshopper infestations appear to be menacing.

Winona — The war department granted a request for an extension of time to March 16, 1937, for completing reconstruction of a bridge across the Mississippi river here. Original plans called for completion of construction in 1931 and an extension of time to March, 1935, subsequently was granted.

Minneapolis—The new $4,000,000 postoffice is completed, and employees at the old postoffice are bustling about making preparations for moving their departments. The building will be thrown open March 9, for a formal opening to which postmasters from throughout Minnesota and a number of outside centers and the general public have been invited.

St. Paul—Some 49,000 Minnesota farmers in 54 counties sold 257,479 head of cattle and 6,544 head of sheep to the government during the emergency livestock program of the AAA, which ended Feb. 1, F. J. Brown, state drouth relief director, announced. The farmers were paid $3,780,004 for their cattle and sheep, or an average of $14.63 per head of cattle and $2 per head of sheep.

Minneapolis—A total of 49,486 head of cattle was gathered up in the state during the drouth season of 1934, transported to pasture lands in northern Minnesota, fed, cared for, reherded for transportation to packing houses or for other disposal with a loss of only 46 cattle to the 1,000 head and an average cost for all expense, except transportation, of less than $2 a head, a report of the enterprise by M. J. Thompson, supervisor, reveals.

St. Paul—Because the mortgage moratorium act has not yet been extended by the present legislature, those who got their mortgage requirements eased up will have to act to safeguard their interests, John Bosch, president of the Minnesota Farm Holiday Association, warned. Many will have to apply to the courts before March 1 for an extension, whether the law is passed or not.

Breckenridge—The state is selling 330,000 acres of state lands at auction, the sale to begin April 1 in Wilkin and Ottertail counties and continuing at 19 other points, it was announced by F. A. Wildes, chief of the division of lands and minerals in the state auditor's office. The lands are large in 40 acre tracts and the largest areas are in Roseau, St. Louis and Marshall counties. Bidders must be prepared to pay in cash 15 per cent of the purchase price, the rest is payable over a period of 40 years. A purchaser is limited to 320 acres.

Minneapolis—Dr. William P. Murphy of Harvard Medical school and one of the three 1934 Noble prize winners in medicine, has consented to speak at the eighty-second annual meeting of the Minnesota State Medical association to be held in the auditorium June 24, 25 and 26. Dr. Murphy's acceptance has been received by the Hennepin County Medical Society which will sponsor his appearance here. In addition to Dr. Murphy at least ten other noted out-of-state medical speakers are expected to appear on the program.

Discovery May Lead to Victory Over Cancer

The growth of the human infant, the chick in the egg, bacteria and the toad can all be represented by the same mathematical equation. Dr. Norman C. Wetzel, associate professor of pediatrics at Western Reserve University Medical school, told the National Academy of Sciences.

Proper interpretation of this mathematical equation of growth, Doctor Wetzel said, eventually might lead to conquest of cancer, since cancer was a growth problem—a situation in which body cells grew without restraint. The equation, which is what mathematicians call a second degree differential, represents the relation between heat production and growth, he added.

Four factors, he found, were involved in growth. One encourages growth, a second retards or inhibits growth, the third is the net external work of growth. He calls the fourth the "coefficient of inertia growth." In cancer, Doctor Wetzel said, it was evident that the factor which retarded growth was not operating.

He urged that medical science embark on a study of the influence of various hormones, vitamins and the like, with a view to fitting them into their proper places in the equation of growth.—David Dietz, Scripps-Howard Science Editor, in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

CONSTIPATION Can be Helped!

(Use what Doctors do)

Why do the bowels usually move regularly and thoroughly, long after a physician has given you treatment for constipation?

Because the doctor gives a liquid laxative that can always be taken in the right amount. You can gradually reduce the dose. Reduced dosage is the secret of real and safe relief from constipation.

Ask your doctor about this. Ask your druggist how popular liquid laxatives have become. The right liquid laxative gives the right kind of help, and the right amount of help. When the dose is repeated, instead of more each time, you take less. Until the bowels are moving regularly and thoroughly without any help at all.

The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara, and these are natural laxatives that form no habit — even in children. Your druggist has it; ask for—

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, which he names "Penelope," in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. Ten-year-old Penelope is given into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin. At a baseball game a ball strikes Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin retires from business, wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for his daughter when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" was in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is won over despite Nance's hard-boiled exterior. Nance's criminal record outweighs Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary.

—7—

"You'll do," Nance declared, and held out her hand. Her cell proved to be exactly what the matron had said it was—a small, neat white room, with a neat little white bed and wash stand, and a small chest of drawers, not unlike that of a room in a hospital, save for the steel door with an orifice in the center of it, and connected by a locking mechanism with all the doors in that tier of cells so that the throwing of a lever locked them all simultaneously. Nance surveyed it with satisfaction. "This will do me nicely," she said. "Thank you ever so much, Matron."

She unpacked her suitcase, stowed her few belongings in the chest of drawers, removed her hat and sat down on the bed to read the printed list of prison rules. But one of the rules interested her. She discovered she could write letters once a month and receive visitors once a month—if she behaved herself. "I must be mother's little lamb," she decided. "This is some joint to get out of, but where there's a will there's a way." And she set herself resolutely to discovering the way.

Before locking-up time she thought she had discovered it. It was the fishermen in the cove just off San Quentin point who suggested it to her. In her stroll around the grounds she inspected the fence. It was sixteen feet high, of quarter-inch steel mesh, set on steel posts bedded in concrete, and it ran along a concrete base. A barefooted woman, using her toes to cling to the mesh, could climb the fence readily enough, were it not for an eighteen-inch topping of barbed wire, strung in strands four inches apart and set inward at an angle of forty-five degrees. One could not possibly surmount that. Nor could one burrow under the concrete base in daylight, even were the means available. Nor could one do it at night, because then one was locked in the cell. But one could stroll down the main walk to the sentry box just outside the entrance and appraise the situation there. As Nance suspected, the gate was kept locked and the guard had the key; indeed, the gate was never opened except to admit a new prisoner or an official, or to provide an exit for a discharged prisoner or official. However, Nance did not despair, for the gate was narrow—two feet—and there was no topping on it. She decided she would climb over it some day when the guard's back was turned; ergo, the thing to do was to induce the guard to turn his back!

For a month Nance gave her thoughts over entirely to this problem.

Lanny came into Doctor Burt's office and laid a letter on his desk. It was dated from San Quentin, on the cheap prison stationery and read:

"Dear Miss Lanning:

"I can receive visitors next Sunday. Won't you please come over and visit me? I'm so lonely, and you were so kind to me when I visited Doctor Burt's office. I have never forgotten you and never shall. Sincerely,

"Nance Belden,
"No. 43,231."

"Just think, Stevie," Lanny declared proudly. "She hasn't forgotten me, the poor dear."

"I suppose you'll go over."

"Indeed I shall. It would be terrible if I didn't. You'll send her something, won't you, Stevie? I think that might please her. I think she'd appreciate a portable phonograph and a couple of dozen records. I understand model prisoners are permitted such luxuries."

Stephen smiled. "Well, I'll stand for that expense, too, Lanny. And I shall await with interest the report you will have to make on your return." Lanny beamed.

The following Sunday afternoon, therefore, the matron admitted Lanny to the visitors' room and sent for Nance, who arrived on the run and cast herself joyously into Lanny's arms. Then Nance led the latter into a corner, and speaking swiftly and in a low voice, said:

"We aren't permitted to be alone with our visitors, Lanny. You'll notice the matron remains in the room. She won't listen to what we have to say but she keeps her eyes on us. Will you smuggle a letter out for me? I've got one all written, but the matron reads all our letters before posting them—and I can't have her read this one. It's to a very dear friend and I just couldn't bear to have her read it. Besides, if she read it, she wouldn't mail it."

Lanny's face grew grave. "Do you realize, my dear, what you are asking me to do?"

"Certainly, I wouldn't ask anybody but you to do it, Lanny dear. You're so understanding. If you can smuggle the letter out for me it will mean that within a month I'll be out, too. I'm sorry I cannot give you all my confidence, Lanny, but I just can't. You're the only woman on earth I'd trust, the only woman who has ever been kind to me. And oh, Lanny dear, I do appreciate your friendship so."

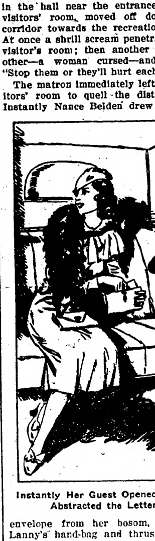
Lanny comforted the girl and considered her request. Considered it sympathetically, too, for at heart she was an outlaw herself. She knew Nance Belden did not belong here; that if the girl had had a fair chance, if she had not been the victim of a code of justice born of ignorance and lack of sympathy, she would be in a sanitarium instead.

"You can read the letter when you get home, Lanny," Nance pleaded, "and if you do not approve of it, you need not mail it. That's fair, isn't it?"

Lanny fell into the trap. "Yes, that's fair," she agreed, for she had unbounded confidence in her own judgment of what was right and what was wrong.

"You old sweetheart," Nance breathed, and kissed her—and at that moment a tall, handsome brunette who had repaid her lover's faithlessness by killing him, and who had been standing around in the hall near the entrance to the visitors' room, moved off down the corridor towards the recreation room. At once a shrill scream penetrated the visitor's room; then another and another—a woman cursed—and cried: "Stop them or they'll hurt each other."

The matron immediately left the visitors' room to quell the disturbance. Instantly Nance Belden drew a thick envelope from her bosom, unlocked Lanny's hand-bag and thrust the envelope in. She beamed proudly upon Lanny.



Instantly Her Guest Opened It and Abstracted the Letter.

"I staged that ruckus," she confessed. "We have to play the game with each other here, you know—and two lifers obliged me. Good behavior doesn't mean time off for them, you know—and a hair-pulling match isn't taken too seriously here. Oh, by the way, what's your address—I mean your home address and telephone number?"

"It's in the telephone book," Lanny replied, and wondered why Nance had requested the information.

"Kiss me again, you dear thing," Nance commanded. Then she was out of the visitors' room, running for the scene of the excitement in the recreation room. She met the matron hurrying back to the visitors' room, after having quelled the fight by her mere appearance.

"You left me alone," Nance explained, "and that's against the rules. So I followed. I didn't want you to think I'd take advantage of you."

The matron smiled and pinched the girl's cheek. "You funny girl," she said. "You don't belong here and it's a shame you have to be here. You have a fine code of honor, Nance, even if they hang it on you for shoplifting."

She nodded to Lanny as the latter passed out of the building. The guard at the entrance took up her pass, looked her over with a pretense of suspicion, opened the gate and let her through. She climbed into her little car and had just started it when a good-looking but somewhat flashy young woman came to the side of the car and said:

"Are you driving to Greenbrae, madam?"

Lanny nodded. "I wonder if you'd give me a lift that far. The bus doesn't leave for an hour and I—"

"By all means," the generous Lanny agreed, and opened the door. The girl thanked her smilingly and climbed in. Half way down to Greenbrae, her guest said: "I think one of your rear tires is flat, madam."

"I was beginning to think so, too. It's bumpy, isn't it? Oh dear, I loathe changing a tire."

Lanny pulled up to the side of the road and got out, leaving her hand-bag beside her on the seat. Instantly her guest opened it, abstracted the letter Nance had given her and tucked it in her own hang-bag; then got out and with Lanny surveyed the flat rear tire.

"I'll help," she promised eagerly. "The least I can do to repay your hospitality."

Between them they shifted the wheels and resumed the journey. At Greenbrae the girl got out and thanked Lanny. No sooner had her little car disappeared behind a curve than the girl waved to a sedan parked in back of the little station and climbed in beside a young man who sat behind the wheel.

"Well?" he queried, apparently without interest.

"It worked," she replied. "Let's go."

CHAPTER IV

Arrived at the little bungalow she occupied in St. Francis Wood, Lanny put her car in the garage, entered her home, and sat down to read Nance Belden's letter. And when she failed to find it she did some of the logical thinking of which she was so eminently capable in situations where her emotions were not being preyed upon.

"Good work," she decided finally. "That girl I picked up on the road to Greenbrae stole it out of my hand-bag when I got out to look at the flat tire. She must have visited Nance before I got there. She was a flashy sort of damsel, too, now that I think of it. An underworld huzzy, doubtless; doubtless, too, known to the police. So Nance had no opportunity to slip her the letter. The matron watched too closely. Nance feared that would be the case, so she had an alternative plan. What a shrewd judge of human nature that girl is! She knew she could work on me, and oh, what a fool I was to permit it! Why, I'm as lawless as she is, only I'm a responsible member of society and she isn't. Nance knew I wouldn't fail to visit her; so she described me to her confederate, who spotted me when I drove up to the main gate and parked my car.

"When the confederate saw me coming back she drove a nail about an inch into my rear tire—simple as two and two are four. The nail was driven all the way in and the air was out before we'd gone a mile. Oh, dear, dear, dear, what a simpleton I am! I suppose I ought to do something about this, but then if I do, how can I explain my conduct to the prison officials?"

She realized thoroughly now the extent to which she had been an accessory before the act. What act, she wondered. Well, she would have to keep the details of this adventure to herself. Even Stephen Burt could not share her confidence in this, for Lanny was justly proud of her intelligence and integrity and loathed the thought that a suspicion of either might obtain in the mind of her beloved Stevie. She feared, should he learn of her adventure, that he would never quite trust her again. And that would be unbearable.

That sly minx—telling her she could read the letter before mailing it; that if she did not approve of its contents she was free to destroy it. That was the point upon which the susceptible Lanny had impaled herself.

"Well, it can't be anything so very important," she decided finally. "It couldn't be part of a plan to escape, because escape from that place is impossible. Besides, no woman convict has ever succeeded in escaping from San Quentin. In all probability it was just a private message to one of her old underworld friends. That girl is too intelligent to dream of formulating plans for escape. Why, she couldn't get out of the front gate. She'd have to swim the bay to escape, even if she succeeded in getting through the exit from the woman's quarters and past that suspicious guard in the little house there."

So Lanny made herself a highball and resolved to dismiss all thought of the incident. She also resolved to give Nance Belden a piece of her mind if and when she decided to visit her again. And she was not at all certain she would make Nance another visit.

Two weeks later, while she was sitting before the fire, reading, her telephone rang and a man's voice said:

"Is this Miss Rebecca Lanning?"

"Yes. Who is this?"

"Never mind. You wouldn't know me if I told you who I am. I'm a friend of Nance Belden's."

"Oh, indeed." Ironically. "And who might Nance Belden be?"

Lanny was nobody's fool. On the instant every sense was alert, for if this was a trap set by the authorities, who, in some mysterious way, had gotten wind of her escape, she was resolved not to walk into it.

"Are you going to be at home for an hour, Miss Lanning?" the voice pursued. It was a pleasant enough voice, Lanny reflected.

"I am, but what business is that of yours?"

"Oh, well, if you're going to be such a cutup," the voice rejoined, "I'll not bother to argue with you over the phone. I'll come out. Good-by."

He hung up, leaving Lanny in a state of acute mental perturbation, which did not subside until she heard her doorbell ringing some ten minutes later. It subsided then. Her courage always mounted when there was an immediate situation to face. "Nance Belden's friend," she decided instantly.

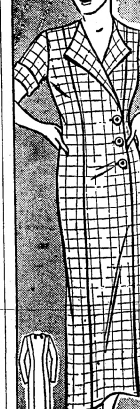
House Frock on Coat-Like Lines

PATTERN 9165



Here's a house frock that's not only slenderizing and trim because of its coat-like lines—but essentially practical at the same time. For it's the sort of smart affair that you can slip into quickly—just three buttons to fasten—and be sure of looking your housewifely best! As every figure-conscious woman knows, long panels sweeping from hem to shoulder, back and front, create an illusion of slenderness—and those pert revers add a nice clean-cut look to the whole frock. Of course, one of the best points about this model is that it may be spread out and ironed flat. Choose printed percale, broadcloth or gingham for it!

Pattern 9165 may be ordered only in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires 4⅝ yards 36 inch fabric.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for EACH pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE of each pattern.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth street, New York.

Age-Old Memories Stir Merry Laughing Spring

Moonlight falling in pearly, ghostly radiance over the hill in Hardscrabble forest touches candleberry and sweet-fern with opalescence and mirrors age-old stars in the fern-lipped bowl of the Laughing Spring.

The Spring, which finds something funny in its age-long life, chuckling constantly at some comic joke, remembers the coming of the ice age, its imprisonment under the ice sheet, and the herds of mastodons migrating through the valley after it. It remembers when wild animals were dominant along the Hudson, and the timid coming of Red Men from the West, spying out the land, taking it away from bear, deer, moose and wolf.

At its lip white settlers stooped to drink, listening for war-whoops. It remembers the Dutch, the English, Continentals marching past to the battle of White Plains, and boys of the Neperhan marching away to the Civil war.

Hunters, hobos, pursued men and women, hikers, lovers, have all visited the ancient fountain, but still the Spring is the youngest and merriest thing in all the Hardscrabble forest, for it still remembers how to laugh.—New York World Telegram.

DICK, I HATE TO DROP YOU FROM THE TEAM— BUT YOU'LL NEVER MAKE AN ATHLETE UNTIL YOU GET RID OF THAT BAD TEMPER!
SAY—WHAT IS THIS, ANYHOW— A BASEBALL TEAM OR A COURSE IN SOCIAL GRACES?
MR. COFFEE NERVES
RUTH, IF YOU'D MARRY ME I'D QUIT COLLEGE TOMORROW AND GO TO WORK!
I'D MARRY YOU IN A MINUTE, DICK, IF YOU WEREN'T SUCH A GROUCH. BUT I REMEMBER WHAT MOTHER WENT THROUGH BECAUSE OF DAD'S BAD DISPOSITION!
WHO IS SHE TO BE PARTICULAR? WHEN SHE REFUSES TO MARRY YOU THE LUCK IS ALL ON YOUR SIDE!
OF COURSE THERE WAS SOME EXCUSE FOR FATHER. HE HAD HEADACHES AND INDIGESTION ...AND DIDN'T SLEEP WELL
GOOD GRIEF, RUTH... DON'T YOU REALIZE I HAVE 'EM, TOO?
WHAT A WOMAN! WHEN HER FATHER HAD 'EM SHE WAS SORRY FOR HIM... WHEN YOU HAVE 'EM SHE'S GLAD OF IT!
YOU PROBABLY HAVE COFFEE-NERVES! WHY DON'T YOU GIVE UP COFFEE, LIKE DAD DID, AND SWITCH TO POSTUM FOR 30 DAYS?
WELL... IT MUST HAVE HELPED YOUR DAD... HE'S CERTAINLY NOT GROUCHY NOW! I BELIEVE I'LL TRY IT!
CURSES! I'VE LOST ANOTHER VICTIM! CONFOUND THAT MEDDLING CO-ED!
LATER
RUTH, LOOK! I'VE BEEN VOTED THE MOST VALUABLE PLAYER ON THE TEAM!
THE COACH TOLD ME, DICK. AND SINCE YOU SWITCHED TO POSTUM I'VE BEEN THINKING YOU'LL MAKE AS GOOD A HUSBAND AS YOU HAVE AN ATHLETE!

"I NEVER dreamed coffee could have such an effect on me . . . although I knew it was bad for children!"

"Oh, coffee disagrees with lots of older people. The caffein in coffee gives 'em indigestion, upsets their nerves and keeps 'em awake nights!"

• • •

If you suspect coffee disagrees with you . . . try Postum for 30 days. Postum contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. Easy to make, and costs less than ½ cent a cup. It's a delicious drink, too . . . and may prove of real value in helping your system throw off the ill effects of caffein. A product of General Foods.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN The Safety Man

Cutting in too soon after having passed a car is a dangerous practice. When you pass another car going in the same direction, drive ahead far enough after you have passed it before cutting in. This will give the car you have passed an opportunity to maintain the same speed under safe conditions. If you cut in too soon it will either cause an accident to your car or you will drive the other car which you have passed off the road.

Many accidents have been the result of this practice and the responsibility rests with the autmobile driver.

Never attempt to pass a car when there is no clear vision ahead. Safe driving requires good judgement, good driving, and "horse sense".

ENCHANTING FOODS FOR ST. PATRICK'S DAY

WHEN you plan your menu for a St. Patrick's Day luncheon, supper-party, or even a family meal on March 17th —bear in mind that these must be no ordinary, everyday foods. St. Patrick was no ordinary person, if we are to believe legends concerning his life.

Some of the less well known of these legends are as fascinating as the oft-told tale of his routing the snakes from Ireland. There is the story of St. Patrick as a little lad. Playing in the snow one cold winter's day, he managed to break loose some small lumps of ice. He hurried home to show them to his nurse, of whom he was very fond. She came grumbling into the room saying surely to goodness he could have spent his time more profitably by bringing in a bit of wood for the fire instead of cold ice which would soon melt and mess up the whole place. St. Patrick felt very sad to have displeased his nurse, so he spread his little hands over the lumps of ice, and lo! they suddenly burned into a roaring bonfire.

More Magic

At another time the old nurse fell ill, and lying limply on her bed she begged for a pot of honey. Nothing else in the world would help her, she said. But no honey could be found in the whole of the village. Little Patrick took a pitcher of water, and by passing his hands over it, changed it into the finest honey — food which saved the old woman's life.

Let us see if we can borrow a little of this magic, and pass our hands over everyday foods in such a way as to turn them into miracles of goodness worthy to be served in the name of good St. Pat. Green foods, of course, to keep his memory green, and to have the charm of his native isle.

Garnished with Green—and Good

The following dishes have been selected because they are festive enough for any of your parties, and at the same time delicious enough for whatever meal you wish to serve them:

Sardine Egg Cups: Hard-cook eight eggs, peel, cut in halves and remove the yolks. Mash well, add two tablespoons of melted butter, two tablespoons of lemon juice and four tablespoons of mayonnaise. Mix thoroughly, and season to taste with salt and pepper. Remove the skin and bones from one 3½-ounce can of sardines (or use a 4-ounce can of the skinless, boneless variety). Mash and add to the egg yolk. Pile lightly back into the egg cups, decorate tops with capers, slices of stuffed olive or tiny strips of green pepper. Chill thoroughly. Arrange on a large platter decorated with watercress. This serves eight persons.

Green Gage Mousse: Remove the stones from two 8-ounce cans of green gage plums and press the plums through a sieve. Add one-third cup sugar and one-fourth cup corn syrup. Boil for about two minutes. Soften two teaspoons gelatin in two tablespoons cold water, and dissolve in the hot syrup. Cool. Add one-fourth cup lemon juice, and, when it begins to set, fold in one and one-half cups of beaten cream. Tint green. Pack in a melon mold and freeze in a mixture of salt and ice. Or freeze in refrigerator trays. This serves eight persons.

St. Patrick's Cocktail: Combine the contents of one No. 2 can of pineapple juice, one-half cup of honey and two cups of sweet cider. Chill well. Put a green mint cherry in each tall slim glass, fill with crushed ice and pour in the cocktail. Top with a sprig of fresh mint. This fills eight glasses.*

HOME RAMBLES

If that old alarm clock does not work good any longer, try the Sorter Watch Repair Shop here in Holt.

It is reported that somebody has been accused of choking the Blue Eagle.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt celebrated their thirtieth wedding anniversary on Sunday.

The Weather

The weather has since our last report of it, been of a wonderful variety. Sunshine and warm winds all week. A heavy wet snow storm hit here on Wednesday afternoon and in no time had replaced all the snow which had thawed away during the week. It was estimated that about four inches of snow fell on this last day of winter.

Yesterday was the first day of spring, and it came sailing in with a bright sun shining in the morning.

20 Years Ago

An infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Nygaard passed away.

The bank statement of the Holt State bank showed that the institution had $76,729.

The United States sent a cold warning to Mexico that they should pull in their horns.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Allie Werner a girl March 14.

The village of Holt was for the first time publishing a notice for an election at which they were to elect village offices.

Huge Relief Bill Passed

Governor Floyd B. Olson Saturday signed a bill providing for $10,000,000 for relief purposes during the next biennium and another providing $2,000,000 for seed loans to "needy and destitute" farmers.

The relief bill, upon passage of which hinged granting of Minnesota federal relief for March, had twice before been sent to Governor Olson for his signature. He rejected it the first time because of unconstitutional provisions and the second time because it imposed too great burdens on counties. Revision and repassage followed each rejection.

The seed loan act, to be administered by county and township boards, sets $300 as the maximum for each loan.

The senate Saturday passed a bill to change the date of the biennial primary election from June to August in a move to shorten political campaigns. It now goes to the house.

New Lumber Dealer Here

John Tangren of Spooner was a business caller here on Tuesday and Wednesday. Mr. Tangren was the successful bidder on the Holt Lumber Company lumber yard and lots which where advertised for sale here a short time ago.

Mr. Tangren announced that he expects to open up the retail yard here by the first of April. He has his own saw mill and planing mill up on the Rapid river near Clementson east of Spooner, and stated that he expected to bring down about a hundred thousand feet of lumber from there for his yard here. He will also ship a carload of shingles, one of cement and one car of other items that he can not make at his mill.

Mr. Tangren was well pleased with the deal he made here, and upon being taken around and made acquainted with the business men in town he was assured of local support for his business.

We are very fortunate in having a lumber man come to locate here and furnish the community with up to date building material.

How To Get Seed Loan

Preparations for financing the seed loans under the $2,000,000 seed loan bill passed by the Minnesota Legislature last Saturday, are under way throughout the state this week. Copies of the act and regulations for administering the fund have been forwarded to all county auditors and county board chairmen by Stafford King, state auditor, who is designated by law as administrator of the state seed loan fund. Application blanks will be distributed to the counties in a few days.

County boards are urged to meet immediately and arrange for financing. The act provides that the county boards must purchase and distribute the seed. They are authorized to issue and sell bonds or borrow upon county warrants to obtain funds.

"Every effort will be made to eliminate red tape and simplify the method of making loans, in an effort to speed up action so farmers who need seed grain can be supplied in time for spring planting," Mr. King said.

"Farmers who want seed must make application to their town boards, except in unorganized territory, where they may apply directly to the county board. If the town board approves the application, the county board will issue the seed, but if the town board denies the application, the farmer may appeal to the county board, whose decision shall be final. Not more than $300.00 worth of seed may be issued to any farmer, and only those who are 'destitute and needy' may be granted loans.

"Applications must be made before May 1. The loan will be a first lien on the crop grown from this seed, and must be repaid before Feb. 1, 1936. It may be repaid in cash or in kind, at the rate of a bushel and a half per bushel. It may also be repaid in labor. The $2,000,000 state seed loan fund will be used to reimburse the counties for any losses, and consequently acts as security for the bonds issued by counties."

Seed grain as referred to in the act includes barley, spring rye, wheat, buckwheat, flax corn, oats, truck crop seeds and seed potatoes. The application blanks will be distributed as rapidly as the counties decide that they want to come under the act.

Mud Lake Farmer Very Sick

Knute Eelson, Mud Lake farmer was taken suddenly ill on Sunday and had to be rushed to the St. Lukes hospital at Thief River Falls where he is receiving threatment for a broken rib and pneumonia.

Wild Ducks On Flight North

The annual spring flight of wild ducks to northern climes is on and Minnesota now has thousands of these feathered travelers within its boundaries. Most of these birds are grouped in southern parts of the state at the present time.

D. P. Brady, state game warden at Windom, reported thousands of wild ducks in lakes in his district with large numbers at Heron Lake.

We are hoping for a break in the drouth conditions in Minnesota so that better breeding conditions will prevail for our wild migratory waterfowl.

Move 67 Minnesota Families

Sixty-seven Minnesota families now living on unproductive northern Minnesota lands have been chosen for the government's experiment in Alaskan migration," Charles St. Denis, secretary of the state rural rehabilitation corporotion announced Monday.

The selections have not been confirmed, however, St. Denis explained, adding that final approval rests with the Alaska rural rehabilitation corporation. The group will be set up on farm lands in Alaska.

All Minnesota families have been selected from the relief rolls in a cut-over area including Pine, Carlton, Itasca, Koochiching, Beltrami, Lake of the Woods, Cass, Mille Lacs and Kanebec counties. No single men will be chosen in Minnesota, St. Denis said, the quota of these already having been filled from the civilian conservation corps and transient camps in Washington and Oregon.

Preliminanay plans call for the "migrators" to leave Seattle about May 1, with others in the group to be chosen from northern Wisconsin and Michigan.

IN MEMORIAM

Raymond Wegge—In loving memory of Raymond Wegge who passed away one sad year ago March 20, 1934.

In the graveyard softly sleeping,
Lies the one we love so dearly,
In his silent, lonely grave;
Peaceful be your sleep, dear Raymond
It is sweet to breath your name,
In life we loved you dearly,
In death we do the same.
Just one sad year ago you left us
Now we miss you, Raymond dear,
As we drop a silent tear,
You shall never be forgotten,
Never from our memory fade,
Loving hearts will always linger
Around the grave where you are laid.

Sadly missed by Mrs. Raymond Wegge and children. and Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wegge and family.

The first bunch of crows were seen here early this week.

That four inces of wet snow we got on Wednesday was held as a great benefit to the whole community.

Floods in the southland have left thousands of people homeless and ruined their prospects for a crop this year.

F. K. Fredrickson and daughter Lillian and son Clarin motored to Kindred, N. D., Saturday for an over Sunday visit with relatives. Mrs. Fredrickson who had been visiting there, returned home with them Monday.

One fellow who can tell some of the biggest jokes we ever heard, told us that the reason the legislature had not accomplished anything so far was because they send only such men to the legislature as they cant use at home in the winter time.

They are now trimming the manes on the war horses over in Europe and from the looks of things the big race will soon be on, if you get what we mean. Well at that they are not going to have as many spectators from here as they expect. The people seem to have gotten wised up on these fixed grandstand plays they want to stage over there all the time. They still owe us a refund on the last performance.

11,000 Attended Convention

The dairy industry and its creameries can increase their contribution to the state's prosperity by continuing their cooperative activities and emphasizing even more strongly in the standard of high quality in all products, Commissioner R. A. Trovatten of the state department of agriculture, dairy and foods said last week. He addressed a convention of creamery operators and cheese makers held at the plant of the Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc. at Minneapolis. District 10 of the Land O'Lakes organization comprising Brown, Watonwan, Martin and Fairbault counties was awarded the grand championship prize for the highest average efficiency score for 1934 in the manufacture of quality butter.

A crowd estimated at eleven housand people attended the annual Land O'Lakes convention held at the big plant in Minneapolis on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week.

Given Wedding Reception

A large crowd of friends and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Stanley Sorenson gave them a wedding reception at the Free Mission Church on Sunday afternoon. The newlyweds were presented with many beautiful and useful gifts.

C. E. Smith Is 77 Years Old

Mrs. C. L. Sandberg and son Robert, Mr. and Mrs. George Smith and family, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Smith and family and Mr. and Mrs. A. Tureen and family were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Smith, on Sunday, the occasion being Mr. Smiths 77th birthday anniversary.

Melvin Nohre of St. Hilaire who was here attending to business over the week end, was called home Sunday evening because of his wife having become suddenly ill.

Mud Lake Financing Approved

Final approval was given by the state Senate Friday to a bill to complete financing of the Mud Lake game refuge in eastern Marshall county.

The measure authorizes diversion of $50,000 in the public shooting ground funds to the Mud Lake project.

The Mud Lake plan is one of the largest undertaken by the federal government in cooperation with states to restore the wild ducks. The government's share would be $469,000.

Appropriation For Refuge

An appropriation of $1,461,000 for the Red Lake game refuge was approved Friday by the House appropriations committee. Under the bill the state would use up to that amount of money to retire ditch bond indebtedness on lands in Koochiching, Beltrami and Lake of the Woods counties over an eight-year period. In return Minnesota would acquire title to about 1,672,000 acres of land in that area, a quarter million acres of which, is good agricultural land, Erickson said. That area, he said, has never experienced a drouth.

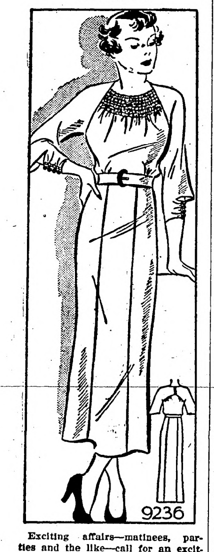
Outstanding Chic in "Party" Frock

PATTERN 9236



Exciting affairs—matinees, parties and the like—call for an exciting frock, a frock such as this, for instance! From the slimly modeled bodice with its rows of soft gathers at the neck, to the hem of its slenderly paneled skirt, it spells chic with a capital C! And if you think that all the smartness of the design is concentrated at the front look again! For important back interest there's that deep, buttoned yoke, cut in one with the sleeves. The graceful sleeves, by the way, may end in unusual, gathered "bracelet" cuffs or be left open in elbow-length flares. The pattern indicates how to make them both ways. Lovely in flat or canton crepe!

Pattern 9236 may be ordered only in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 8⅛ yards 39-inch fabric.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for each pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE of each pattern.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern department, 232 West Eighteenth street, New York.

REVOLT FLAMES IN GREECE; EX-PREMIER VENIZELOS HEADS INSURRECTION.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

THE Greek government is making a grim effort to stamp out the fast growing revolt which started in Crete and has spread to the mainland. Greek government planes bombed the home in Crete of former Premier Eleutherios Venizelos, and also struck at five naval vessels manned by rebels standing off the shore of Crete. Venizelos is openly heading the forces of sedition, and, reports say, has seized $1,000,000 from the Canea treasury to finance the revolt.

Ex-Premier Venizelos

The rebellion has been plotted for a whole year, and broke when 20 naval officers, both active and retired, seized the Salamis arsenal. As the revolt spread, rebels boarded the five warships while the crews were ignorant of the plan, and put under steam. Government planes were dispatched to the scene and pursued the rebel ships down the Aegean sea. The cruiser Averoff was struck by an aerial bomb while the vessel lay in Souda bay, near Crete, and two other ships were reported to have been overtaken and bombed near the Island of Cythera with undetermined damage.

Naval reserves have been called to the colors, and preparations made to call out army classes on the mainland if necessary. Reports that the rebellion has reached Alexandropoulis and other towns in Thrace, and that there had been fighting in Seres, eastern Macedonia, indicate that the revolt is more widespread than was first supposed.

The Greek government searched the Athens home of Venizelos and reported finding arms and compromising literature. Searchers found Deputy Papanastitiu, recently an opposition spokesman, and another Venizelos associate named Caphandaris in hiding there. Military restrictions have been tightened in Athens. All radio stations have been ordered to remain silent, and private automobiles are forbidden to circulate. Courts martial have been opened to try rebels, the bourse is closed, and business is practically at a standstill.

DIMINUTIVE King Prajadhipok of Siam has renounced his throne, relinquished his claims to being known as "brother of the moon and possessor of 24 umbrellas," assumed the simpler, if still unpronounceable name of Prince Sukhodaya, and retired to the simple life of an English country gentleman. By his action, the ex-monarch set a record, for it is probably the first time in history that a ruler has abandoned power because his government rejected his demands for greater freedom and democratic control for his people. "My intention that the people should have a real voice in the policy of the government has been ineffective," the ex-king wrote in his message of abdication. "Since I realize that now there is no longer any way of my assisting or protecting the people in the future, I hereby renounce all rights which I had as [illegible] or rights of succession, but I re[illegible]e the rights which I had formerly enjoyed before accession to the throne." According to London dispatches the throne of Siam has been formally offered to eleven-year-old Prince Ananda, who is now attending school in France.

FERA is making good with its threats that states which do not do their part in supplying relief funds will not get help from the government. Idaho, Minnesota and Washington were notified that their March allotments were being held back until they come across with the funds demanded; and Wisconsin, South Dakota, New Jersey and Ohio received grants for only half of March, the remainder depending on their agreement to furnish certain additional funds. Aubrey Williams, assistant relief administrator, said all the other states were complying with the demands of FERA.

The relief administration took steps to increase the aid being given the drouth-stricken areas of the Middle West. Administrator Harry Hopkins announced in Chicago that in order to tide farmers "over the next three crucial months" the farm credit administration would raise its feed loans from $6 to $10 a month for each head of drouth cattle.

Hopkins added that previous limits on feed loans and direct advances for feed purchases were being weighed, and that "each farmer will be treated as an individual case."

WHO is to be the administrator of the social security program, when and if it is legalized by congress, is a question that is causing a deal of bitterness in Washington. Probably it will ultimately have to be settled by President Roosevelt himself. Secretary of Labor Perkins believes her department should have control of this work, but the house ways and means committee thinks otherwise. It has tentatively decided that the social security board shall be an independent agency, and has turned down a suggestion that the program be administered by a single person. Madame Perkins made a personal call on Chairman Doughton to argue for her proposal, but didn't get anywhere at all with him, so it was figured that she might appeal to the White House.

THE American Federation of Labor proposes to find out immediately what are its chances of fully organizing the workers employed in the automobile industry—and if Doctor Wolman's figures are correct it is likely the federation is doomed to be greatly disappointed. The method adopted is the calling of a secret strike vote among members of the 176 federation locals in the industry. Organizer Francis J. Dillon explained this did not necessarily mean there would be a strike, only the federation's national officers having authority to order such action.

"Now is the time to find out, once and for all," he said, "whether the workers in the automobile industry want the American Federation of Labor. If they want the union, we will find it out through these strike votes. If they don't, well . . ."

The automobile industry is in the midst of the busiest season it has had since 1930. The great majority of its workers are not in the federation ranks and probably would not strike; but its plants could be seriously crippled by strikes in allied industries. Perhaps the American Federation of Labor leaders have some way of explaining how all this would help on the cause of national industrial recovery.

DONALD RICHBERG, executive director of the National Emergency council, and one of the closest advisers of the President, "guaranteed" that there would be no monetary inflation as long as Franklin D. Roosevelt is President. His statement came in answer to a questioner at a lecture in Boston.

Donald Richberg

"If we are to assume that President Roosevelt will be President for the next six years, I can tell you this: I can guarantee there will be no inflation while Franklin D. Roosevelt is President," Richberg said.

He dodged further discussion of the subject, and refused to comment as to what was being done by the government internationally and nationally on monetary policies. However, Richberg did touch on the Townsend plan for payment of $200 monthly to all persons over sixty. He said:

"If everybody over sixty is to get $200 a month, you can be certain it is going to come out of the pockets of everybody between eighteen and sixty.

"When those under sixty have arrived at the unselfish attitude where they are ready to dig to pay everybody over sixty the $200 a month, there will have been a tremendous spread of real Christianity. But the government can't get the money out of thin air."

Richberg flatly denied that the government was issuing baby bonds because bankers had refused to lend the government money, and asserted that several billion dollars more could be borrowed without endangering national credit.

INTERNAL troubles continue to rock Cuba, and President Carlos Mendieta's regime appears tottering. Manuel Despaigne, the only member of Mendieta's cabinet who was in office, has resigned as secretary of the treasury, completing the rout of the ministry brought about by the school strike. And twelve assistant cabinet secretaries have also deserted the administration.

Carlos Mendieta

The cabinet resignations began over differences of opinion as to how to deal with the strike of several hundred thousand students and teachers which has developed into a national movement to oust the Mendieta administration. Communist-led labor organizations are ready to throw their strength behind a revolutionary general strike, and the situation is becoming critical. Although armed forces are being held in readiness to quell disorders, there is some doubt as to their loyalty to the president. Col. Fulgencio Batista, army chief of staff, was reported ready to throw his support to Dr. Carlos Manuel de la Cruz for president if the Mendieta government falls, but leaders of the anti-Mendieta movement have indicated Batista's choice would not be acceptable to them.

Terrorism continues rampant. Bombing has become general, railroads have been blown up, and Havana has suffered considerable damage to property.

SECRETARY OF STATE CORDELL HULL encountered his third success in carrying out his policy of restoring foreign trade by concluding a series of reciprocal agreements with other nations, when a trade treaty with Belgium was signed. Although not entirely satisfactory to Secretary Hull, it was nevertheless a step along the way. The Belgians gave us a tariff or quota concessions on a number of our exports, including automobiles and parts, calculating machines, radios, grapefruit, pears, oatmeal and corn starch. We cut tariffs on plate glass, glass sand, iron and steel mill products, linen fabrics, lace and cement. Reciprocal agreements have been previously concluded with Cuba and Brazil.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ended his vacation at Hyde Park and left for Washington where his administration faces serious trouble, involving the prestige of the White House. Capitol Hill is full of lively curiosity over the President's program, and whether he will fight the present congressional defiance of his leadership and go before the people with one of his famed fireside talks, or whether he will agree to a compromise. Mr. Roosevelt at the end of his second year in office faces a predicament in his relation to congress similar to that which confronted Mr. Hoover in 1931.

Sen. Wagner

Unless he regains control his entire program is likely to bog down. The fight hinges on the $4,880,000,000 work-relief program, the first item in the President's budget message and the principal mainstay of his program. Secret conferences at which slices of pork were reported to have been dangled before the avid eyes of revolting senators were said to have been held. A few supporters of the McCarran prevailing wage amendment which wrecked the bill and forced its recommission to the appropriations committee were said to be wavering under the pressure. Senator Robert F. Wagner, who voted for the amendment, acted as peacemaker. He intimated the possibility of a compromise by paying more than the so-called security wage of $50 a month, but still lower than the prevailing rates. Other leaders declared they would not budge from their positions.

Secretary Ickes has been no help to the President in quelling the revolt. In his recent testimony, Ickes was reluctant to tell a senate committee about allocation of $238,000,000 for a naval shipbuilding program. The senators finally pried out information which would indicate that the navy and the speculators knew all about the appropriation, but none of the members of congress knew about it. The money was to be spent at executive discretion, and senators feel this does not augur well for the proposal to hand to Mr. Roosevelt unlimited power in spending the proposed five billion dollar appropriation.

Since next year will bring another Presidential election, a third of the senators will be up for re-election, and all of the house members. They are watching closely the present situation because, if the President is slipping, they want their own records back home in good order.

THE Blue Eagle lost another tail feather the other day, when Federal Judge Nields at Wilmington, Del., held that the collective bargaining provision of NIRA is unconstitutional when applied to companies not engaged in interstate commerce. The administration and organized labor immediately joined in a fight to preserve the validity of Section 7-A, and announced that an immediate appeal would be taken before the United States Supreme court.

The Wagner labor relations bill making Section 7-A the law of the land and outlawing company unions may have to be revised, if Judge Nields is upheld by the high court. The ruling also gives support to opposition now forming in congress against extension of NRA unless it is reorganized.

Judge Nields' ruling was on an injunction suit brought by the government against the Weirton Steel company to enjoin the steel firm from alleged violations of Section 7-A of NIRA and the labor section of the fair competition code of the iron and steel industry. He upheld the right of employees to form company unions for collective bargaining, thus upsetting the claim of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, that the company intimidated employees and dominated the company union. The court held that the company is primarily engaged in state, not interstate commerce, which congress is not empowered to regulate. Judge Nields stated:

"Power to enact Section 7-A was not conferred upon congress by the 'general welfare' recital in the preamble of the Constitution, nor by the welfare clause, Article 1, Section 8, of the Constitution."

Unless the Supreme court reverses Judge Nields, the decision will prevent the New Deal from interfering with employee-employer relationships of a vast majority of American business.

New Deal policies received another jolt the same day when Judge Charles L. Dawson on application of 35 western Kentucky coal operators issued a writ enjoining the government from enforcing the bituminous coal code, reaffirming an earlier decision that the national industrial recovery act was unconstitutional. Judge Dawson declared that the coal mining is an intrastate business, and beyond the power of congress to regulate.

THE United States and Great Britain remain unconvinced of Japan's high purpose in China, although Eiji Amau, foreign office spokesman, declared that Japan is not trying to persuade China to leave the league, and is not urging China to dismiss foreign advisers. He also insisted that no attempt is being made to force China into an Asiatic bloc in return for financial assistance. In Washington, William Phelps, acting secretary of state, and Sir Ronald Lindsay, British ambassador, went into conference. Twenty-four hours later it was announced from London that Great Britain together with the United States, France and Japan was "exploring proposals" to help China financially.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Brainerd—Washington high school of Brainerd acted as a host of schools in District 24 in a drama festival here of one-act plays.

Storen—Five business places were looted here in one night. The robbers entered a farmers' co-operative store, a sandwich shop, two elevators and a lumber yard office.

Fergus Falls—Brisk demand for naturalization papers has developed here as result of the agitation for old age pensions for native born or naturalized American citizens.

Minneapolis—February was the biggest short month in the history of the Minneapolis police department for the number of tags handed out to motorists, over 13,000 were tagged.

Atwater—Fire destroyed the Nels Lundgren furniture and hardware building here with damage set at $10,000. The Atwater and Grove City fire department fought the blaze for more than an hour.

Lake Park—E. T. Vigen, 79 years old, resident of Becker county for 50 years, died after a brief illness. He had served on the school board for 33 years, 12 as president, and had been a member of the village council for ten years.

St. Paul—April 1 is the deadline for farmers to sign corn-hog reduction contracts and qualify for the bonus the government is to pay for co-operating to reduce production. Dr. Andrew Boss of the University Farm, state director, announced.

St. Paul—Minnesota has 2,686 miles of cement paved roads, the biennial report of N. W. Elsberg, highway commissioner to Governor Floyd B. Olson reveals. The state system embraces 11,339 miles, 4,000 miles of which was added by legislative act in 1933.

Thief River Falls—Fire attributed to a faulty furnace, did an estimated $10,000 damage to a combined office building and apartment house here. The blaze worked up through the basement ceiling which fell through, dumping the fixtures of a jewelry store and an insurance office into the basement.

Two Harbors—Thomas McCarthy of Two Harbors and William J. O'Rourke of Duluth, railway conductors who had been intimate friends for more than the 40 years they had served the same railroad, died within an hour of each other at hospitals in their home cities. Each was 62 years old and widely known over the Range.

Crookston—Two Crookston farmers found a way to beat the icy pavements and get their cream to market. They found the highways too slippery for their cars, he said, so the two farmers returned to their homes and donned ice skates. With a can of cream between them they skated several miles down the highway into Crookston.

Duluth—Eight islands in northeastern Minnesota lakes will receive names and be placed on maps April 2, the federal land office here announced. The islands, heretofor unnamed and not on file on government plats, are in Islan lake, St. Louis county; Lake Vermillion and Partridge lake in St. Louis county and Greenwood lake, Lake county.

Minneapolis—Receipts from liquor taxes in Minnesota the first two months of 1935 increased $127,817 over the same period a year ago, David R. Arundel, state liquor control commissioner, announced. Gross collections for the two month period are $509,078.40, of which hard liquor taxes supplied $105,804.91 as against $81,131.42 for the same period in 1934.

Duluth—Trees snapped under the weight of a heavy ice coating and sleet tore down miles of telephone, telegraph and power lines when the worst sleet storm in the city's history cut off its 100,000 residents from the rest of the world. A tangle of power wires, sagged under an inch and a half coating of ice. Damage caused by the storm was estimated at $500,000.

Bagley—A U. S. district court contest to determine whether the federal government or the state should have the power to condemn land around Wild Rice lake in Clearwater county, has been decided in favor of the state. The federal government sought to condemn the land for a wild rice refuge for Chippewa Indians and the state for an aquatic fowl refuge, the state opposing the government's right.

Minneapolis—Minnesota drouth relief agencies moved into high gear to grant feed loans without regard to the $25 monthly limit placed by the FERA as Harry L. Hopkins, FERA administrator, announced in Chicago that the restriction was to be lifted immediately. Lifting of the $25 limit was ordered because farmers are now faced with spring work and in some cases the limit proved entirely inadequate, Mr. Hopkins said.

St. Paul—A special session of the legislature next winter was proposed by legislative leaders as they advanced the suggestion that this legislature merely appropriae relief funds for 1935 and leave next year's needs to a special session.

Marshall—The three Mitzner brothers, farmers near Balaton, believe in doing things in harmony. In a triple wedding ceremoy at their farm, Ernest marrying Eleanor Scherbert; George marrying Lois Magnuson, and Rudolph marrying Anne Kreugar.

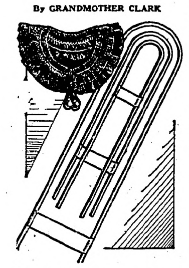
PRETTY WORK IN MALTESE CROCHET

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



This kind of crochet work is not new but has been used by past generations when general crochet work is in vogue. The article to be made is worked up faster than when crocheting with a hook only, and the result is different. A hairpin staple and crochet hook are used, and the hairpin varies in width, depending upon the article to be made or the size of loops that are desired. Cotton, wool, silk or linen thread can be used, and scarfs, centers, edgings, insertions, novelties, in fact any article that is crocheted can be made in maltese crochet. The collar shown above is made of white Shetland wool. The hairpins measure: Small 9x1⅜ inches, medium 9x1⅞ inches, large 12½x2¾ inches. Instructions in hairpin crochet work and for making this collar will be mailed to you upon receipt of 10c. The hairpins are 15c for each size, or 3 sizes for 35c.

Doctors Know!
. . . and they use liquid laxatives
You'd use a liquid, too, if you knew how much better it makes you feel.
A liquid laxative can always be taken in the right amount. You can gradually reduce the dose. Reduced dosage is the secret of real and safe relief from constipation.
Just ask your own doctor about this. Ask your druggist how popular liquid laxatives have become. The right liquid laxative gives the right kind of help—and the right amount of help. When the dose is repeated, instead of more each time, you take less. Until the bowels are moving regularly and thoroughly without aid.
People who have experienced this comfort, never return to any form of help that can't be regulated! The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara, and these are natural laxatives that form no habit. It relieves a condition of biliousness or sluggishness without upset.
To relieve your occasional upsets safely and comfortably, try Syrup Pepsin. The druggist has it.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, which he names "Penelope," in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. Ten-year-old Penelope is given into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin. At a baseball game a ball strikes Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin retires from business, wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for his daughter when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is also won over. Nance's criminal record outweighs Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary. Lanny visits her and Nance persuades her to smuggle out a letter which a confederate of Nance steals.

—8—

For a moment she considered telephoning Dan McNamara, then decided the worthy fellow might prove an embarrassment. So she got a pistol from her bureau drawer—because she was a practical soul and dwelt alone. She had purchased the pistol as a precaution—and went to the door. She cocked the pistol, took a long breath, threw open the door suddenly and raised her weapon.

"Put 'em up," she commanded harshly.

"Don't be silly, Lanny dear," a soft voice entreated her wearily. "It's only me."

"Nancy Belden—you little devil," Lanny almost shouted. "Come in here this instant."

Nance Belden reeled in and Lanny closed the door behind her, turned the bolt, switched on the hall light—and screamed.

"Pipe down," Nance commanded, in that queer, faint, weary voice. "I'm not a corpse, but I'll tell the world I came mighty close to being one just before lock-up time this afternoon. Lanny, dear, I crashed the gate."

"Well, you'll crash out of here in a split second, you little hellion," Lanny cried sharply. "Wet as a dishrag and your hair like a witch's, and covered with blood. Where are you hurt?"

"Bullet through my left arm, high up near the shoulder. That guard could shoot, and he did! If my boy friend hadn't shot back at him and made him hunt his hole I'd be fishbait this minute."

"You've got to get out of here, Nance," Lanny was terrified. "How many visitors have you had since you've been in San Quentin?"

"Just you, Lanny."

"The authorities will look me up and they'll come here. Understand? They'll come here—there, they're on the telephone now. Oh, my good lord, what have I done to deserve this?"

She dashed into her kitchen and took down the telephone receiver. And again a masculine voice said:

"Miss Rebecca Lanning?"

Lanny controlled herself. "Yes," she said calmly. "Who's speaking?"

"Dan McNamara."

"Oh, hello, Dan. How are you?"

"Fine, Lanny. How's yourself?"

"Well, I might be dead for all the interest you've taken in me since you swallowed that good highball you grafted off me the day you came to Doctor Burt's office with that Nance Belden girl." She added archly—"you egg!"

Dan McNamara laughed. "Can I come out now?"

"The very idea. Of course not. It's almost ten o'clock and I'm just about to retire!"

"This is business, Lanny. I've got to see you at once."

"I didn't know the police were after me."

"The police aren't, but the chief is. Lanny, that Nance Belden escaped from San Quentin late this afternoon. She got to San Francisco all right. We know that because we found the speedboat she crossed the bay in tied up in the yacht harbor at the Marina. There was blood all over the cockpit and bullet holes in the hull."

"All of which proves, Dan, that God's in his heaven and all's well with the world. Are you seriously trying to recover the girl and send her back to the penitentiary?"

"I'm not. I'd give two of my big buck teeth to see her make a clean getaway. You know that. But the warden—naturally. It seems you visited Nance two weeks ago and smuggled a letter out for her and mailed it.

"Dan, I give you my word of honor I neither mailed a letter for her nor passed it to somebody else to mail. Nor did the girl discuss with me any plans for escape. If she had I would have told the warden, in order to prevent her escape. It wouldn't have been kind not to do so. The girl is mentally irresponsible and it would have occurred to me that, in any mad attempt to escape, a guard might shoot at her."

"Well a guard did, and he hit her, too. But he didn't stop her. Her outside gang opened on him with a Tommy gun from a speedboat off the point, and made him hunt his hole. Nance swam out to the boat under cover of their protective fire; they hauled her in and beat it forty-five miles an hour across San Pablo bay and headed up toward Carquinez straits, while daylight lasted. After dark they doused their lights and sneaked back. The warden telephoned Central office here and gave the alarm. I wasn't on hand, but of course the captain on duty had the water front covered at once. He had two men at the St. Francis Yacht club and they saw a speed-boat sneak in and across the little harbor to a vacant berth on the Marina side. Before the cops could hurry across, the people in the boat jumped out and to a waiting car. The cops followed in a police car as soon as they could, but one of Nance's friends riddled their front tires with machine-gun bullets and the trail was lost."

"How exciting, Dan!"

"Yes, and it will be more exciting for you, Lanny. I got home about two minutes ago and my phone was ringing. It was central office trying to report to me. They're just starting a couple of dicks out in a cruiser to watch and see if Nance tries to make your house. You're a trained nurse. The warden's found out that much—matter of looking you up in the San Francisco directory. So he thinks that she'll head for your house to receive medical attention. She got hit, you know. And you must be a friend of hers—otherwise why did you call upon her?"

"Dan," said Lanny desperately, "she's here now!"

"Into your car with her, Lanny, and beat it out to my house with her." He gave her the address. "That's the last place on earth the devil himself would hunt for an escaped convict."

"I've just heard a thump and a crash in my living room, Dan. I think she's fainted. Telephone Doctor Burt to come to your home—that he will have to probe a bullet wound and dress it. Tell him to bring some whisky and two or three hot-water bags, and be on hand yourself to let me in. I can't leave here until I've mopped up any bloodstains she may have left on the sidewalk and my front steps. Good-by."

Lanny was right. Nance Belden lay on the floor of the living room in a faint. She picked the girl up in her strong arms and carried her down a short flight of stairs that led from her kitchen to the garage below. She heaved her into the car, ran back upstairs, got a wet mop, and by the light of the electric lamp over the front entrance searched for drops of blood. She found a few and followed them to the sidewalk, eradicating them with vigorous sweeps of the mop, then dashed back into the house, jammed on her hat and coat, ran outside again, threw open the garage door and backed her car out. She paused again, to shut it, then swung up the street as the half-red lamps of a police cruising car turned the corner. She swung wide to give it a clear berth, turned the first corner and spurted. She followed a zig-zag course until she felt sure she had thrown the police car off her trail—provided they had become suspicious and started to follow her; she turned up a residence street that she felt reasonably certain would not be patrolled by traffic officers at that hour of the night, and speeded up.

Dan McNamara was standing on the sidewalk in front of his house when she drew up. He reached into her car, lifted Nance Belden out and ran with her down an alley alongside the house to the basement entrance, which he kicked open. Lanny followed. Up the stairs to the kitchen the big chief ran, through the kitchen and on to a rear bedroom. Lanny jerked a small rug off the floor and threw it on the bed. "Let her bleed on that for a while," she commanded. "No sense in messing this nice clean bed all up. There must be blood in my car, Dan. Take a wet towel and go out and clean it thoroughly, please, while I'm undressing this poor lamb. Get me one of your wife's clean nightgowns."

"Ain't got no wife, Lanny. Use one of mine."

"Just as good as any. Get it. Who takes care of you here?"

"My mother."

"Can she be trusted?"

"I've sent her to the country for a month," he evaded. "I'm sleeping here and eating downtown.

"God bless our home, Dan. Clear out—and watch for Stevie and let him in."

She ran to the kitchen, turned on the hot water and set an enameled skillet under the faucet; then returned, undressed the girl. In an adjoining bathroom she found clean towels and placed a cold one on her head. When she returned to the kitchen, the enameled skillet was sitting in the midst of a cloud of steam, so she knew it had been thoroughly disinfected; she filled it with warm water, carried it into the room and with a wet towel mopped the two holes in Nance's arm and examined the wound.

"Missed the bone," she decided. "Bled like a stuck pig, of course, piece of her dress probably carried into the wound."

In the medicine closet, Lanny discovered a small bottle of iodine. So she doused the wound with it, wrapped a cold towel around the girl's shoulder and tucked her into bed.

In the living room she found a brass box with cigarettes in it, so she lit one and sat down beside Nance, with her capable fingers on the girl's pulse. Evidently the count was satisfactory, for Lanny scowled at the girl and growled: "You little devil! And 'I crashed the gate,' says she proudly. Well, if you aren't the little hell-bender! You've got the nerve of a lion-tamer!"

She found a comb and brush in Dan McNamara's bureau and combed and smoothed the dank, straggly black bob, and when that was done she unbent long enough to implant a kiss on the white brow. "Poor lamb!" she murmured. "Nobody's poor lost darling!"

The girl's eyelids flickered.

"Is that you, Lanny?" the girl murmured faintly.

"Yes, dearie. And you're all right, so don't worry. Nobody's going to take you back to San Quentin."

"The cops chased us at the boat landing, Lanny. Are you sure we shook them off?"

"Of course you did—the big boobs! Now, listen, dearie. I'm going to tell you something, but don't let it disturb you. Take my word for it you're safe. Do you remember Dan McNamara, the chief of police?"

"Of course. Old Daniel's my boy friend."

"Well, you're in his bed. The cops were on your trail, dearie. They suspected you might come to my house, so Dan tipped me off they were coming and to beat it with you out to his house."

Terror shone in the girl's dark eyes. "I'd never trust a cop that fat," she wailed. "Oh, Lanny, you've let him make a sucker out of you." She began to weep hysterically.

"If you don't stop that," Lanny promised, "I'll bat you over the head with this skillet," and she picked that homely utensil up and shook it at Nance. "Dan McNamara's your friend."

"Yes, and chief of police, too. Lanny, I'll die if they take me back. They'll put me in the dungeon—I'm afraid of the dark."

"Shut up. You're not afraid of anything. You've got your little red badge of courage, you scaramouche! You afraid? My foot! Didn't you crash the gate and swim for that speedboat under fire?"

"Machine-gun fire, at that," Dan McNamara supplemented, from the doorway. "They opened on her and the boat from the towers." He came to the side of the bed and grinned down at the terrified girl. "Don't you worry, Nance. You're safe. I'm a cop, but I'm not without some sporting blood—your getaway earns three rousing cheers from old Dan McNamara." His big hand strayed over her face.

"You're a good old hunk of cheese," she assured him.

She turned her head toward Lanny. "Am I going to die, Lanny?" she asked.

"Not unless I kill you—which I'm liable to do if you don't buck up and believe what I tell you. You've been shot but it doesn't amount to much. You'll be all right in a week or two."

"Then I'll be good, Lanny." The tired eyes closed and while Lanny stood by, wondering what to say next, Nance sank into a sleep of profound exhaustion.

"Let her alone until Stevie comes," Lanny suggested. "The wound has stopped bleeding. Come out into the living room and if you're as crooked a cop as you ought to be you've got liquor in the house and I've got to have a drink of it." Her middle-aged face was very serious.

TO BE CONTINUED.

Dan McNamara Reached Into the Car, Lifted Nance Belden Out, Ran Up the Stairs and On to a Rear Bedroom. Lanny Jerked a Small Rug Off the Floor and Threw It on the Bed.

LAND GIVEN TO EARLY SETTLER

Original Idea of Subsistence Homesteads.

Subsistence homesteads, over which we are making so much to-do nowadays, are really no new thing under the sun. We had government-aided settlement of surplus population on the land generations ago; only the conditions were so different on the surface that we usually fail to see the underlying similarity.

Our earliest subsistence homesteaders were the very ones whom our somewhat academic present-day resisters of innovation are wont to laud as the very type and model of "rugged individualism." We commonly deprive them of the benefit of Latin adjective, and call them simply homesteaders, or sometimes pioneers.

Let there be no shout that the original homesteaders were not feeders from the hand of government generosity. They most decidedly were. They got a lot more than the present subsistence-homestead population will get. True, subsistence homesteaders of today are helped to the land, but they will have to pay for it. The original homesteader got outright, absolute, fee-simple title to his land, either scot-free or so cheap that it might as well have been.

It wasn't a carefully shaved-off two or ten-acre plot, either. The old song, that "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm," was borne out in fact: For 100 years Uncle Santa Claus did deal out whole farms. All the homesteaders had to do was go out and subsist on them.

The subsistence problem was different then, of course. Instead of looking for a part-time job that would pay him enough cash to buy factory-made furniture, clothing and kitchenware, the original homesteader (plus his family) had to make them on the spot, except for rifle, powder and a few tools and pots.

But materials for such home manufacture were available; and to counterbalance some of the scarcities of household gear, food was usually abundant and cheap. The fresh-broken virgin soil yielded many years of harvest before fertilizers needed even to be thought of, and until pioneer days were well over the woods and prairies swarmed with game. No subsistence homesteader of today will be able to fire both barrels of a shotgun into the air and bring down a bushel of carrier pigeons, without even troubling to take aim, as his old-time namesake frequently could.

The beneficent government took most effective means to clear title to the land it was so lavishly giving away, by sending out such active agents as Anthony Wayne, Andrew Jackson and "Old Rough-and-Ready" Taylor to negotiate with the Indians. The present administration is much tenderer: so far, at least, it hasn't shot a single mortgage-foreclosing banker, or herded even one landholding insurance company off onto a semiarid reservation. It is actually paying them now as it expects one day itself to be paid.—Science Service, Kansas City Star.

School Notes

Grades One and Two

The following children had 100 in Spelling: Dorothy, Lorna, Geraldine, Marvin, Orville L., and Sylvia.

Dorothy is ahead in the word drill race in our Elson Reader.

The first grade children memorized the poem "In the Heart of a Seed" by Kate Louise Brown during language period. They also studied the story "When the Root Children Wake Up."

Donna Mae Carlson gained the most in weight this last month.

We are beginning letter cutting for A. B. C. books in Art Class.

Intermediate Grades

The following had 100 in Spelling last Friday.

Luella Fluke, Alma Johnson, Yvonne Redal, Lillian Fredrickson, Ruby Werner, Ruth Halvorson, Irene Ness, Elaine Tollefsrud, Lois Hanson, Rubin Ness.

The following received these marks in their test on the United States in fifth grade geography: Romal Burtness 97, Lois Hanson 94, Ruby Werner 93, Russell Sanoden 90.

Upper Grades

The high school pupils were in our room during the short St. Patricks' Day program we had last Friday.

Raymond Sagstuen is now president of the G. E. C.

The members of the seventh and eighth grade social science class who did the best work in social science during the past the weeks presented a debate Wednesday. They were: Opal Werner, Clara Hoffman, Lucille Horien, Milton Hanson, Vernice Tollefsrud, Lorna Peterson and Robert Sandberg.

The sixth grade English Class memorized the poem "The Psalm of Life" this week.

High School

The Freshmen have completed Shakespear's drama "The Merchant of Venice" and are learning familiar quotations within the play.

The English 2 class has started the study "The Idylls of the King" by Alfred Lord Tennyson

The English 3 class is studying essays.

New class reporters were elected on Friday. The Freshmen elected Beatrice, the Sophomores Orlene, and the Juniors Clayton.

Lida thought she made a good guess at a question in Commercial Geography on Friday, but the result was a poor guess.

On Friday the High School was entertained at a St. Patricks Day program by the Upper Grades.

Wannahear a tongue twister? The Freshmen stared in amazement when the following answer was given to Mr. Nybakken's question asking what osmosis was, "When a thin liquid goes into a thick liquid to make a thick liquid thin."

11 Month Weather Cycles

The "sequence" is at work in repeating again this year the dust storms of the midwest.

The sequence is explained in a report to the American Association for the Advancement of Science by Charles D. Reed, of the U. S. weather bureau, Des Moines.

It is a recurrence of similar temperatures every 11 months, which applies to the region between the Mississippi and the Rockies, and Canada and Oklahoma. Its recognition is one of the beginnings of the new science of long-distance forecasting.

Udner the observations of this Midwest sequence the people who wish to know whether April will be warm can decide with fair certainty by looking at the temperature records of last May.

If May was warm, the coming April is likely to be warm. If May was cool, April should be cool. The rule applies to all the months of the coming summer.

Reed cited Minnesota records showing a temperature of one degree more than normal one year followed by a degree above normal 11 months later. This, he said, proved true at 93 per cent of the Minnesota stations where these records were taken.

In North Dakota sequences happened at 92 per cent of the stations.

These studies have advanced sufficiently to establish the average reliability of this sequence in North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Illinois, Iowa and Kansas.

They do not mean, Reed pointed out in his report, that last year's disasters are to be repeated. Although the temperature changes may be slight in a sequence, the differences in effect may be large.

Fred Stienhauer has purchased a new Dodge sedan. He said that he expected to take a trip out west over the top of the mountains with it this coming summer. We assure him a lot of fun out of a trip like that with a new car.

Send us the news.

Auction Sale April 6

We are this week advertising a big farm sale for John Olberg, ten miles east of Middle River. Mr. Olberg is one of the pioneers in Marshall county. He said he is getting to old to farm so he is going to sell all his farm machinery, horses, cows and other items at a public sale on his farm on Saturday, April, 6.

Read the sale ad on the back page of this issue and watch for posters.

The Disputed License Fee

"No, no, a thousand times no," said Senator Henry C. Steining of Clay county, or words to that effect.

The much disputed and much delayed decision as to the license fee that owners of motor cars must pay in Minnesota was being hotly debated in the Senate.

The House, rather surprisingly had passed a bill raising license fees in an amount of $1,300,000 over those paid last year. The Senate seemed inclined to stick to the reductions that have prevailed in the last biennium. The House bill, amended by the Senate so as to continue the rates of the last two years was was under discussion and had been argued pro and con at long lenght. It was noon of the first day of spring, the stomachs of the grave and reverend Senators were empty and their throats were hoarse from much shouting They were ready to vote. Then it was that the Senator from Clay serving his first session in the Legislature, and already well known as a sound and conservative thinker, arose and addressed the Chair.

"That I may not be accused of politiccal motives, I want to explaine my vote," said Senator Stiening. He produced a bundle of letters and read them to the Senate. They were from Farmer-Labor groups in Wilkin and Clay counties, begging the Senator to vote for the same motor vehicle license rates as have prevailed the last two years. It was an impressive list of letters.

"But perhaps you will ask me" said the Senator, "have I not also received letters of an opposite tenor. Yes I have, and I will tell you about them."

"Here," declared the Senator, is a letter from a business man asking me to vote for higher license rates. This man is pushing a proposal to build a $350,000 bridge across Red River. If this goes through, the highway department will be compelled to cut off a portion of his building and he will get money as damages which will enable him to build a new building. Of course, he wants higher license rates."

The Senator paused impressively and then shouted, "Shall I vote for such a thing as this?"

"No!" boomed the voice of Senator Bob Marshall of Hennepin, and the galleries smiled.

"Here's another letters," said Senator Steining, again waving it aloft. "This man is spending the winter in Florida. He wants higher license rates, too. Shall I vote for such a thing?"

Here the Senator leveled a finger at his colleague, Senator Marshall, and Marshall, this time re-enforced by a chorus, boomed back, "No!"

By this time the Senate and the galleries were both enjoying the party, and every sally of the Senator from Clay evoked a volley of noes and gales of laughter He produced another letter pleading for higher license fees. It was from a successful physician on his way to California for a vacation. He waved still another letter asking for higher fees. That one was from a tired business man who frolics each year in Europe. After each letter Senator Stiening repeated his inquiry "Shall I vote for such a thing?" and leveled the appealing finger again at his colleagues who roared "No" for him.

Whereupon the roll was called and there were some 40 "noes" and less than 20 "ayes" for higher license.

Mud Lake Restoration

Restoration of the Mud Lake area in Marshall county as one of the greatest waterfowl breeding and nesting localities in the Northwest was made a sure go last week by the passage of an enabeling act by the legislature, permitting the state to acquire lands in the area by condemnation.

The bill, which also authorizes diversion of $50,000 in public shooting grounds funds to the project has been signed by Governor Olson.

Acquisition of land within the the area will start speedily, according to the conservation authorities of the the state. About 52,713 acres are included in the project and restoration work, to be constructed by the Federal Government, and will cost approximately $469,000.

Lands acquired by the state will be deeded to the government and the government will pay the price awarded by the court.

In addition to payment for the land, the government will expend an amount perhaps in excess of $100,000 on the necessary improvement work to restore the area.

The project includes the making of a lake of about 20,000 acres, which, before it was drained was only 5,000 and then was one of the greatest waterfowl breeding and nesting areas in the Northwest.

The bill has had the hearty endorsement of Minnesota conservationists and sportsmen.

Actual work on the Mud Lake project which will extend the value of the Thief Lake preject, already completed, will start soon, conservation officials believe.

Sportsmen's Meeting Here

A Sportsmen's Meeting will be held at Holt on Tuesday evening April, 2 to consider organizing a local Sportmen's Club. All sportmen should be there.

Returned From Hospital

Knute Nelson returned here last Friday from the St. Luke's hospital at Thief River Falls where he spent a week. He is at the present time staying at the Ole Ellingson home in town, and is according to reports, getting along better.

The Hills Grow Bigger

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Benitt returned home on Wednesday of last week from the southern part of the state where they had spent a week with relatives and friends. They were called there because of the death of Mrs. Benitt's mother, Mrs. Holst, whose funeral they attended.

Mr. Benitt, in an interview, stated that the hills in southern Minnesota are getting larger every year and that as the folks down there are getting older it is harder for them to climb them He said he was really surprised to see how few new cars were being used down there in comparison with the number of new ones that you see here. That alone was proof that this part of the country must have the money, and that there was a good crop last year.

Load Limit On Highway

The state highway department put on load restriction on all the main highways thru this part of the state on Tuesday. The load limit here is set at three tons. This includes the load and the truck. This means that if you have a truck that weighs two ton, you can haul one ton loads.

The department has to put on this restriction to safegaurd the highways during the spring breakup. One trip over a soft road with a heavy truck can cause enough damage to cost the state several thousand dollars for repair.

Letting Delinquent Lands Soon

According to word received from A. A. Trost, County Attorney, the county has mailed out notices to all persons who have indicated an interest in renting tax delinquent lands from the county, setting April 5th at ten o'clock A. M. and from day to day thereafter for the letting of such lands. For several reasons the county did not publish any legal notice about this letting but, in order to let farmers here know about it, we are giving you the news so you won't miss out on land that you may want to rent.

Anyone interested in renting lands from the county will have to appear at the meeting on the 5th of April at Warren, even though they have filed application for the land heretofore with the County Auditor.

The Coming Of Spring--

MANY savage tribes go through magical ceremonies to make sure that Spring will come. They believe that their weird songs and dancing and ritual really bring the warm air of Spring.

Civilized people, too, work for Spring, though with a different purpose. We plan quietly how to use this life-bringing season to our own practical advantage.

What are your plans for making this Spring profitable financially for you? Call on us if we can serve you.

WHEN YOU TAKE A LAXATIVE

. . . use a spoon

It isn't what brand of laxative you take that's so important—it's the form. A liquid laxative can be taken in any required amount. If only a little is needed, you need never take a bit too much.

Doctors favor the easily measured liquid laxatives. Instead of any form that does not encourage variation from the fixed dose. A fixed dose may be an overdose for you—or your child.

Always remember this one thing about constipation: the secret of any real relief is reduced dosage.

Give the bowels only as much help as may be needed, and less help as the need grows less. You will find Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin an excellent aid in regulating the bowels. It contains senna and cascara (natural laxatives) and it will clear-up any bilious, sluggish condition without upset. Delightful taste, and pleasant action. Your druggist has it.

When you treat seed wheat with New Improved CERESAN—the ethyl mercury phosphate dust — you buy a bargain! Just figure it out yourself:

The cost of treating seed for 40 acres, at the average U. S. rate of seeding, is only $1.25. Yet you can expect at least 45 bushels more wheat from this acreage, for many tests on clean seed prove that New Improved CERESAN increases yields 1.13 bushels an acre. You couldn't buy a better bargain any other way!

To get such results, New Improved CERESAN must increase stands and control stinking smut. A pound treats 32 bushels of seed. One lb., 75c; 5 lbs., $3.00. Wheat Pamphlet free. Ask dealer or write Bayer-Semesan Co., Inc., Wilmington, Delaware.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, which he names "Penelope," in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. Ten-year-old Penelope is given into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin. At a baseball game a ball strikes Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin retires from business, wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for his daughter when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is also won over. Nance's criminal record outweighs Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary. Lanny visits her and Nance persuades her to smuggle out a letter which a confederate of Nance steals. Nance escapes, although shot, by swimming to a speed-boat manned by friends, and goes to Lanny's apartment. Lanny tells Chief McNamara, who orders her to bring Nance to his apartment.

—9—

"Those cops at your house will stick around, Lanny, and when you return they'll want to know where you've been. What are you going to tell them?"

"Tell them nothing. Let those two cops sit in their car in front of my house all night and watch it. What do I care? At least they'll keep burglars away. And when finally they do round me up and waltz me down to central station to be questioned, you'll do the questioning, will you not?"

"Lanny," said Dan McNamara, "if you were a man and on the force I'd make you a detective sergeant. You're a bear-cat, that's what you are. But you smuggled that letter out of San Quentin for Nance and turned it over to Sapphire Susie!"

"Indeed! Well, let me tell you, Dan McNamara, that I'm a respectable woman and I never associate, if I know it, with ladies known to the police by such names."

"Maybe you didn't know it, but you gave Sapphire Susie a lift in your car from the main gate at San Quentin down to Greenbrae. The guard remembers seeing her hanging around the main gate, as if she was waiting for somebody; later she got into a coupe with a middle-aged lady, who looked so respectable he took another look at the pass she had just surrendered to him and remembers that the name on the pass was yours. The pass entitled you to visit Nance Belden. Guards may not remember such incidents until something happens. Then they're fast on their feet, Lanny."

"And who, if you please, is Sapphire Susie?"

"She's did a stretch at San Quentin for blackmail. She was discharged a week before you visited Nance, and before Susie left the Big House, Nance fixed it with her to lend a helping hand. Apparently Nance didn't want to confide the minute details of her plan of escape to Susie. Susie's a swell looker but a little bit dumb—she levied blackmail through the mail, understand, and signed her name, instead of hiring a smart shyster lawyer. So Nance decided to send her written instructions out by you, and Susie agreed to pick you up, pinch the letter, and deliver it."

"Dan, I assure you I wasn't in any plot to effect a prison delivery. If I'd thought for an instant I was doing anything wrong—why, Nance told me to read her letter and if I disapproved of its contents to destroy it. I didn't see any harm in that."

"You violated the rules of the prison and you could be punished for it by a term in that same prison."

"I'm a respectable woman—"

"That gets you nowhere. I was a respectable chief of police once—and now look at me. If your part in this leaks out you can only be punished—and you can't be convicted unless you talk in your sleep. If my part in this should leak out I'll be punished and disgraced and thrown out of the best job I've ever had. However—" he raised his glass to her—"mud in your eye, Lanny."

"Happy days, Dan, you gorgeous softy."

The doorbell rang, Dan opened it and Doctor Burt stepped in. He paused in amazement at sight of Lanny, glass in hand; she motioned him with it down the hall. "First door at the end, Stevie. You'll find your patient there."

"That girl with the dissociated personality, Nance Belden, escaped from San Quentin late this afternoon, Chief," Stephen began, and handed the latter a newspaper. "Big story. First woman to escape from San Quentin." He gazed severely upon Lanny. "What are you doing here, Lanny?"

"All h—l to pay, Stevie dear, and no pitch hot. That Belden girl is here with a bullet hole in her shoulder; she's suffering from shock and submersion and chill and loss of blood and she's cold as a penguin's tail. I've given her a stiff noggin of Dan's terrible booze and a fortieth of a grain of strychnin and an alcohol rub. She's sleeping. Did you bring those hot-water bottles?"

"Yes," he said humbly, indicating a bag he carried. Lanny fell upon the bag, and retired to the kitchen to fill the hotwater bottles and tuck them in alongside her child patient. "Lucky if she doesn't develop pneumonia, Stevie."

Doctor Burt stood looking down at the sleeping Nance. "Out of the warden's arms and straight into yours. You guessed she'd call on Lanny, eh, Dan, you're an old fox."

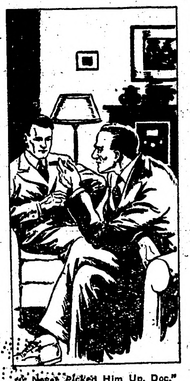
"No, Doc, I'm not. A fox has brains."

"He's a lamb, Stevie, just a big ram lamb."

While Lanny was assisting Doctor Burt in dressing Nance Belden's wound, Dan McNamara sat in his plain little living room and read the story of her escape from San Quentin. It appeared that throughout all of Sunday afternoon two men, in a motor boat, had been anchored in the cove off San Quentin apparently fishing for striped bass, which abound at this particular point in San Francisco bay. There were other boats anchored there also—eight in all. The guard at the entrance to the women's quarters had observed them, until, about four-thirty p. m., just before locking-up time a guard in one of the lookout towers on the hill had telephoned him that a boat had approached close to the shore.

The guard had thereupon stepped out of his kiosk and around to the rear of it, which faced toward the beach, less than thirty feet distant. He had shouted at the men in the boat and warned them to be off, that they were not permitted to approach that close, that they were within the dead-line. To this the men replied that they couldn't help it; that their motor had gone dead and that the tide had set them in; that they were trying to make repairs and would be off as soon as they could.

While the guard was in the rear of his station, engaged in this conversation, Nance Belden had approached the gate, kicked off her shoes and, digging her toes into the quarter-inch wire mesh of the sixteen-foot gate, had scrambled to the top with incredible rapidity. She was just climbing down the outside of the gate when the guard in the tower on the hill saw her and immediately telephoned to the guard at the main gate; also to the guard arguing with the men in the motor-boat. Upon hearing the telephone bell ringing in his station, that guard had walked back into it; at the same time, keeping the kiosk between her and the approaching guard, Nance Belden had dashed down to the beach and commence swimming rapidly toward the motor-boat, the motor of which instantly started, and the boat commenced edging in to pick her up.



"He Never Picked Him Up, Doc."

When the guard in the kiosk, apprised of what was taking place, ran out with a rifle in his hand and shouted to Nance Belden to come back or he would shoot her, a machine-gun in the motor-boat promptly came into action against him. He had not been hit, but a shower of bullets had spattered the ground around and in front of him and another burst had gone over his head and through the sentry box. The guard had fired once at the Belden woman and hit her, but immediately thereafter, fearful of being killed, he had thrown himself flat on the ground.

The guard in the watch-tower on the hill had then brought his machine-gun into action. His first burst had been short, and drew answering fire from the machine gunner in the boat. Although the range was four hundred yards, the first burst from the motor-boat tore through the wooden watch-tower, which rather distracted the aim of the guard there; nevertheless, the latter stuck to his gun and continued to fire, spattering bullets around the swimming girl and into the boat.

The men in the boat did not hesitate, but came on through the hail of bullets; the escaping prisoner had in the meanwhile either sunk or dived; at any rate a widening tinge of red appeared on the water. She was down about thirty seconds, then her head emerged close to the boat, and she swam with one arm to the side of it; a man reached over and grasped her under both arms and jerked her into the boat, which instantly turned, put on full speed and raced away close past two other boats. Fearful of killing innocent people, the guard in the watch-tower held his fire until the escaping boat was in the clear; then he and the guard in another tower came into action again. But a target moving at a speed of forty-five miles an hour is not easily hit; the fire was either over or short and the boat did not stop. When it was out of range, it turned, and in the rapidly fading light of the winter day, headed up into San Pablo bay, running close to the south shore to avoid the chop of the waves in this shallow expanse of water. They ran without lights.

While the course they had taken would seem to indicate a desire to run up Carquinez straits to the Sacramento or the San Joaquin rivers, land and escape in a waiting automobile into central California, the warden realized that his quarry was not lacking in intelligence; that, fast as they fled, they would realize that the telephone is faster; that the roar of their motor must betray them a mile away. He had, therefore, taken the precaution to notify the chiefs of police of Pittsburg, Martinez, Sausalito, Richmond, Berkeley, Oakland and San Francisco, leaving to these the task of notifying intermediate points. The warden had a suspicion the fugitives would double back to San Francisco—particularly since the girl was wounded and must be hidden in order to receive medical attention.

"And here she is," Dan McNamara muttered. "Cripes, what a woman! Lord, how I love a woman with brains and courage. Just a little simple matter of taking pains and taking risks. She didn't go in to the dining hall for dinner with the other prisoners. Smart! Knew she couldn't make a fast swim on a full stomach. Smart enough to notice the warden's oversight in failing to fill in with barbed wire topping that eighteen-inch space at the top of his gate. Of course they figured they needn't bother with that, because no woman could climb a sixteen-foot wire mesh fence anyhow, and if she did she'd only drop down into the waiting arms of the guard, who is never absent, night or day. But Nance Belden knew she could climb that fence barefoot; she knew she had thirty seconds to do it and a drop on the other side from the top of the gate. Her job was to induce the guard to turn his back—and her friends in the boat did that!

"She knew she'd been seen from the watch-tower on the hill and the guard at the gates notified by telephone; as he returned from the edge of the beach, around the south side of his kiosk, Nance slipped by him on the north side and was in the water as the guard took up the 'phone. Smart! She knew no guard will stick under machine-gun fire at fifty yards, merely to stop a woman convict escaping from prison. Smart! Sank and swam under water—and then the zigzag course between the boats of the other fishermen, after they picked her up. Fine psychology—she engineered it all—and I know she's a nut! And then straight to Lanny for medical attention—straight to the one human being she knew she could trust—no, I'll not send her back. And I don't particularly want to catch her friends either. I'll say they're friends! Wish I had a couple of friends that'd come on through machine-gun fire for me! I had thought the world was selfish and cruel and thieving and lying—but there's nobility left in it after all."

Stephen Burt came out of the bedroom and sat down and stared at the chief of police with grave interest. "Well, my good Javert," he said presently.

"Your good what?"

"I called you Javert. Don't you know who Javert was?"

Dan McNamara shook his head. "I never picked him up, Doc."

"You wouldn't. He was a character in 'Les Miserables,' a novel by Victor Hugo. He was a fly-cop in Paris, and he pursued an ex-convict named Jean Valjean for twenty years, because he believed the man was a crook. Once a crook, always a crook, was Javert's philosophy. And when he discovered at last he had the goods on Jean Valjean and it was his duty to arrest him, he discovered simultaneously that Jean Valjean was also a good and noble man, which proved extremely embarrassing to Javert."

"I understand how that could be, all right, Doc. What did Javert do then?"

"He climbed up on the railing of a bridge over the Seine, unpinned his shield, threw it into the river and jumped in after it."

"He committed suicide in order to give his man the breaks."

"Exactly."

"Well," Dan McNamara decided after pondering this a half minute, "I wouldn't be boob enough to do that. He should have made a stool pigeon out of Jean Valjean and maybe he'd have gotten somewhere in his job."

Stephen smiled. He liked this heavy man, with the Celtic face as inscrutable as a Chinaman's. As a specialist in mental diseases he knew the part heredity plays in the formation of character, and one did not have to look at the chief twice to know that he came of courageous ancestry. No vague fears or anxieties in this fellow, Stephen thought. Courageous men are usually honest men; even when they are not honest they are sufficiently courageous to pay the price, no matter how high, for the things they do with their eyes open—to pay it cheerfully and refrain thereafter from whimpering.

"So you're going to protect this girl are you, Chief?"

Firestone GROUND GRIP TIRES

THAT 6,000,000 FARMERS NEED FOR THEIR CARS, TRUCKS AND TRACTORS TO PULL THEM THROUGH MUD, SAND OR BAD ROADS OF ANY KIND

YOU don't need chains, for these Ground Grip Tires will pull you through where chains would leave you stranded in mud or sand. Firestone Ground Grip Tires for motor cars, trucks and tractors give the farmer greatest economy ever offered, and relief from being stranded on mud roads and in soft ground.

Why can Firestone give you these wonderful new tires with the wide tread that withstands this terrific pull and strain, and still does not destroy the cord body? Firestone can do this because the body of this tire is built with Gum-Dipped cords. Underneath the tread, the patented construction feature of two extra layers of Gum-Dipped High Stretch cords gives extra adhesion of the tread to the cord body, enabling Firestone Tires to hold on this heavy, tough, scientifically designed tread. This tire cleans itself on any kind of clay or soft ground, and the tread projections have been so placed, that they are always in contact with the road, doing away with any bumping.

You cannot afford to be without these tires on your trucks and passenger cars. If your tractor is not equipped with rubber tires, see your nearest Firestone Service Store—tire dealer or implement dealer, and learn how easy it is to make the changeover. CURRENT EVENTS PASS IN REVIEW

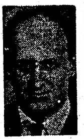
TREASURY DEPARTMENT PLANS WOULD READJUST CURRENCY STRUCTURE OF NATION.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY MORGENTHAU revealed plans to dip into profits from gold seizure to retire $674,625,680 of the national debt through the use of gold certificates. Potentially inflationary, it will deprive national banks of the power to issue currency and save the government an annual interest charge of $13,500,000. Questions on inflationary implications were avoided by treasury officials, but they admitted the plan would "put gold back to work which can be expanded."



Secretary Morgenthau

The maneuver will place in the hands of the federal reserve banks $674,625,680 of gold certificates, which must be used as backing for issue of the same sum in federal reserve notes to retire the bonds. Note issue against the bonds could be expanded if currency demands warranted, to about $1,687,500,000, since a federal reserve note need not be backed by more than 40 per cent gold or gold certificates in like percentage. What will happen will be the immediate simplification of our currency system. The treasury and federal reserve banks will have all the authority to issue money. The plan involves retirement on August 1 of $674,625,680 of 2 per cent federal securities and substitution of federal reserve notes for $657,937,080 of outstanding national bank currency. These bonds will be retired with surplus funds created by devaluing the Roosevelt dollar from 100 cents to 59.06 cents, gold. The total profit was $2,812,000,000.

National bank notes issued by national banks against federal securities represent more than one-tenth of the nation's circulating currency. The administration's program likely means the permanent abandonment of the national bank note which has been used since the Civil war. The circulation privileges expire on all bonds deposited by banks and held in trust by the treasury on July 22, 1935, except on two issues. By calling for redemption, the treasury will retire all securities bearing "circulation privilege" and national banks will no longer have suitable security for issuance of their own notes.

THE Mendieta administration in Cuba has established a military dictatorship over the island, constitutional law has been suspended, the death penalty for rebels imposed, and military governors designated for Havana and provinces. Washington is watching the situation with keen interest. Bombings and rioting are increasing, according to reports, with ten dead and fifteen injured. The objectives of the opponents of the government is the removal from office of President Mendieta and Colonel Fulgencio Batista, chief of the army. The strike has become almost general, nearly paralyzing all activities in the island. Repressive measures taken by the government to quell the strikers strongly resemble the strong-arm methods prevalent in the Machado regime, according to observers.

THE senate passed the army appropriation bill, and it now goes to the house. The measure adds $20,000,000 to the original bill, making the total appropriation of $400,000,000 almost a record high, and will add 46,250 to our army strength, making the total of enlisted men 165,000. Warm talk flowed freely as the senate debated the measure. Senator Lewis said that conflict might come between Russia and Japan and he asked: "With the army of Russia and the navy of Japan, where do we stand?" Senator McAdoo also speaking in favor of the bill said:

> "Unless we want to continue to be a boob nation, we will not hesitate to make this increase in the army. It is justified by the wisdom and the necessities of national defense."

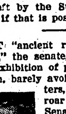
THREE Illinois farmers refused to tell the government census takers how much their farms were worth and how heavily they were mortgaged, claiming such information was none of the government's business. The trio were arrested and held for a grand jury, charged with violating the census act.

THE $4,880,000,000 relief bill was again returned to the senate marked "Rush!" There was no rush. Reports were that enough senators who had voted for the prevailing wage clause had been won over to the administration views to insure passage, but the bill, as revised by the committee, did not come up. Senator Long's one-man filibuster, the army bill, and other matters claimed the attention of the august senators, and the fight was delayed. Harry Hopkins, federal relief administrator, said 20,500,000 persons were on relief, but expressed the belief that employment was increasing. He explained the apparent discrepancy by adding that many persons who had hitherto taken care of themselves have finally exhausted their resources. As the relief measure faced the start of its sixth week of debate, Long threatened fresh delays by trying to force a senate test of his proposed investigation of Farley, and administration leaders prepared to resort to drastic measures if the Kingfish attempts to hold the floor by "trying" his case in the senate after the adverse committee report. Senator Glass, chairman of the appropriations committee, is prepared to ask for early action on his amendment to the senate rules to prohibit a senator from talking on extraneous matters while an appropriation bill is pending.

AFTER twenty months of bargaining, the documents conveying full title to the Chinese Eastern railway to Manchukuo were initialed in Tokyo, thus eliminating Russia as a factor in Manchukuo. The written approval of the agreements was signed by Koki Hirota, Japanese foreign minister; Dr. Constantine Youreneff, Soviet ambassador to Japan; and by Gen. Ting Shih-Yuan, Manchukuoan minister of finance. The consideration was 140,000,000 yen, or about $39,300,000. The documents require that all three governments approve them before their formal signing about March 23. Thus is ended forty years of Russo-Japanese contention for domination.

A NEW gold suit is menacing administration financing and money policies. The suit reopening the question of investors' claims for payment of 1,800 million dollars of government bonds in gold or an equivalent, is brought by Robert A. Taft, son of the late chief justice, over the sum of $1.07. Taft demands either payment of bonds in gold or suspension of all refunding of the gold clause certificates. Before going to court, Taft presented to the treasury a $50 gold clause Liberty bond and four $1.07 interest coupons attached, and demanded gold for both, but was refused. The suit may force the administration to close the loopholes left by the Supreme court decisions, if that is possible.

THAT "ancient repository of dignity," the senate, has ben treated to an exhibition of personalities, vituperation, barely avoided fistic encounters, and general uproar centering about Senator Long that should set a record for even that august body. Goaded into action by the almost daily tirades of Louisiana's Kingfish, majority leader, Joe Robinson of Arkansas arose white with rage and let loose a castigation designed to blast the irrepressible Long into submission. Robinson appealed to the senate to assert itself and put Long, whom he called "a madman," in his place. Vice President Garner and more than a dozen senators shook hands with Robinson when he closed, and galleries applauded until the chair threatened to clear them. It had no perceptible effect on Long other than to cause him to rush back to the senate chamber, and renew his attack on Robinson.



Senator Robinson

The next day Huey precipitated another verbal free-for-all when he resumed his one-man campaign against Postmaster General Farley and the New Deal in general. Long charged that Farley was instrumental in quashing an indictment against a bank in which Norman Davis, "ambassador at large," was interested. For his trouble Kingfish received a liberal supply of ridicule. He also sent to the senate post office committee a letter in which the accusation was made that Farley is "profiting" from 25 business concerns in New York city, involving violation of four criminal statutes. When questioned, Farley said he had no statement to make.

Long's uncomplimentary remarks about Farley generally came to naught, as the post offices and post roads committee blocked the Kingfish, holding that "he had not produced facts or evidence constituting a proper case for investigation."

THE bill to repeal the pink slip publicity provision of the 1934 income tax law passed the house by a large majority of 302 to 98. The resolution apparently will win in the senate where a poll has shown it will be adopted by a close vote. Sentiment for repeal of the "snooper" clause has been growing, and there is no indication that the President will oppose the measure.

THE Greek revolt has been crushed, according to government reports, and preparations are being made for an attack on the island of Crete, held by former Premier Venizelos, leader of the insurrection. General Kondylis, in charge of army operations in Macedonia, was reported returning to Athens, after routing the rebels from their principal strongholds in Macedonia. It has been indicated that Venizelos has accepted defeat in Macedonia and Thrace and will proclaim Crete a separate state.

BY A vote of 23 to 1 the house ways and means committee approved the Vinson bonus bill, and gave the rival Patman bill a possible edge. The committee instructed Chairman Doughton to ask a wide open rule permitting inflationists to move the Patman measure as a substitute on the floor. Patman supporters claim the house will pass the first bonus bill brought up, but conservatives are working to jockey the "printing press money" measure out of preferred position. The Vinson bill is favored by the American Le

Seed Grain Treatment for Control of Disease

Supplementing published warnings to farmers to treat seed grain for the control of various seed-borne diseases, the United States Department of Agriculture has issued Miscellaneous Publication No. 219, entitled, "Treat Seed Grain." It states: "Treating seed grain for the control of certain smuts and other diseases is a standard recommended practice. It improves yield and quality. It provides good insurance against losses from certain diseases, and, unless the grower is sure that his seed is not contaminated, treatment should be given to all wheat, oats, barley and grain sorghum."

Among the recommendations made is the use of ethyl mercury phosphate dust treatment (improved ceresan)—applicable to spring, winter and durum wheats, oats and barley for control of all diseases listed. The list is as follows: "Spring wheat—hard, red, white and durum —stinking smut (bunt); winter wheat—stinking smut (bunt); oats—loose and covered smuts; barley—covered smut and black loose smut and stripe.

It is suggested that "for further information consult your county agent or write your State Extension Service or the United States Department of Agriculture."

Horse Still Survives

In its first enthusiasm over the Machine age, the world prepared to say farewell to the horse. But horseflesh remains as hardy as ever and refuses to be shoved into oblivion. One of the predictions was the disappearance of the war horse, in favor of motor cars, trucks, tanks and motorized artillery batteries. Motorized artillery was given a thorough test by the United States army, and the verdict was that the horse could never be entirely displaced, for his superiority in rough country and over muddy roads was clear. The War department now has announced its plans for mechanization, and the horse gets ample recognition. Effective December 1, 41 artillery units will be motorized, but 83 horse-drawn batteries will be retained.

Do you always apply your brakes properly? When coming to a stop on a straightaway, shut off the gasoline throttle and leave the clutch engaged until just before you come to a stop; this method of stopping is especially advisable in wet weather because it lessens the tendency of the car to skid. It also helps to distribute the braking power equally, and assists the action of the brakes. Do not shut off the ignition until after you have stopped; it may be necessary to make a quick start.

In going down steep hills or when decending ordinary hills with a heavy load, put the gears in second or low speed at the top of the hill and leave the clutch engaged.

Brakes should be regularly and systematically inspected. Brake linings should be inspected each time the brakes are given a careful going over to be sure that the lining is still useful.

Get in the habit of having your brakes inspected regularly.

NEW SEDIMENT TEST FOR CREAM DEVISED

To enable creamerymen to detect unclean cream and thus avoid having butter condemned by government food inspectors, dairy division specialists of the University Department of Agriculture, University Farm, have devised a simple sediment test for cream, either sweet or sour. Dr. H. Macy and Dr. S. T. Coulter worked out this test to employ the same apparatus as used by the federal inspectors for the butter impurities test.

Essentially, this apparatus includes a filter funnel fitted to a flask that is connected with a suction pump which maintains a partial vacuum in the flask. For testing, sweet cream is diluted with hot water and run through the filter, any sediment showing up plainly on the filter paper. Sour cream is diluted with a hot borax solution.

The equipment, costing only about $5 complete, is illustrated and described, and the instructions for testing given, in Agricultural Extension Folder 50, "Sediment Test for Cream," just issued at University Farm, St. Paul. Copies may be had free from the Bulletin Office.

LOW INJURY RATE ON RELIEF JOBS

A degree of safety greater than in any industry has been attained on the work projects of the Minnesota SERA (State Emergency Relief administration), it is announced by A. V. Rohweder, chief advisor of the safety division.

Injury records which cover 46,000 employes have been studied during the 10 weeks following September 1, when the self-insurance plan went into effect. They show only 10 accidents reported per 1,000,000 man-hours, Mr. Rohweder stated. This number of man-hours represents 46,000 men working 7 hours and 15 minutes a day, for 3 days.

An accident rate of only 10 per 1,000,000 man-hours compares favorably with 22 and 23 in mining, 32 in public works and highway building, 38 in construction industry, and 70 in cannery activities.

This good showing, according to W. T. Norton, supervisor of safety and compensation, is largely due to the accident prevention campaign carried on by the division. It is effectively promoted by means of 10 district and 87 county inspectors.

Mr. Norton explained that the safety record has been achieved against heavy odds. Some of the SERA projects call for such risky activities as gravel pit excavation and public works construction jobs. Many of the laborers are farmers without previous training in industrial vocations, and unacquainted with modern safety methods or devices.

Be it resolved that the summary statements, Filing numbers No. 217 and 218 for the expenditure of the County Highway Department be hereby approved, and the Superintendent of Highways is hereby authorized to issue time checks in payment thereof in the following amounts: Maintenance S. A. R. $252.02 and Maintenance C. A. R. $537.55.

Commissioner J. J. Pagnac seconded the motion and the same being put, was duly carried.

Commissioner Arthur Anderson offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

BE IT RESOLVED: That we, the County Board of Commissioners, Marshall County, request that the Commissioner of Highways grant a Special Gas Tax Allotment of $6,000.00 for the grading and graveling of County Aid Road No. 37 leading from State Aid Road "C" (a graveled road) to the Headquarters of the Thief Lake Public Hunting Grounds and Game Refuge, a distance of 3 miles.

Commissioner A. W. Sommers seconded the motion and the same being put, was duly carried.

RESOLUTION:

WHEREAS, the so called "Old Mill Site" in Marshall County, Minnesota, is a natural amphitheatre and play-ground, used by the people of Northwestern Minnesota for years as a picnic ground, pageant site, and meeting place, and,

WHEREAS, Said site has a historical background with an old mill and mill stones, with a stream and natural woods, and a hillside providing adequate seating capacity for an outdoor amphitheatre, which site is most centrally located and better adapted for such purposes than any other in this part of the state, and its establishment as a state park is being promoted by the Marshall County Historical Society, the Warren Commercial Club and other civic organizations, and a plat and maps thereof are being prepared by such organizations to show the location, adaptability and extent thereof:

THEREFOR, BE IT RESOLVED, That the Board of County Commissioners of Marshall County, Minnesota, go on record in favor of the establishment of a State Park at the Old Mill Site above described.

Upon motion of A. W. Sommers, seconded by Ole Bergman, said resolution was unanimously adopted.

Meeting recessed until following day at 9 o'clock A. M.

Board reconvened March 6th at 9 o'clock A. M. All members present.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE

Washington, D. C.- There are more than twelve hundred thousand accounts in the insured commercial banks of Minnesota which are fully protected by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, it is revealed by figures recently released.

According to the tabluations 1,214,825 accounts in the banks of this state come under the insurance maximum of five thousand dollars. This is 98.81 per cent of the toal number in the insured commercial banks and compares with a national ratio for all insured banks of 98.3 per cent. The figures also show that in fifteen states there are actually more than ninety-nine out of every hundred insured accounts being completely protected and that in all but four states less than two per cent of insured accounts are not entirely within the insurance limit. These accounts which exceed the limit of the insurance would also be paid up to the $5,000 maximum in the event of closure, however.

Insured deposits in 633 Minnesota banks amount to $375,557,000 or approximately 54 per cent of total deposits as reported to the Insurance Corporation. In the country at large this ratio of insured to reported total deposits of commercial banks which are members of the Insurance Fund is 43.5 per cent and for all insured banks amounts to almost forty-five per cent. These figures were taken from a recent compilation of deposit information requested by the F. D. I. C. and on which the insurance assessments paid by the insured banks have been adjusted.

At the same time the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation reported that in each of the nine insured banks which closed during 1934 it began payment of depositors' insured accounts within ten days of the time receiverships became final. It points out, in this connection, that this record contrasts sharply with the experience of depositors in uninsured banks which fail where they have often been forced to wait a year or more for only a part of their money.

"FRIENDLY GHOST" WALKS COOK ROAD

Cook—A ghost walks the streets of Cook, Minn. Several residents claim to have met this visitor from the shadows. The ghost is reported as being a little old woman dressed in black. A very friendly ghost she must be, for those who meet her say that she always extends her hand, but before they can take it, she disappears. As she only appears to women and children, the men of Cook have been mean enough to say that the disappearing act comes when she steps in one of the ditches that line the road along which the ghost always appears. They also hint that if one or two lights were placed along this dark street, the ghost would cease to walk.

CALF SWINGS FIFTH LEG FROM ITS NECK

Bell Plaine—A freak calf born on the Chris Weldon farm near Belle Plaine gives every indication of living to be a sturdy animal, in spite of being "handicapped" by a fifth leg. This extra leg is attached to the animal's neck, and is larger than the other four, being tipped with a double hoof, or rather four toes. As the calf prances around, this extra leg dangles from its neck, and can be thrown to either side of the head. The extra appendage is apparently of no concern to the calf, and the animal is entirely normal in every other respect. To remove the fifth leg might cause the animal's death, as well as destroy its value as a possible commercial freak.

HITCH-HIKING BANDIT THUMBS WAY TO JAIL

Manterville—One hitch-hiker will receive a longer "ride" than he expected and will probably return from the ride sadder but wiser, as a result of being picked up by the wrong man near Mantorville recently. While coming from Kasson to Mantorville, Deputy Sheriff Walter Andrist picked up a hitch hiker along the road, only to find that his fellow passenger was the man who robbed the Andrist store at Berne on Feb. 10. Later, the hitch hiker, whose name is Zumbo, admitted his guilt, and stated that he had hid out in the store until after it was closed to rob the till at his leisure. In addition to the money stolen, some merchandise was also taken.

AIR MAIL LETTER TO S. A. COSTS $37

Hopkins—The most expensive letter ever to leave the Hopkins post office was mailed out of Hopkins recently, carrying $37 worth of postage. The letter was addressed to W. C. McFarlane in South America, by his associates in the Hopkins executive offices of the Minneapolis-Moline Power Implement Co. The letter was sent air mail, the charge to this particular point being one dollar per ounce, with the letter weighing slightly over two pounds. McFarlane is the head of the Hopkins factory, on the last leg of a two months' trip through South America.

U. FARM ISSUES LAMB FATTENING BULLETIN

Lamb feeders, who because of the drouth will have unusual difficulties in finishing their lambs for market this season, will find many valuable suggestions in a new University Farm publication, Minnesota Bulletin 306, "Feeding Methods and Rations for Fattening Lambs."

The bulletin states that sweet clover hay will give as good results for fattening lambs as will alfalfa hay of similar quality. Likewise, that cut corn stover will do practically as well as prairie hay. Giving the results of 16 lamb fattening trials conducted at the West Central Experiment Station at Morris during the last 8 years, this bulletin covers many questions of very great importance to the sheep man.

Among the subjects included are feeding ear corn to sheep, replacing corn with barley, using oats, rye and wheat as fattening grains for lambs, self-feeding as a method of fattening lambs, kinds and importance of protein feeds, beet pulp and molasses as lamb feeds, and the general question of roughages.

General information about lamb fattening is given, in addition to the experimental facts from the lamb fattening trials. Any farmer wanting a copy of the bulletin should ask his county agent or write the Bulletin Office, University Farm, St. Paul.

CAT HAS KITTENS WITHOUT TAILS; ADOPTS BABY RABBITS

Montevideo- Apparently dissatisfied when her batch of kittens was born without tails, a mother cat went out into the world in search of something with a tail and returned with two baby rabbits—the best she could do. The cat, belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Gust Anderson, Sparta, became the proud mother of a fine bunch of kittens last week, but due to the depression, tails were omitted in equipping the youngsters for life. Someone decided there had been an over-production of kittens, and half the batch disappeared. This was a severe blow to the doting mother who voiced her grief long and loud for a few days, but eventually went out in seach of tails. Imagine the surprise of the Andersons to find that Mrs. Cat had brought back and adopted two wee baby rabbits, who snuggled in the nest with the kittens, finding their new mother very devoted and a good provider.

Virginia—When Louis Rones of Virginia consults the political oracle, she seldom fails to advise him correctly. With a record as political pronosticator in the past, Rones made 15 correct guesses of winners out of 17 tries in the last election. Although right in his guesser, Rones admitted losing a large number of candidates whom he hoped would win, and for whom he voted as a matter of principle and conscience.

Time To Clear Out The Home Medicine Chest

Doctors Give Instructions For Spring Cleaning on Bathroom Shelves

What should go in the family medicine chest?

"A rabbits foot, a cold potato for rheumatism and a dead man's tooth for toothache would be much safer than many of the old medicines, the rusty razor blades, the unmarked poisons that collect on the shelves of the average home medicine chest," says a bulletin on the subject issued today by the Public Health Education Committee of the Minnesota State Medical Association.

The following series of medicine chest "don'ts" is provided by the committee for the forward looking housewives who have begun to think about spring house cleaning and the annual clearing of closets and corners.

1. The first is: Don't save old remedies. No more dangerous economy can be imagined than this, according to the bulletin. Some medicines lose their strength; others become dangerously potent on evaporation. Above all, it is criminal to administer to one person, especially a child, a medicine that was prescribed for another.

2. Razor blades might be buried in the ground for safe keeping. They should not be kept on the bathroom shelves nor used for family surgery.

3. Don't keep any derivations of opium. The effects of certain such narcotics are almost miraculous. The sudden sweet relief from pain makes them treacherously dangerous. The drug habit is nearly always formed innocently.

4. Don't store poisons. In most cases they are unnecessary and they are a constant danger to children. Where it is necessary to keep them in the house they should be unmistakably marked.

5. Don't mix the medicine chest and the machine shop. If you use vaseline to oil your electric fan, keep a separate bottle in the shop or garage. Keep your absorbent cotton in a sealed package in the bathroom and have another package of cotton to wipe the car.

SAFETY OBSERVANCE COMPULSORY IN GRAVEL PITS

Gravel pit operations will henceforth only be permitted where requirements of the safety division are observed in protecting the workers, it is announced by Walter F. MacGregor, state engineer and director of the works division of the Minnesota SERA (State Emergency Relief Administration).

This employment exposes the workman to greater danger than almost any other kind of SERA enterprise, Mr. MacGregor explained. Nevertheless, at about 70 pits, only five injuries have been caused from accidents.

Regular inspections will be maintained through the safety division. Therefore, if the foreman on a project fails to carry out the suggestions from the safety inspector, work will be suspended and the men transferred to some other location where the rules are obeyed.

The works division will not countenance speed at the sacrifice of safety, Mr. MacGregor stated.

13 REAL HOODOO FOR ZUMBROTA HUNTERS

Zumbrota- The combination of hoodoo "13" is blamed for the failure of a party of Zumbrota hunters to bag a single deer, and at the same time being responsible for a bullet wound received by one of the members of the party. When E. C. Overboe returned his pistol to the holster, the gun was accidentally discharged. The bullet penetrated his leg. Here's the hoodoo "13" combination: There were 13 hunters in the party; they arrived in the deer country on November 13; they saw 13 deer, but didn't get one; Overboe had to be transported 13 miles to a physician after the gun accident; the doctor's bill was $13; two members of the party each had $13 when they left Zumbrota; another member, telephone repair man, knocked off work on the 13th pole to go hunting. And the only thing the 13 hunters could find to dring in the north country was Minnesota 13.

WOULD-BE SUICIDE CHANGES HIS MIND

Fairmont- Occupants of a Fairmont Hotel rushed for cover recently when a guest ran down the stairway frothing and screaming as he tore at his mouth with his hands, but it turned out to be nothing but a would-be suicide who changed his mind when he felt the effects of carbolic acid. The man, a farmer, walked into the hotel, and took the acid in a second floor lavoratory, rushing down stairs for help when it burned his mouth, throat and tongue. He was seized and taken to a physician's office for emergency treatment. In spite of the bad burns, he expected to recover. The man is a world war veteran and experiences overseas depressed him at times. He gave no reason for his near-tragic act.

FIREMAN ARRIVES TO LEARN OWN BUSINESS IS IN DANGER

Wheaton- E. G. Worner, driver of one of Wheaton's fire trucks, heard the fire siren about 11 o'clock one morning recently while sitting in his office, the Wheaton Auto Co. He rushed to his car and drove to the fire hall. Upon arriving he asked, "Where's the fire?" He was greatly surprised when informed a car had back fired and caught fire while it was being repaired in his garage. The fire department made its run to the garage but with the aid of extinguishers, the blaze had been put out with only a slight damage being done to the car.

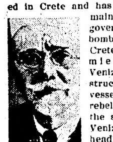
Heavy Fighting Reported as Greek Government Seeks to Put Down Insurrection—Senator Robinson Scores Huey Long in Heated Senate Session.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

©. Western Newspaper Union.



Ex-Premier Venizelos.

THE Greek government is making a grim effort to stamp out the fast growing revolt which started in Crete and has spread to the mainland. Greek government planes bombed the home in Crete of former Premier Eleutherios Venizelos, and also struck at five naval vessels manned by rebels standing off the shore of Crete. Venizelos is openly heading the forces of sedition, and, reports say, has seized $1,000,000 from the Canea treasury to finance the revolt.

The rebellion has been plotted for a whole year, and broke when 20 naval officers, both active and retired, seized the Salamis arsenal. As the revolt spread, rebels boarded the five warships while the crews were ignorant of the plan, and put under steam. Government planes were dispatched to the scene and pursued the rebel ships down the Aegean sea. The cruiser Averoff was struck by an aerial bomb while the vessel lay in Souda bay, near Crete, and the two other ships were reported to have been overtaken and bombed near the island of Cythera with undetermined damage.

Martial law prevailed throughout the country; rail, telephone and telegraphic communications have been cut off and normal activities suspended.

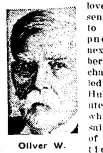
Heavy fighting with serious losses on both sides have been reported in the Struma valley, and in the Macedonian city of Kavalla. Fear has been expressed that the country will be plunged into a factional civil war of unestimated proportions. The government has offered amnesty to the rebel troops if they capitulate peacefully.

Salonika harbor has been heavily mined in preparation for an attack by the rebel fleet, and land batteries have been reinforced by heavy caliber naval guns. Eight additional classes have been called to the colors as wounded troops pour into Salonika from the battlefront. The government claims 100,000 loyal troops, 60 airplanes and a quantity of heavy motorized artillery are ready, although good part of this equipment is said to be old and defective.

A report from Alexandria claims that Venizelos has abandoned Crete and fled toward Egypt.

DIMINUTIVE King Prajadhipok of Siam has renounced his throne, relinquished his claims to being known as "brother of the moon and possessor of 24 umbrellas," assuming the simpler, if still unpronounceable name of Prince Sukhodaya, and retired to the simple life of an English country gentleman. By his action, the ex-monarch set a record, for it is probably the first time in history that a ruler has abandoned power because his government rejected his demands for greater freedom and democratic control for his people. "My intention that the people should have a real voice in the policy of the government has been ineffective," the ex-king wrote in his message of abdication. "Since I realize that now there is no longer any way of my assisting or protecting the people in the future, I hereby renounce all rights which I had as king or rights of succession, but I reserve the rights which I formerly enjoyed before accession to the throne."

Prince Ananda, nephew of Prajadhipok, has accepted the throne, reports state. The prince, now eleven years old, is attending school in Lausanne.

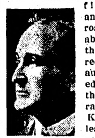


Oliver W. Holmes

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, jurist, scholar, soldier and gentleman, is dead. Two days before his ninety-fourth birthday, the beloved "great dissenter" succumbed to the ravages of pneumonia. The next day in the somber Supreme court chamber, the court led by Chief Justice Hughes paid tribute to the man whose career, he said, had been one of "unique distinction." Justice Hughes' voice choked as he spoke. The grind of legislation and the disputes of the day were forgotten in congress as both the house and senate paused while glowing words were said in memory of the retired Justice. Funeral services were held in Washington, attended by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, and members of the Supreme court. After the ceremony, Holmes was given military burial in Arlington National cemetery, as befitted one who had served his nation so gallantly. Justice Holmes was born in Boston, the son of the noted American poet of the same name. He entered Harvard and was in his senior year when the Civil war began. He enlisted as a lieutenant, was promoted to a captaincy and retired with the rank of colonel. He was wounded three times. After the war he returned to school and obtained his law degree. In 1882, Holmes was elevated to the Supreme court of Massachusetts, and in 1902, President Roosevelt appointed him to the United States Supreme court. On October 4, 1928, when he was eighty-seven years old, he became the oldest man ever to sit on the bench of the Supreme court. He retired in January, 1932.

SENATE administration leaders have decided to virtually abolish NRA when it expires in June, and set up in its place a plan of self-government in business, eliminating present coercive measures, and giving over administrative functions of the new program to the federal trade commision. Thus would end one of the administration's most spectacular and far-reaching experiments. In its general form, the plan calls for permission to join in voluntary codes regulating trade practices and eliminating unfair competition. Price fixing will be outlawed. Business and industry will agree to minimum wages and maximum hours, and only when these standards are violated, can the government apply compulsory codes.

At the same time United States District Judge W. G. Borah, in New Orleans, denied a government petition to compel a box manufacturer to comply with the maximum hour and minimum wage provisions of the lumber code, ruling that the national industrial recovery act is unconstitutional. The ruling is expected to bring before the United States Supreme court the constitutionality of the interstate commerce clause of the lumber code.



Senator Robinson

THAT "ancient repository of dignity," the senate, has been treated to an exhibition of personalities, vituperation, barely avoided fistic encounters, and general uproar centering about Senator Long that should set a record for even that august body. Goaded into action by the almost daily tirades of Lousiana's Kingfish, majority leader Joe Robinson of Arkansas arose, white with rage, and let loose a castigation designed to blast the irrepressible Long into submission. Robinson appealed to the senate to assert itself and put Long, whom he called "a madman," in his place. Vice President Garner and more than a dozen senators shook hands with Robinson when he closed, and galleries applauded until the chair threatened to clear them. It had no perceptible effect on Long other than to cause him to rush back to the senate chamber, and renew his attack on Robinson.

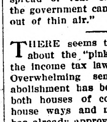
The next day Huey precipitated another verbal free-for-all when he resumed his one-man campaign against Postmaster Farley and the New Deal in general. Long charged that Farley was instrumental in quashing an indictment against a bank in which Norman Davis, "ambassador at large," was interested. For his trouble Kingfish received a liberal supply of ridicule. He also sent to the senate post office committee a letter in which the accusation was made that Farley is "profiting" from 25 business concerns in New York city, involving violation of four criminal statutes. When questioned, Farley said he had no statement to make.

CHANCELLOR HITLER was not pleased with announcement that Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary would visit him to discuss the proposed Anglo-British pact. He sent word that he had a "cold" and could not see Sir John. Officials in London derided Hitler's cold, and attribute it to the fact that Hitler is determined to say when the visit will be acceptable. High sources in Germany have intimated that Hitler will not welcome Sir John unless Britain recognizes Germany's equality.

ITALIAN government officials state that nearly 1,000 aviators and several squadrons of planes have sailed for East Africa, and that a second wave of troops has been started to join the 20,000 already massed in Somaliland. General Graziani has been named governor of Somaliland and commander of the troops.

MONEY markets of the world reacted violently after President Roosevelt declared his administration would seek further jacking up of commodity prices. Stocks rallied in New York, government bonds sagged, and the falling British pound rose four cents. The President hurriedly issued another statement explaining that his advocacy of higher prices did not mean further devaluation of the dollar, at least not for the present. The first statement was made by the President at a press conference when he was asked if he believed prices had now risen sufficiently to warrant stabilization. He replied that they had not; that they were still too low in relation to debts.

KOKI HIROTA, Japanese foreign minister, sees in the dispute over settlement of Japanese farmers in Arizona, a spark which may ignite flames of discontent and cause regrettable consequences between Japan and the United States, he told the lower house of the Japanese diet. He expressed extreme regret that American authorities had not been able to settle the matter, and said he was pressing for an early solution. Exclusion of the Japanese has been asked under the alien land ownership law, and it is probable that no fundamental solution can be arrived at until the exclusion clause of the immigration act, which has been hanging fire since 1924, has been settled.



Donald Richberg

DONALD RICHBERG, executive director of the National Emergency council, and one of the closest advisers of the President, "guaranteed" that there would be no monetary inflation as long as Franklin D. Roosevelt is President. His statement came in answer to a question at a lecture in Boston.

"If we are to assume that President Roosevelt will be President for the next six years, I can tell you this: I can guarantee there will be no inflation while Franklin D. Roosevelt is President," Richberg said.

He dodged further discussion of the subject, and refused to comment as to what was being done by the government internationally and nationally on monetary policies. However, Richberg did touch on the Townsend plan for payment of $200 monthly to all persons over sixty. He said:

"If everybody over sixty is to get $200 a month, you can be certain it is going to come out of the pockets of everybody between eighteen and sixty.

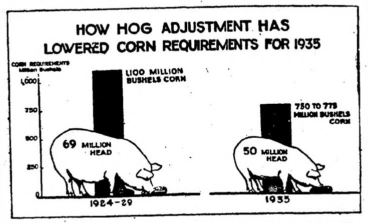
"When those under sixty have arrived at the unselfish attitude where they are ready to dig to pay everybody over sixty the $200 a month, there will have been a tremendous spread of real Christianity. But the government can't get the money out of thin air."

THERE seems to be no doubt about the "pink slip" clause in the income tax law being repealed. Overwhelming sentiment for its abolishment has been expressed in both houses of congress, and the house ways and means committee has already approved the resolution offered by Chairman Doughton. Polls taken disclose a heavy majority in the senate favor repeal, and both Democratic and Republican house leaders are pledged to lend their strength to prompt passage of the measure. Congressional decision on the "pink slips" must be registered before March 15, the date for filing tax returns, if it is to serve its intended purpose.

S. CLAY WILLIAMS, head of the NRA, tendered his resignation to the President, starting what is expected to be a wholesale housecleaning of the recovery administration's high command. Chairman Williams explained his action by saying that he had to return to his job as head of one of the country's largest tobacco companies. Three of the four remaining members of the board, Arthur D. Whiteside, Walton Hamilton, and Sidney Hillman, are known to have their resignations ready. Rumors say that the President will not fill the vacancies, but will return the NRA to a one-man command.

BY a vote of 23 to 1 the house ways and means committee approved the Vinson bonus bill, and gave the rival Patman bill a possible edge. The committee instructed Chairman Doughton to ask a wide open rule permitting inflationists to move the Patman measure as a substitute on the floor. Patman supporters claim the house will pass the first bonus bill brought up, but conservatives are working to jockey the "printing press money" measure out of preferred position. The Vinson bill is favored by the American Legion.

FACING its third "revolutionary general strike" in fourteen months, President Carlos Mendieta's government turned the situation over to Fulgencio Batista, army commander in chief, who will try to bring some order out of the Cuban chaos. Nearly all government employees have joined the general strike, as have those working in the Havana municipal government.



EFFECTIVE control of corn acreage in 1935 is held to be essential because of the decline in corn requirements for livestock feeding since the 1924-29 period, and particularly since a year ago. As indicated in the above chart, the total number of hogs slaughtered in 1934-35 probably will not exceed 50 million head, as compared with an average of 70 million head in recent years.

Because hogs eat approximately one-half of the annual corn crop in the United States, hog adjustment this past year alone has lowered corn requirements between 325 and 350 million bushels under the requirement level of former seasons. The reduction of 10 to 15 per cent effectuated in cattle numbers by the drought liquidation under the Government drought purchase program has further reduced corn requirements for livestock feeding. A moderate reduction also has taken place in numbers of poultry, horses, and mules, which together ordinarily consume about one-fifth of the annual corn crop.

In view of these changes an acreage somewhat less than the average of recent years would meet actual requirements and would leave a reasonable margin for rebuilding the reserves now being depleted to meet drought conditions. Therefore, if farmers should follow the usual post-drought tendency and actually increase corn acreage in the spring of 1935, the largest surplus of corn over requirements ever produced in this country and relatively low corn prices might be expected.

By combining under the 1935 corn-hog production adjustment contract offered by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, farmers can hold corn acreage at a level that will avoid a return to an excessive level of production.

CHM-6-35

WEEKLY NEWS LETTER FROM WASHINGTON

By Congressman Elmer J. Ryan

One of the great sources of present Congressional dissatisfaction with the operation of the various bureaus and departments of the government comes from misunderstandings growing out of the inability of Congressmen and Cabinet Members to meet on a common basis for discussion and debate.

When the public is dissatisfied with the policies and administration of different arms of the government, this dissatisfaction is communicated to their Representatives—not to the officials in charge. Thus it is the Members of Congress who are most responsive to public opinion.

It is often difficult for Congress to obtain a hearing with department and bureau heads on matters of policy.

A bill has been proposed which is intended to create closer relations between Congress and the Cabinet. It proposes that each member of the Cabinet have a seat in the House and Senate and have the privilege of joining in the debate. Under the terms of the bill each Cabinet Member would be required to attend each body one day every week.

Such a plan would serve a desirable purpose.

If this system were now in force, Huey Long and Jim Farley could confront each other in debate instead of firing at long range between the Senate Chamber and the Post Office Department Building.

This would give their differences a thorough public airing as well as furnishing a choice bit of entertainment.

It is expected that the Wheeler Amendment to the Farm Credit Act, which would reduce the interest and amortized principal payments on Federal Land Bank mortgages from 4½% to 3½% will soon be considered in the House. This Amendment has already passed the Senate.

At a recent meeting of the Congressmen from the "Prairie States", a committee was appointed to devise ways and means of bringing this measure to an immediate vote in the House and to urge its passage.

A much more drastic farm refinancing bill is the Lemke Bill, which would reduce the interest to 1½% on farm mortgages and would require principal payments of 1½%. This bill is not out of the committee. Under the rule now in force, thirty legislative days must elapse before the bill can be brought out of committee by petition of a majority of the members of the House. This period will have expired on Wednesday, Feb. 20, and Congressman Lemke has announced his intention of starting his petition immediately.

Representative Wright Patman has started circulation of a petition to bring his Bonus Bill (H. R. 1) to a vote.

A delegation of Minnesota State Senators and Representatives, sent by the State Legislature, together with Minnesota's two United States Senators and a committee of Congressmen, consulted with Relief Administrator, Harry Hopkins, on Feb. 19th, concerning changes in the relief administration regulations as affecting feed relief in Minnesota's drouth areas.

The present 10 unit rule and the present limitations on the amount of relief will make it impossible to save many of Minnesota's high grade dairy herds from starvation. It is expected, that as a result of Tuesday's conference and of the many protests that the relief administration has received and the evidence of the desperate feed shortage that exists in many Minnesota counties, that steps will be taken to change the relief administration's policy so as to more completely supply relief needs.

Information in the hands of the committee shows that the United State purchased approximately 13,800,000 bushels of flax-seed from foreign counries in 1934, while in the same period only 5,189,000 bushels were grown here.

In the last four years flax-seed fields in the United States have dwindled from an average of 2,915,000 acres to an estimate of only 1,133,000 for the year 1934.

"An important rotating crop is being eliminated and more than a million acres are being turned back into wheat or other surplus crop production."

"America, long regarded as the world's greatest agricultural nation is importing a major agricultural product, thereby eliminating a large portion of the protective tariff rates."

"High railroad rates as compared with low ocean shipping rates, these forces coupled with the low cost of foreign labor and the absence of any protection to our farmers in the way of parity price, are the elements which are driving flax-seed production out of this country."

These are the statements which were made as a preliminary to the demand of the committee that producers of flax-seed must receive a parity price, in accordance with the law which although now in effect is permissive and not mandatory.

In other words, flax-seed is actually a basic commodity at the present time by virtue of an amendment to the law which was endorsed by the farm groups and which was passed during May 1934.

Under the terms of the law machinery can be set up which will operate to a parity or compensatory price in the hands of the farmer.

The problem of the committee is to urge officials into action by proving to them that a market for American grown flax-seed exists at parity prices.

Joint conferences are in progress on this point with paint manufacturers, varnish manufacturers, flaxseed crushers and processors as well as the makers of linoleum and congoleum.

These merchandisers have been using fish oil and other cheaper substitutes as well as foreign flax-seed.

In addition to this, studies are being made of imported fats and oils that seriously interfere with not only the Dairy Industry, but with lards and tallows. In fact, all animal fats. Several conferences have been held working towards a solution of the Dairy Problem.

The first large scale Washington lobby for the American farmer is on in earnest, with an open frontal attack instead of the usual conferences behind closed doors.

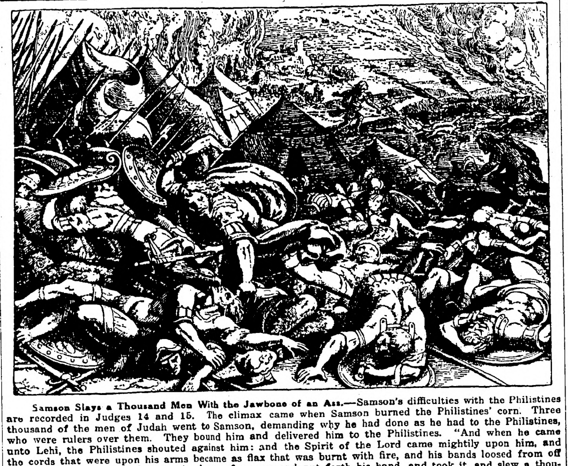
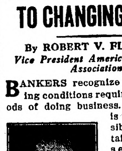
The Story of the Bible Told in Pictures



Samson Slays a Thousand Men With the Jawbone of an Ass.—Samson's difficulties with the Philistines are recorded in Judges 14 and 15. The climax came when Samson burned the Philistines' corn. Three thousand of the men of Judah went to Samson, demanding why he had done as he had to the Philistines, who were rulers over them. They bound him and delivered him to the Philistines. "And when he came unto Lehi, the Philistines shouted against him: and the Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him, and the cords that were upon his arms became as flax that was burnt with fire, and his bands loosed from off his hands. And he found a new jawbone of an ass, and put forth his hand, and took it, and slew a thousand men therewith." Judges 15: 14-15. The illustration is from Merian's story of the Bible in pictures, engraved in 1625. In the foreground Samson is killing the Philistines, and in the right background he is shown burning the Philistines' corn.

ADJUSTING BANKING TO CHANGING NEEDS

By ROBERT V. FLEMING
Vice President American Bankers Association



R. V. FLEMING

BANKERS recognize that changing conditions require new methods of doing business. However it is their responsibility to retain those essential and sound financial principles upon which this country was founded and has grown to be what is still the richest nation in the world.

Many of our difficulties have arisen from lack of confidence and from misunderstanding. Therefore it behooves the banker to bend every effort to create a better public understanding of sound banking and thereby, bring about that united effort and cooperative spirit which will hasten the day of national recovery and restore to the banker the confidence of the public to which he is entitled.

As an approach to the realization of this ideal, bankers should carefully scrutinize every application for a loan to see if it is bankable and, if it is not in bankable form, then make further examination to see if the loan can be made so, in order to stimulate use of credit.

Explaining Loan Factors to Customers

We must not expect our customers to be bankers and understand all the factors which we must consider before granting a loan. If we find that a loan is not, and cannot be made, bankable, then I think we should take pains to explain the reasons why it cannot be granted.

There are other measures which I think it important for the banker to undertake in order to eliminate the misunderstandings which have arisen and overcome the sentiment which exists. Under present conditions we have to operate under many laws and regulations, and also watch what further legislation is being proposed which affects our methods of operation and may not be in the best interest of the communities we serve. Nowadays it seems at times we must sit with a law book in one hand and a book of regulations in the other in order to make certain we are discharging our daily duties and functioning strictly in accordance with the law. All of this is very trying, yet I think in the end we shall become better bankers.

I believe it is the duty of every banker today to endeavor to understand the public he serves. In addition to his daily duties, trying as they are, he should participate in the activities of his community, so that, with the fund of information available to him, he may be as helpful as possible.

COMPTROLLER COMMENDS INSTITUTE OF BANKING

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The American Institute of Banking, said to be the most successful project of its kind in the field of applied adult education, has performed a valuable function in training bank clerks for "sound public service as well as personal success," J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, said here in a recent radio address. The institute is a section of the American Bankers Association.

"While imparting useful knowledge, it has improved the morals of banking personnel and has stimulated in its members an intelligent interest in national and international monetary problems," Mr. O'Connor said. "Its courses cover a wide field in banking. Among the subjects, one finds Bank Organization and Operation, Commercial Law, Negotiable Instruments Law, and Economics, in the Pre-Standard Division; followed by such subjects as Money and Banking, Credit Management, Financial Statement Analysis and Bank Management, in the Standard Division.

"Each and every subject is one which is necessary to a knowledge of banking. However, the institute does not stop here, but encourages graduate study in Corporation Finance, Trust Service, Farm Credit Administration and Business Forecasting. Again it emphasizes in special courses the importance of the less technical but highly beneficial study of Constructive Customer Relations, Banking Fundamentals and Public Speaking. No comment is necessary on these courses: their value is at once apparent."

BOOKLET ON FARM CREDIT

A booklet has been published by the Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association, on "Factors Affecting Farm Credit," for the purpose of furthering on a national scale the taking of farm inventories and the making of credit statements as sponsored by the commission in cooperation with the state colleges of agriculture and the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The goal is better relationships between farmer customers and their banks.

Burn Your Meadows Early

Thief River Falls, Minn.
March 29, 1935.

Editor, Holt Weekly News,
Holt, Minn.

Dear Sir:

With the spring season just coming on I would like to use space in your paper to make an appeal to farmers and others who may have meadows or brush thickets that they expect to burn this spring to do their burning early before our game birds start their nests. While early burning may not be quite so easy nor effective you avoid the danger of your fires getting out of control and doing damage to other property. That together with the advantage of not destroying nesting birds should be enough to compensate for the extra work of early burning.

We have spent considerable time and money to feed the birds during the winter in order to have ample breeding stock for the coming season and it is a shameful waste to destroy great numbers of these birds and their nests by careless spring fires.

Give us your co-operation in this matter. Don't start any fires after the meadows and brush thickets have dried out, nor after the wild birds have started nesting.

More birds means less grasshoppers and other pests.

Respectfully submitted,
W. H. Quist,
State Game Warden.

Swedes To Hold Meeting

Sons and Daughters of Sweden will hold their regular annual meeting at the Sons of Norway Hall in Thief River Falls at 8 o'clock p. m. on Friday, April 12th. Lunch will be served. All Swedes should be there, says W. H. Quist the president of the local organization.

Auction Sale April 6

We are this week advertising a big farm sale for John Olberg, ten miles east of Middle River. Mr. Olberg is one of the pioneers in Marshall county. He said he is getting to old to farm so he is going to sell all his farm machinery, horses, cows and other items at a public sale on his farm on Saturday, April, 6.

Stop-Look and Listen

Nebraska is advertised as being a debtless state today; as a commonwealth where the law prohibits pledging the state's credit for more than $100,000; and also as a state which has ridden thru war and peace, drouth and plenty, without issuing a dollar's worth of bonds.

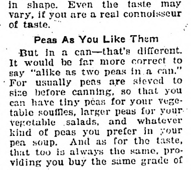
It built a $10,000,000 state capitol over a period of twelve years out of its annual tax levy. Its roads are paid by a four-cent gasoline tax and motor vehicle license fees, plus the usual Federal aid.

Nebraska's government, aside from road building, is supported by a general property tax and it has no income or sales tax.

These facts seem to prove that a great state can be operated on a business basis and stay within its income.

Nebraska should be an object lesson for every state in the union, many of which are staggering today under bond issues to pay for political experiments and inefficiency which the coming generations will struggle to pay, if they are ever wiped out. The taxpayers should rise up in arms, as it were, against practically every proposal that is made to further burden the people with taxes.

The lawmakers today who suggests tax increases as a way to meet state problems, is in most cases simply showing his inability as a business man to balance the public's business budget.— Two Harbors Chronicle.



Peas In A Pod

IT'S all wrong—this propaganda about peas in a pod being alike. It must be tiresome, if one is a twin, to hear continually, "they're alike as two peas in a pod." Actually twins are probably more alike than any two peas in the pod.

For the fact of the matter is that peas in a pod aren't alike. They differ in size and sometimes in shape. Even the taste may vary, if you are a real connoisseur of taste.

Peas As You Like Them

But in a can—that's different. It would be far more correct to say "alike as two peas in a can." For usually peas are sieved to size before canning, so that you can have tiny peas for your vegetable souffles, larger peas for your vegetable salads, and whatever kind of peas you prefer in your pea soup. And as for the taste, that too is always the same, providing you buy the same grade of peas.

Recipes for peas needn't be alike either. There are plenty of delicious ones that are different. For example:

Pea Puff with Pineapple: Drain peas from a No. 2 can and press through a sieve. Make a thick white sauce of four tablespoons butter, four tablespoons flour, one cup of milk and the pea pulp. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Add three well-beaten egg yolks and fold in the stiffly-beaten whites of the three eggs. Pour into a buttered baking dish and set in a pan of hot water. Bake in a moderate oven—350 to 375 degrees—until it is set and a delicate brown color (about twenty-five to thirty minutes). While this is baking, cook two tablespoons butter and one cup of canned crushed pineapple together until thick and rich. Spread this over the baked puff and serve at once. This serves eight persons.*

Get Your Seed Loan Early

Prompt action by those who want to take advantage of the state seed loan act is urged in a statement by Stafford King, administrator of the act. May 1 is the deadline for making application for seed under this law, although application may be passed on and seed issued up to July 1.

A bill passed and signed last week makes several amendments which will facilitate operation of the law. One of these provides that counties may issue bonds or warrants to buy seed even if such bonds or warrants exceed the former debt limits set by law. The State Board of Investments has made arrangements to make loans promptly to counties that wish to borrow state funds. Eighty one counties are eligible to borrow state investment funds, only six having reached the debt limits set by the constitution.

The bill passed last week also made the following amendments to the law:

1 Provides that where a farm is within the limits of a city or village, or in unorganized territory, application shall be made direct to the county board.

2 Provides that a tenant can sign for his share of the crop and get a loan without the owner signing a lein for his share.

3 Changes final date of payment from Feb. 15, 1936, to Nov 15, 1935.

4 Clover and other grass seeds are added to the list of seeds.

An opinion has been handed down by the attorney general holding the seed law, as amended, constitutional in all respects. Constitutionality of some provisions of the act had been questioned, but the attorney general says that even if some section were held invalid by the courts, this would not effect other portions of the law.

Reports of a possible repeal of the act have caused some county boards to hesitate to act under the law, but no bill to repeal it has been introduced. A majority of the counties are going ahead and paying no attention to rumors. More than three fourths of the counties have received blanks and many have already approved a number of applications.

A very large crowd attended the Pillsbury Pancake Flour demonstration at Carlson's store on Friday. All the customers were served free pancakes and coffee.

Court Hearing For Mud Lake

Preliminanry hearings so that condemnation proceedings may get under way immediately for the Mud Lake Migratory Game Refuge took place before Judge M. A. Brattland at the Court House in Warren last Thursday according to the Warren Sheaf.

David Johnson, special assistant attorney general came up from St. Paul to go over details and check titles. A. B. Brattland and O. T. Bundlie, also assistants from the attorney general's office were there Thursday to present the material before Judge Brattland at the preliminary hearing.

John S. McGovern, field man for the Minnesota Conservation department, was also in Warren making a final check-up. He looked up records at the Court House and also made an inspection at the site of the project in the Mud Lake area.

Approximately 30 families will be moved from the territory as a result of the condemnation. These families all reside in the affected territory. J. L. Taylor and A. D. Wilson of the division of rural rehabilitation will assist in finding new homes for these families who wish for aid.

Bids for construction work on the project were opened in Washington, D. C. by the federal government two weeks ago today and according to reports H. P. Lund & Sons of Thief River Falls were low bidders for the major excavation jobs with a bid of a trifle more than $60,000. Johnson and Company, Grand Forks contractors were low bidders for the Headquarters building which will be located on the shores of the new lake. The spot chosen for the buildings is the O. B. Johnson farm place.

Sportsmen's Meet April 9

State Game Warden W. H. Quist of Thief River Falls was here on Tuesday evening and met with local sportsmen and business men for the purpose of organizing a sportsmen's club here. Due to the fact that only a few met up, it was decided to postpone the meeting until Tuesday evening, April, 9th, at 8 p. m. Sportsmen from the country as well as those from town are invited to come and join the club that is to be organized here

The purpose of a local organization of this kind, is to get a better understanding of game laws, the protection of game, how to fix it so the game birds and deer will have places where they will feel free to roam about during the summer and to feed in winter.

Mr. Quist stated that the conservation department has began to educate the hunter as to what is right and wrong rather than to see how many arrests a game warden can make in a month.

He also stated that anyone who is interested in planting Amber Cane for bird feed for next winter should come to the meeting next week and get lined up for the seed. The only requirements in this is that you must cut and shock up the cane and let it stand over winter for the birds to feed on and when spring comes you can use it for fodder for stock.

Let your neighbors know about this meeting next Tuesday evening, April, 9th at the Schoolhouse in Holt. Come and show that you are interested in the conservation of our game and birds. Mr. Quist will be here to outline the program for the club.

The "liquid test"

...it ENDS bowel worries for many people

This is a test that tells you whether the system needs a cathartic change. If you have constant sluggish spells or bilious attacks, and laxatives seem to make things worse, it would be wise to try this:

Stop all use of any laxative that does not encourage variation from a "fixed dose" (which may be entirely too large a dose for your individual need). Use instead, a liquid laxative that you can measure and regulate as to dose. As necessary to repeat, take smaller doses, less and less often, until the bowels are moving without any help at all.

Doctors use liquid laxatives, and a properly prepared liquid laxative, containing natural laxative agents like senna and cascara is a joy and a comfort; a real help in establishing regularity. Ask your doctor about this! (Doctors use liquid laxatives.) You can get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is a most dependable liquid laxative, at any drug store.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, "Penelope," in an effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. Ten-year-old Penelope is given into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin. At a baseball game a ball strikes Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for her when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is also won over. Nance's criminal record outweighs Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary. Lanny visits her and Nance persuades her to smuggle out a letter which a confederate of Nance steals. Nance escapes, although shot, and goes to Lanny's apartment. Lanny tells Chief McNamara, who orders her to bring Nance to his apartment. Details of Nance's escape are made public.

—10—

"Yeah!" A throaty growl. "Got to, Doc. Got to protect society. Stephen looked puzzled, so the chief continued. "If I let that girl graduate from San Quentin, she'll come out with a broader knowledge of crime and trickery and a greater contempt for society than when she went in. The only kind of criminal I fear is the smart one; I can always catch the boobs promptly, but sometimes it takes a long time to get acquainted with the artistic genius of a real craftsman. They're like writers, Doc. They have a style all their own and you've got to learn their style. And about the time you think you've learned it, you pick up some bird that's guilty and he isn't the man you thought he was. He's just stolen his master's stuff. Nance Belden is too brilliant to turn loose on the world, Doc. She's a leader—a leader of men. She'd make the balls, and her crew would fire them and always be covered up."

He ruffled his pompadour. "Well, Doc, I've gotten her away from her gang. She's lost them and they've lost her. And they must never get her back."

"Would you like to know who they are?"

"Of course. I'm normally curious."

"I can find out for you," said Stephen.

"How?" Dan McNamara looked doubtful.

"Nance will tell me."

"You're crazy, Doc. You don't know the code. They die, but they don't squeal. There is honor in their dishonor, and in their weakness there is a strength that amazes me."

"She wouldn't do it voluntarily, of course, but just now, in her weakened state, I'm sure I could hypnotize her. Get her to look fixedly into a mirror, you know, like this. Once I secure control of her subconscious mind, she'll answer my questions. And after I wake her up she'll have complete amnesia for the experience; she will never know she peached on her pals.

CHAPTER V

The chief smiled. "Of course I know that hypnotism is being used by advanced psychiatrists and particularly by Morton Prince and William McDougall. I've read their books. The modern chief of police isn't modern, Doc, if he isn't a pretty good lay psychologist and psychiatrist. I don't know what a criminologist is, but I suppose he's a bird that studies the criminal actions and tendencies of criminals and tries to reduce crime to its lowest common divisor. That's the bunk. The thing to do is to know their minds and why they act like they do; if you can cure what makes them go, criminology becomes a dead science.

"Yes, I know all about hypnotism and I know something you've forgotten. Your power of suggestion on a patient in the hypnotic state isn't powerful enough to make him steal or commit murder if he's an honest man. His acquired instincts of morality, which lie in his subconscious mind, are too strong for you. And the most powerful acquired instinct in the mind of a crook is that he mustn't squeal. That's his idea of immortality! You try it on Nance Belden and she'll tell you almost anything but who her friends are, where they live and how they make a living."

"Well, we shall see—at another time. Meanwhile, what are you going to do with this girl? You can't keep her here, because that's dangerous unless you have her watched. And whom can you trust to watch her?"

"How about Lanny?"

"Lanny is my office nurse and I cannot get along without her. She's under suspicion now and we've got to kill that. She'll be watched, will she not?"

"I suppose so. Even if I pass the word to lay off her, I can never be sure one of my men won't watch her independently. On a case where it would be a big feather in his cap and mean a lot of publicity to capture a celebrated criminal, lots of dicks prefer to work alone and in secret."

"Then Lanny must not come to your house again. And yet, this girl must be parked somewhere until her wound heals. She's suffering from the shock of this emotional experience now; she's lost considerable blood and suffered some pain, and for five hours she's suffered from exposure. Her garments are soaking wet."

"If she forgot to tell those men to bring some dry clothing for her to hop into, once she got aboard the boat, my heart will just about break. That would be one flaw in a perfect job—and I can't stand flaws."

And Dan McNamara strode into the room where Nance lay with her hand in Lanny's. "Why didn't you tell your friend to bring you some dry clothes?" he demanded.

Nance smiled up at Lanny. "He thinks I'm a nut, after all, Lanny. Why, of course I wouldn't overlook that detail. I changed my clothes, but when we crossed the bay it was rough and there was a police boat on our trail. He had to outrun them—and you do forty miles an hour through a mile of tide-rips and you'll all but drown in the spray!"

"Thank God for that," the chief murmured. "I'm proud of you and your friends, Nance. I hope neither of them was hit."

For the barest fraction of a second Nance hesitated, then answered. "No, they got through all right, but how they did is a mystery. The boat was riddled."

Dan McNamara came back into the living room and on his heavy face was the faintest, most cryptic of grins.

"I'm going to get one or both of Nance's friends, Doc," he exulted. "One of them was hit, and he'll have to have medical attention. Not that I want to land either one of them for this job, but because I want to give them the once-over. At that they might be somebody we're looking for."

The Chief Watched Stephen Put Up His Car.

"Did Nance tell you one of them had been hit?"

"No, but she hesitated half a second when she told me neither of them had been hit. She never hesitates ordinarily. Her co-ordination is lightning fast—well, you get so, Doc, that you know when they're lying. Go to the telephone, call up your home and ask if you've had any telephone calls within the past hour."

Stephen obeyed and was informed that a man, who refused to leave his name, had called up three times and had left word he would call again; that he had seemed very anxious to know when the doctor would return.

"I knew it—I knew it." Dan McNamara's pride in his own perspicacity was almost juvenile. "I figured Nance would tell them to go to you. And I'll make another prophecy. They'll admit they are friends of hers and that she sent them there. She's told them you're her friend and that you'll not turn them up to me. A wounded crook is always up against it, Doc, unless he knows a crooked doctor. The hospitals and ninety-nine and nine-tenths of the doctors will report to the police when they receive a call from a patient suffering from knife or gunshot wounds. And in this case the radios have broadcast the warning of two hundred and fifty dollars out for Nance too—standing state reward for recapturing an escaped convict.

"Come on, Doc. I'll go to your home with you and pick these birds up."

"No, you shall not. I wouldn't turn those two men over to you for ten thousand dollars. They're too—"

"Yes, they have guts. They can be trusted on a particular job I want to put through. Word of honor, Steve. I'll not pinch them. I just want to talk with them."

A block from Stephen's home Dan McNamara got out of the doctor's car. He had already received from Stephen Burt a description of the ground-floor plan of his house. And Stephen had agreed to leave his latchkey under the mat at the front door.

The chief watched Stephen put up his car and enter his home. A light was shining in the entrance hall, and this light Stephen, in accordance with the chief's instructions, switched off.

In about five minutes the chief saw this light switched on and off twice. That meant the doctor had received another telephone message. Then the light was switched on and off ten times. That meant the patient would arrive in about ten minutes, so Dan McNamara hid himself in the deep shadow of a tradesman's entrance at the side of a house across the street, and waited.

In ten minutes almost to the second, a car, with drawn curtains, drove up to the house and two men got out. The chief could see that one of them had to have assistance, so the driver got out and helped the other man half drag, half carry, the wounded man up the steps. Stephen opened the door and the three men entered; immediately McNamara ran across the street and up the front steps behind them, found the latchkey under the mat, opened the door and stepped inside. He could hear voices in Stephen's reception room, so he drew his pistol and stepped silently up to the entrance of it.

"Put 'em up, boys," he ordered cheerfully. He drew back his left lapel and revealed his blue and gold shield. "No necessity to argue in the smoke. This isn't a hanging matter."

He forced the two unwounded men to stand with their backs toward him while he ran his facile hands over their persons and relieved each of a pistol. He "broke" both guns and placed the cartridges in his pocket.

"I beg your pardon, Doctor, for entering your house unannounced, but you left your front door unlatched and I couldn't resist. I had a notion these men might call upon you. Just a hunch because the warden tipped us off to watch the home of your office nurse, Miss Lanning. So, while watching the home of the servant I concluded to watch that of the master, also. Sit down, boys. Never mind us, Doc. The man on the table needs all of your attention. Fix him up nicely and let him lie there until I come back. He can't run away, and if he tries, don't you let him. You other men come with me down to the central office till I see if we have anything on you. I don't appear to have the honor of your acquaintance, but we'll look the rogues' gallery over and compare fingerprints. While there's life, there's hope."

"You're all wet, Chief," the driver of the car replied pertly.

"Perhaps—but not as wet as your friends." And McNamara chuckled at his little joke. "You can't do forty an hour through the tide-rips off Alcatraz island without throwing some spray. You got an open fireplace in your house, Doctor?"

Stephen saw that McNamara was pretending they had not previously met. "Yes, Chief. In the drawing room. It's all set."

"I want to warm these boys up and dry them out. They did good work this afternoon and they deserve good treatment. Drop that wounded man long enough to dig up a couple of stiff jolts of spiritus frumenti for my lads, will you, Doc? I always warm a cold man from the outside in and from the inside out."

"Thank you, Chief," both men muttered.

The three retired to the drawing room and the chief tossed one of the men a box of matches. "Fire up," he commanded. "Then draw yourself up to the blaze and drink the grog the doctor will give you. Where's your pal hit?"

"Top of the right shoulder, calf of the left leg and biceps of the left arm."

"So he's the chap that dragged Nance out of the water, eh? He was in the rear cockpit, but you were up front driving the boat. There are forty bullet holes in the rear of that boat." He sighed. "These machine guns certainly spray things. You didn't drop your own machine gun overboard, either. They're too valuable and hard to get. A Thompson, I suppose. A Tommy gun and a Tommy man! Visiting brethren—from Chicago, I suppose. That's why we haven't met before. Pardon me a minute while I look for the Tommy gun in your car. And if you want to die in a hurry just try beating it out the back way while I'm gone."

He returned in less than a minute with the one-man machine gun in his hands. "We've got Nance Belden where you dropped her," he announced, "so while you're lapping up that whisky, tell me all about it."

"So Nance told you where to look for us, eh?" The man who had handled the motor boat spoke with withering contempt and hatred. Instantly Dan McNamara cuffed him viciously on the side of the head.

"Apologize for that," he roared. "You're so d—d crooked you think everybody else is, too."

The man mumbled an apology.

"No, Nance didn't tell me, you rat," McNamara went on, "and I didn't ask her, because I knew she wouldn't tell. But I did think she'd tip you off to call on this doctor. You dropped her at the home of his office nurse; I put two and two together and decided to investigate—all by myself. And here we are. Got any idea why I came alone?"

"No."

"Because I wanted to save you from the consequences of the job you pulled off this afternoon. I'm in sympathy with that, and as far as I'm concerned Nance Belden isn't going back to San Quentin. And she isn't going back to your gang, either. Now, you play the game with me and I'll play it with you. Double-cross me and I'll hang something hard on you, and you and your friends won't be heard of in public for a long time."

DROPS TIPS ON GIRLS OF GLOBE

American Observer Frank in His Findings.

GERTRUDE BAILEY, in the New York World-Telegram.

"German girls are the most beautiful, Japanese girls are silly, Chinese girls look pretty at a distance, but not close up; English women are distinctly athletic. French women still use too much perfume, and the seams in their hose are seldom straight. Russian women are intriguing without looking nice. I can be sure that the American girl has had a bath."

Thus genial Ernest Gann, whose alertness to feminine modes and manners got him a job as director of movie tests for two companies, summed up his impressions of women of different countries.

Flip epithets about women everywhere tripped off the tongue of this twenty-four-year-old man of the world who might have been on his way to George Pierce Baker's dramatic class if he had not explained that he went through that years ago. "Why, at fourteen I had already produced a movie—just a one-reeler, 'Sweet Sixteen'—but I thought it was great art and the country called it a riot," he said.

What this happy-go-lucky blond youth learned about women in one trip around the world points to the average American girl as the "best groomed, but too concerned about getting thin" (he married an American girl whom "he is trying to fatten up").

His great disappointment, after spending $362 (part of which he borrowed) and eleven months on freighters, motor cycles, and on foot, was that he didn't even get a peek at a harem. "All I could tell about Moorish women was that they were fat and dumpy," he said.

"European men were always asking me to get them a date with an American girl. After all, it is no novelty to the American man to be told to go to h—l, but European men don't know what to make of her impudence and frankness.

"French 'chic' I found applied to international women, and not to the average French woman, who wears enough white make-up and bright lipstick to make one sick," he commented.

"English women do not wear any make-up and look frightful, but German women can wear no make-up and look beautiful.

"I saw almost as many peroxide blonds in Madrid as in Hollywood, and in East Africa a tattooed girl of the 'Berber' tribe had her snapshot with the Foreign Legion posted alongside photograhps of Garbo, Dietrich and Robert Montgomery.

"You can't compare the peasants of Italy and Spain with American women any more than you could a Chinese coolie. Those who can afford to fix themselves up are very charming."

Belgian women he described as "tremendous."

"My ambition? To be chief of police in Bagdad. Aside from that I would like to produce movie shorts with a plot and an O'Henry twist on the end, finish the book I am writing and illustrating about a taxi driver, and to make a movie of a jungle tribe in Ceylon, if I can ever find one," he said.

45 BUSHELS OF BETTER WHEAT FOR $1.25

Figure-out for yourself how much more profit you can make on wheat just by dust-treating seed with New Improved CERESAN (ethyl mercury phosphate).

For $1.25 you can treat enough seed for 40 acres at the average U. S. rate of seeding. Tests on clean seed show that New Improved CERESAN increases yields an average of 1.13 bushels an acre; more, if seed is smutty. That means over 45 bushels more wheat from 40 acres—for only $1.25!

New Improved CERESAN gives better stands, controls stinking smut, brings bigger, better yields. Easy to apply; one pound treats 32 bushels of seed. One lb., 75c; 5 lbs., $3.00. Wheat Pamphlet No. 81 free. Ask dealer or write to the Bayer-Semesan Company, Inc., Wilmington, Delaware.

Suffered From Tetter on Hands

Relieved by Cuticura

"I suffered for two or three years with tetter on my hands. If I did any work they would bleed and become irritated, and I could not bear to put them in water. They were dirty-looking all the time.

"I tried different remedies, but they failed, so I sent for a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I purchased more and after using one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment my hands were entirely relieved." (Signed) Miss Mary Pratt, R. 3, New Market, Tenn.

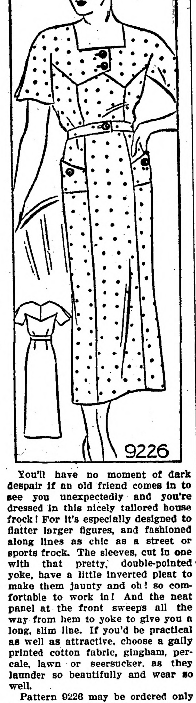
HAS ALL POINTS OF DISTINCTION

PATTERN 9226



You'll have no moment of dark despair if an old friend comes in to see you unexpectedly and you're dressed in this nicely tailored house frock! For it's especially designed to flatter larger figures, and fashioned along lines as chic as a street or sports frock. The sleeves, cut in one with that pretty, double-pointed yoke, have a little inverted pleat to make them jaunty and oh! so comfortable to work in! And the neat panel at the front sweeps all the way from hem to yoke to give you a long, slim line. If you'd be practical as well as attractive, choose a gaily printed cotton fabric, gingham, percale, lawn or seersucker, as they launder so beautifully and wear so well.

Pattern 9226 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards 36 inch fabric.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE of each pattern.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York.

HUGE NEW ARMY IS ORDERED BY HITLER IN DEFIANCE OF VERSAILLES PACT.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

©, Western Newspaper Union.

GERMANY, having recently boldly announced that she was now possessed of a military air force in violation of the Treaty of Versailles, still more boldly declares she is no longer bound by the obligations of that pact and proposes to build up an army of about 480,000 men, comprising 12 corps of three divisions each. This was the decision of the cabinet, which decreed compulsory military training throughout the reich. The exact number of men in the army will be determined by a law to be enacted later.

Chancellor Hitler

This was Chancellor Hitler's reply to the action of France's chamber of deputies in accepting Premier Flandin's plan to increase the term of conscript service in the French army to 18 months and subsequently to two years. Germany considered that France was "dealing the last blow to disarmament," and Hitler, rushing to Berlin from Berchtesgaden, directed the action of the cabinet and issued to the German nation a rousing appeal for full support. He declared that the failure of other nations to reduce armament as called for in the Versailles treaty had released Germany from all treaty obligations, and that while the reich had only peaceful intentions, it must re-arm to protect its territorial integrity and maintain the respect of the world as a co-guarantor of European peace.

The Reichsfuehrer stated that Germany did all she could to stabilize peace as evidenced by three facts: She offered non-aggression pacts to all her neighbors; she regulated her affairs with Poland; she showed France that after the return of the Saar there were no territorial questions at issue between France and Germany.

Official London was greatly disturbed by this sudden action of the German government which came just ten days before the date set for a meeting of Sir John Simon, foreign secretary, and Lord Privy Seal Anthony Eden with Hitler in Berlin. The British were prepared to offer abolition of some of the military clauses of the Versailles treaty in return for Germany's adherence to the inclusive plan for European security. But it was feared Hitler would now demand formal recognition of German rearmament, including an army of half a million men, a military air fleet of 1,500 planes and a navy one-third the strength of the British navy. All of which is far beyond what the British peace plan contemplates.

Of course all the world has been aware for some time of the fact that Germany was re-arming. Before the French chamber voted to approve Flandin's project, Jean Fabry, president of the chamber's army commission, stated that the army of the reich had been strengthened in one year from 100,000 to 600,000, asserting the reichswehr had been increased from 100,000 (the treaty figure) to 400,000 and the nominal total of 100,000 police in barracks doubled.

COMPLETE collapse of the administration's long battle to regulate prices in the steel industry is seen in an NRA offer to give up, and in charges by the federal trade commission of a fiasco of collusion. The trade commission insists that price-fixing be scrapped, and no prosecution of steel companies under the anti-trust laws. The trade commission charges that under the code the steel companies have fixed and raised prices on government contracts, "in defiance of competitive bidding requirements. Bids were identical, and then steel executives slapped fines of $10 a ton on members who let the government have steel cheaper.

GOV. MARTIN L. DAVEY of Ohio, charged by Federal Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins with "corruption" in Ohio relief, went before the state senate and demanded a thorough investigation. He defied Hopkins to come to Ohio for trial on a warrant he had secured charging Hopkins with criminal libel. Hopkins had alleged in a letter that he has proof of "corruption" of relief administration in Ohio including soliciting of funds for campaign purposes from firms that sold relief materials. Hopkins, through C. C. Stillman, FERA regional officer, has taken over administration of Ohio relief. Department of Justice attorneys in Washington declare they stand ready to defend Hopkins, but there was no indication that Hopkins would go to Ohio, although he may change his mind. The spectacular blowup is said to have had its inception in the 1934 political campaign. Davey made campaign speeches charging that Ohio relief was mismanaged, and particularly aimed his barbs at Cleveland. This irked Cleveland leaders since relief there had been administered through a non-political group, which later became the official Cuyahoga county relief administration. Hopkins often took note of the fact that Cleveland's relief committee was "one of the best in the country." Later Davey pledged himself not to touch the Cleveland organization, but is said to have ousted several members, and repeated old charges. Cleveland leaders took the fight to Washington.

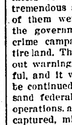
RUMBLINGS from Russia declare that Germany is concluding a military pact with Japan. Gen. Sadao Araki, former Japanese minister of war, it is claimed, is going to Berlin soon to discuss terms. Official warning went out over Russia that "war may break out unexpectedly at any moment." Michael Kalinin, president of the all-Russian central executive committee, made this blunt statement in an address before organizers of the Soviet cavalry, and it was later broadcast over the republic. He blamed conditions on "the present political whims of the dominating classes of capitalistic countries." He said:

"It is not necessary to prove that the Soviet Union is against war. No other government in the world ever manifested a desire for peace more than ours."

COMPROMISE and White House pressure brought about the defeat of the McCarran "prevailing wage" amendment to the work relief bill in the senate, and administration leaders were confident that the measure would be laid before the President for signature within a few days. The deadlock over the amendment was broken when Senator Richard B. Russell, Jr., of Georgia proposed a substitute which leaves the President free to pay "security wages," officially estimated at $50 a month, provided they do not adversely affect the wage scale in private industry; and providing that the prevailing wage must be paid on all permanent federal building projects. This way out, which had been approved by the White House, was accepted by the senate by a vote of 83 to 2, after the McCarran amendment had been defeated, 50 to 38. The two votes against the compromise were cast by Metcalfe of Rhode Island and Hale of Maine, both Republicans. Before the vote on the McCarran amendment was taken Senator Glass announced he was authorized to say that if it prevailed President Roosevelt would veto the measure.

There remained many obstacles over which the relief bill must be pushed, for the regular Republicans and a considerable number of Democrats were determined to alter it materially. Several senators favored cutting it down by three or even four billions; and La Follette of Wisconsin wanted the total increased to ten billions. Inflation and bonus enthusiasts also planned to attach riders.

THE house appropriations committee favorably reported out the Department of Agriculture appropriations bill for the 1936 fiscal year. A cut of $513,878,758 was due largely to a $411,022,428 slash in the AAA item. The total bill calls for $653,278,758, of which $570,000,000 would go to the Agriculture Adjustment administration activities. At committee hearings it was explained that it is impossible to estimate how much would have to be obligated because of the crop control program, but the AAA item was a rough estimate of processing tax collections and is not controlling. Henry Wallace, secretary of agriculture, told the committee that the farmers' share of the national income is now about 10.2 per cent, and should be 13 to 16 per cent.



Sec'y Wallace

Wallace said "true prosperity" cannot come "until there has been a very material increase in the output of physical goods, industrial goods."

"If in some way it were possible to turn out 50 per cent more industrial goods at a price definitely lower than the present price," the secretary testified, "the result would be to make it possible for agriculture to buy more with the agricultural dollar and there would be more factory workers to be fed in the cities."

COUNTERFEITERS, narcotics dealers, bootleggers and other violators of federal laws were given a tremendous shock and many hundreds of them were thrown into jail when the government opened up an anti-crime campaign that covered the entire land. The initial raids, made without warning, were immensely successful, and it was announced they would be continued indefinitely. Twelve thousand federal officers took part in the operations, and besides the individuals captured, millions of dollars worth of contraband was seized.

The drive was described by treasury officials as a test of the advantages of concerted action by all enforcement agencies coming under its supervision. Such a campaign was planned as early as last summer when a "crime co-ordination committee" was formed, under the leadership of Harold N. Graves, special assistant to Secretary Morgenthau.

WILEY POST'S second attempt to fly from Los Angeles to New York through the stratosphere in record-breaking time ended at Cleveland, where he was compelled to come down because his supply of oxygen was running short. He said he would have "passed out" in a few minutes if he had not descended to breathable air. Post is convinced that only this trouble prevented his making the transcontinental flight in seven hours and 40 minutes, and he declared he would soon try again. His unofficial average speed to the Cleveland airport was 279.46 miles an hour.

Unwise to "Push" Youngster

Child Needs Time to Develop Power of Attainment; Early Achievement Not as Desirable as Some Parents Would Seem to Believe.

"We are hipped, we Americans, with the passion for early success and youthful achievements," so writes one of the best known, experienced, and successful critics, "H. T. P." It is a sentence to give pause to parents' thoughts. There is something stimulating to them in the realization that their children are proving their ability while still youthful. In imagination they see these, their offsring, spurring ahead, not only of those of their own age but overtaking and forging ahead of those of more mature years and of wider experience.

When a child is a genius, or especially gifted or talented, he, (or she), is able to grasp with amazing rapidity the meaning of instructions and to acquire technique at a very early age which would otherwise be beyond him. With this mental and physical equipment there is also a quality, not to be gauged by years, for it is ageless. But geniuses are rare, despite the fact that many parents consider their children belong to the limited company. It is wiser to be slow in such classification, while nurturing and cherishing what seems to be a spark of the "Divine fire" found in geniuses. Above all, youths and give them every possible opportunity for proper development of the ability.

Apart from these exceptional children, there is the vast majority, the normal average. These children may be slow in developing their powers. They require time to lay the right foundation, if they are to have sufficient technique to amount to anything worth while. It is a mistake to be "hipped with the passion for early success and youthful achievement." Give the young folks time to prove themselves. So long as they don't settle down to contentment with mediocrity they are working toward some fulfillment. To put pressure on them may stunt the development of their powers. Provide as suitable an environment as possible for their progress and encourage rather than urge them to go forward.

This waiting game on the part of parents is not easy, especially when they see others rising. The consolation to them has to come from the realization that achievement is laid on a cumulative foundation. Rome was not built in a day, but it was being built continually and steadily. It was neither a lazy nor a makeshift process, but a steady rising. Parents have the right to expect something of their children, but unless they foster abilities and do not push the youngsters ahead before they are ready, they may frustrate their own hopes.

Safetygrams
BY
FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

What can we do for the pedestrian? Approximately three out of every four traffic fatalities are the result of vehicles coming into contact with pedestrians. Safety education has helped to reduce the number of fatalities for school children and the safe conduct of children in and around schools and on the way home, and there is every reason to believe from experience in varios cities that education for the protection of adults will also prove effective. It should be so urged and arranged that this safety education is given to the public. Safe habits and safe conduct will answer the problem.

Laws and regulations will not prevent accidents. The citizens themselves must be instilled with the idea of carefulness and until such time little progress can be expected. Pedestrian traffic should be controlled the same as the vehicular traffic is now controlled by traffic officers. People should learn to walk with the lights and exercise ordinary care at crossings and highways.

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

H.O. Hanson, Editor and Publisher — Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota, Friday, April 12, 1935. — Volume 24, Number 50

County Relief Cost Is Fixed

Marshall county's contribution to relief needs for the current year was fixed at $13,324 in the office of the acting State ERA Administrator, L. P. Zimmerman in St. Paul recently at a conference in which Harry L. Fowler, Pennington county Auditor of Thief River Falls, represented 14 Northwestern Minnesota counties.

It was estimated at the conference that a total expenditure of $92,748 will be required to meet relief needs in Marshall county this year, with all but the county's small share being supplied from state and federal sources. In a survey recently completed it had been recommended that the Marshall county share be fixed at $36,968, but this sum was reduced at the conference on a basis of figures relative to the county's financial condition supplied by Mr. Fowler. The Pennington auditor also supplied figurer to 13 other counties in this section.

Corresponding reductions in county quotas from original proposals were also made in other Northwest counties, said Mr. Fowler in a news story in the Thief River Falls Times a week ago. The total allotment for the 14 counties was cut from $469,123 to $190,320. It was estimated that the requirements of these counties for relief purposes will be slightly in excess of $1,500,000.

Original estimates and final figures secured through the efforts of Mr. Fowler, for contributions of adjoining counties follow:

Polk	$105,158	$47,587
Pennington	22,370	8,565
Roseau	25,300	7,614

Opened Lumber Yard Here

John Tangreen of Spooner who recently purchased the Holt Lumber company yard here, has the past week hauled in about seventy thousand feet of lumber from his saw mill near Spooner and stocked it at his yard here.

A. P. Thompson of Baudette, a former yard manager for the Cross-Dodds Lumber company and a pioneer in the lumber business is now here and will manage the local yard for Mr. Tangreen.

Mr. Tangren spent Wednesday here checking over the stock and getting things lined up. He stated that the yard is now open for business and that they can supply you with all kinds of building material.

From all indications there is going to be quite a few new buildings built and old ones repaired in this community this year and we are looking forward to Mr. Tangren doing a nice business in the line of building material in Holt.

Card of Thanks

We hereby express our thanks to our friends and neighbors for their sympathy shown us during the illness and death of our beloved husband and father. Especially do we thank Rev. Redal for his comforting words, the quartet and Mr. Lund for their songs and all those who gave flowers and memoriam.

Mrs. Louis Wegge and family.

Injured On Bridge Work

Arthur Sorum arrived here on Wednesday from Bismarck, N. Dak., to spend some time visiting with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Sorum and other relatives and friends. Art has been laid up the past five weeks with a broken shoulder blade and a bruised leg. He got tangled up in the universal joint on a pump shaft in a sunken pit in the Missouri river near Townsend, Montana where he was foreman on the construction crew for Rue Bros. of Bismarck, who are building a new bridge across the river at that point.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Horien on Tuesday, April 9, a girl.

Pioneer Called Home

Funeral services were conducted from the Nazareth Lutheran church here on Wednesday afternoon for Louis Wegge, pioneer farmer of this community who passed away at his farm home at ten o'clock Sunday evening, April 7. At the time of his death Mr. Wegge was 73 years eleven months and three days old.

He was born in Posen, Germany, May 4, 1861. He came to the United States in 1882 and settled at Henderson, Minn. where he resided for one year. In 1884 he came to Marshall county and settled in the eastern edge of Holt Township where he took a homestead and where he has since made his home.

During his lifetime he was a busy man making a good farm out of his wooded land and also took an active part in the affairs of the community.

He served as a member on the local creamery board for twenty years, out of which time he was the president of the board for twelve years, retiring from that position in 1932. He also served on the town board for many years and was a member of the Sunnyside school board for seventeen years.

When the Marshall County State Bank was organized here in November 1922 he was elected vice-president of the institution and served in that capacity until the spring of 1933.

During the past two years illness had kept him at home most of the time and he was unable to keep any official jobs.

Mr. Wegge was united in marriage to Emilie Ohm at Crookston on October 15, 1889. To this union nine children were born. Two sons and one daughter have preceeded him in death He leaves to mourn his loss his wife, Mrs. Wegge; four daughters, Mrs. O. M. Mickelson of Leeds, No. Dak.; Mrs. A. L. Carlson, Crookston; Lucy, of Thief River Falls; Irene of Fargo; two sons, Edgar and Dennis of Holt; and seven grand children.

A very large crowd attended the funeral services at the church of which Mr. Wegge was a member. Rev. L. M. Redal officiated. The active pallbearers were: P. L. Anderson, J. P. Bennitt, A. L. Carlson, R. J. Lund, F. D. Voth and Geo. Fricker. The honorary pallbearers were: Hans Fosholm Ole Davidson, John Sorum, William Paskewitz, Nils Lysne and Theo. Sorum.

Friends and relatives gave a large offering of beutiful flowers and a sum of $15.00 was given to the missions in memory of Mr. Wegge.

Interment was made in the Holt cemetery. The Carlson Funeral Service had charge of the arrangements.

Out of town relatives who attended were: Mr. Hans Sather, Mrs. Raymond Wegge, and daughter and Fred Ohm of Larimore, N. Dak.; Reinhard Ohm of Crookston.

The News joins the people of this community in extending the Wegge family sympathy during their sorrow.

Given Bridal Shower

A number of ladies from here and the country motored out to the A. O. Thompson home Tuesday evening to give Mrs. Gust Torgrimson a bridal shower. Mrs. Torgrimson is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson.

Action Started To Take Land

A petition has been filed in district court at Warren for the acquisition by condemnation of 52,700 acres of land to be purchased and managed by the United States Bureau of Biological Survey as a Federal migratory wild fowl refuge. About authorization of the Minnesota Conservation Commission, the Department of Conservation is cooperating with the federal government in the legal action.

Authority for the proceedings was granted by a special law passed by the present state legislature so as to enable such lands to be condemned for the United States government.

E. V. Willard, Commissioner of Conservation, said that "it was found necessary to condemn rather than to try to acquire title through negotiations with the owners because of the manner in which titles to the lands are involved by reason of tax delinquencies and other forms of indebtedness."

"An appraisal was made to determine the value of these lands and improvements at the time titles to the lands were examined," Mr. Willard said. "This appraisal shows the lands averaging $3.00 per acre."

"As a condition to the federal government's purchase of the area the State of Minnesota was required to tender the federal government the lands at a definite price as sub-marginal lands. The price at which these lands were offered and accepted by the federal government was the highest price the government would pay.

"Completion of the project will hinge on whether or not the lands can be acquired for a price which can be paid by the government. The lands must be acquired for the amount set aside by the federal government which includes all costs of acquisition. If this cannot be accomplished, the Conservation Department may be compelled to dismiss the proceedings at any time it finds that it cannot proceed under the limitations prescribed in the act and at the same time fulfill its obligation to the federal government. It must be remembered that not one dollar of state funds will be expended."

Looking at the whole transaction from a local angle we find that it will take local cooperation more than any other one factor to make the Mud Lake Project a sucess.

Ole Nygaard and Walter Swan left on Monday for New York. They expect to join some large road show for the summer.

LOUIS WEGGE

State May Lose $18,000,000

Although Minnesota probably will be allotted $21,790,000 of federal public works highway funds for 1935 and 1936 without the necessity of matching the money, the state will be unable to obtain the grant unless highway department revenues are increased sufficiently to meet incidental expense, N. W. Elsberg, highway commissioner, informed the legislature this week.

His statement was base on the presumption that present federal regulations governing expenditure of emergency grant funds will remain in effect for the coming two years. Mr. Elsberg estimated that approximately $4,450,000 over and above revenues anticipated under the House-Senate conference report on license fees will be necessary if the state is to spend the full federal grant. This does not include any money for matching of regular federal aid set up in the Hayden-Cartwright act.

"Existing federal regulations", said Mr. Elsberg, "require the state to use its own funds for preliminary engineering, planning and other incidental work on an emergency grant program, and also to pay in full all property damages, condemnation awards and property purchases required to carry out the program.

"These necessary state expenses amount to from 20 to 30 per cent of the federal funds used. Using 25 per cent as an average, it will cost the state about $5,450,000 to spend the full federal grant of $21,810,000.

"With the approximate increase in department revenues of $300,000 a year provided by the conference report on motor vehicle license fees, we will have about $500,000 a year in state funds available for use with the federal grant. All the rest of the state funds will be required for bond charges, maintenance and other necessary expenses.

"This would make $1,000,000 of state funds available for the two year period. Deducting this from the $5,450,000 needed, leaves a shortage of $4,450,000 for the biennium. The available $1,000,000 alone will enable us to use about $4,000,000 of the federal grant. Thus the state stands to lose nearly $18,000,000 of the grant unless additional highway income is provided."

Sportsmen Club Organized

A local sportsmen's club was organized here on Tuesday evening. W. H. Quist, State Game Warden of Thief River Falls, was here and outlined a program for the local members and from the looks of the thing now we are going to have a live organization going here in a short time

From the crowd of sportsmen that attended the meeting, nineteen signed as charter members and it was brought out that this was only half of the membership that will be enrolled when they get started.

The officers named to head the club were: Tom Severson, President; C. A, Larson, Sec'y-Treas; Sam Lorentson, Vice-Pres; Olaf Ness Rudy Christenson Directors.

The local club will shoot it out with the newly organized Newfolden club in a crow hunt which is to start at once and last until the first Sunday in June, the losing side to set up the treats.

The shooting match will go by points as follows: 10 points for a crow, 5 points for a pocket gopher and 1 point for a grey or striped gopher.

Visiting members from the Newfolden club were: Alfred Johnson, Martin Smeby and Mr. Mork, Supt. of Schools there.

The charge for membership fee in the local organization is only 50 cents per year. More members are invited to come and join at once so they can get the teams lined for the first crow hunt. The sportsmen in the country should get in contact with Mr. Severson or Mr Larson at once.

In another week or two there will be many black squakers around and we should be ready to give them a warm reception on the first day of their annual conference that they hold and at which they seem to decide which cornfield they should eat up first. Lets get busy and shoot a thousand crows.

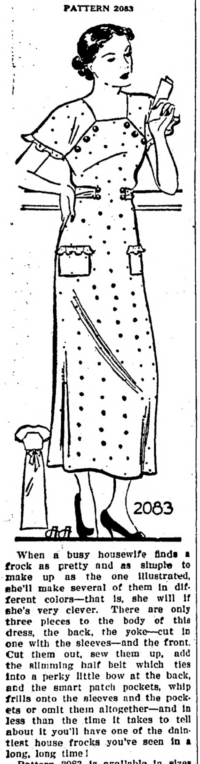
SIMPLE TO MAKE; EASY TO WEAR

PATTERN 2083



When a busy housewife finds a frock as pretty and as simple to make up as the one illustrated, she'll make several of them in different colors—that is, she will if she's very clever. There are only three pieces to the body of this dress, the back, the yoke—cut in one with the sleeves—and the front. Cut them out, sew them up, add the slimming half belt which ties into a perky little bow at the back, and the smart patch pockets, whip frills onto the sleeves and the pockets or omit them altogether—and in less than the time it takes to tell about it you'll have one of the daintiest house frocks you've seen in a long, long time!

Pattern 2083 is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 16 takes 3¼ yards 36 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address, and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth street, New York City.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, "Penelope," in an effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. Ten-year-old Penelope is given into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin. At a baseball game a ball strikes Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for her when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is also won over. Nance's criminal record outweighs Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary. Lanny visits her and Nance persuades her to smuggle out a letter which a confederate of Nance steals. Nance escapes, although shot, and goes to Lanny's apartment. Lanny tells Chief McNamara, who orders her to bring Nance to his apartment. Details of Nance's escape are made public.

"Nance had no right to be there," the man protested to McNamara. "The poor kid's queer." He tapped his forehead. "But she framed a sweet getaway, if it would work, and we figured it might. So we thought we'd give the girl a hand. She's all right. I've got a blind brother that would have starved to death if it hadn't been for Nance Belden; as for the man the doctor's working over now, Nance took care of his wife while he was in the stir. Helped her when she had a baby. Chief, that girl's a saint. The only trouble with her is that she's a devil, too. You never know how to figure her."

"You've figured her right. She's queer. And what's your wounded friend been doing since he got out of stir? What did he get in for?"

"He got in for bootlegging and he's been bodyguard for a boss bootlegger since he got out."

"H-m-m-m! And what's your specialty?"

"I don't know what line I'll take up, Chief. I've only been out of the United States army disciplinary barracks on Alcatraz Island a month. I was a soldier—and I poked an officer."

"Oh, you're the machine-gunner, eh? Learned to shoot in the army, I suppose?"

"If I hadn't, I'd have killed that guard. I could have gotten him if I cared to, but instead I scared him with overs and shorts. Did I sweep the roof of that lookout tower?"

"You certainly did—and rattled the man at the Browning gun there. Well, you're quite a fellow! What does your friend, the chauffeur, do?"

"Delivers bootleg. He took a chance for a friend."

"You may go," said Dan McNamara to the chauffeur. "Take your car and beat it. But I'll remember you and if you pull any rough stuff in this city I'll land you out in the grass. On your way."

The man fled promptly, and Dan turned to the ex-soldier. "I've got Nance out at my house," he explained. "Doctor Burt has fixed her up and I'm not going to turn her in. Neither am I going to turn her out, because she wouldn't be out two hours before she'd be picked up. That saddle nose of hers is a dead-give-away."

The man nodded lugubriously.

"We've got to find a quiet spot for your friend, too," the chief went on meditatively. "A man with three bullet holes in him is in an embarrassing fix—when he's wanted. So we'll take him out to my house, too. That's the only safe place I can think of."

"How about me?"

"You've been a soldier, so I suppose you can carry out orders?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, your orders are to come out to my house, too, and take care of your friends. The doctor will call every day and tell you what to do. And you'll have to do the cooking."

"I can do that, too. Not fancy, but they can eat it."

"All right, you've got a job and a holing-up place as well. I'll go home now and get my car and come back for you and your friend. Meanwhile don't you get cold feet and disappear. I want to talk to you some more. I want to find out all about Nance Belden, and you and your friend might be able to give a line on her."

"I don't know anything about her, Chief, except that her real name is Penelope Gatlin."

Dan McNamara clasped his corrugated brow in both hands and pondered. "Gatlin! Gatlin! Penelope Gatlin! Now, where have I run across that name in my business? I don't usually forget names, and I seem to remember I had a call once for somebody by that name or else somebody by that name called on me. It was a long time ago. I'll have to look that up—I wonder if there's anything in the files at headquarters."

It was midnight before Nance Belden's two friends were installed with her in Dan McNamara's house. Lanny looked both men over carefully and confided to the chief that she wouldn't trust either one of them as far as she could throw a bear by its tail, to which Mr. McNamara replied that one of them couldn't raise any deviltry if he wanted to, while the other dared not. Moreover, this latter was the only practical nurse he could secure. A trained nurse might talk; on the other hand, this friend of Nance's had been educated to keep his mouth shut. "And a very great virtue," McNamara added. "His freedom is in my keeping and my honor is in his, so we have to trust each other. Besides, it's high time you got home."

"How about those two cops waiting for me?"

"Greet them kindly, ask them their business and invite them to talk it over before they can tell you what it is. When they tell you permit them to search your home, and be cheerful about it."

The phone rang and Dan answered it. When he rejoined Lanny he was smiling broadly. "You're a bum mopper-up," he accused. "That was Flynn, one of the detective sergeants on watch at your house. He found two drops of blood you overlooked, so he thinks you and Nance are in the house but refuse to answer the bell, and he wants permission to break in, in the name of the law. He says he can slide the latch on your front door lock like nobody's business. I told him to wait another hour and then try it, but to be careful."

Lanny's independent and belligerent nature was instantly aroused. "If I couldn't give a snooper like that cards and spades, the four aces, big and little casino, and beat him to death on the sweeps, I'd kiss a cow," she declared. "Guess I'll go home and make those big boobs feel ashamed of themselves for disturbing a lady."

"Whatever you do, be nice to them," he warned earnestly. "If you get snooty with them, Lanny, they'll just waltz you down to central station and stow you away for the night—with the excuse that the chief wants to see you. And I've decided I don't know you. If I did I'd go home with you."

He escorted Lanny out to her car and with a flashlight examined it very carefully again for signs of blood. He found two dried splotches and wiped them away before permitting her to depart.

As Lanny entered the driveway and paused in front of her garage, there were no detectives in sight, although there might have been had she deemed it the part of wisdom to glance carefully about her. She unlocked the garage door, climbed back in her car, drove in, stopped the motor and switched off the lights. Then she got out, closed and locked the garage door and turned on an electric light switch on the doorpost to light her way upstairs to her kitchen.

Then she almost screamed. Two big fellows wearing soft hats were standing behind her car, gazing at her owlishly. Instantly Lanny switched off the light, got her little pistol out of her bag and switched the light on again.

"Now what do you two handsome devils want?" she demanded.

Like automatons the pair threw back their lapels and disclosed their shields. "Cops or no cops," Lanny announced, "my garage is my castle, and you can't come into it uninvited without a search warrant."

The two detectives looked at each other and Lanny realized that they appreciated her very much indeed. "She's a lawyer," said one of them.

"Not a very good one, though," the other replied. "However, Pat, let her have her own way. A woman"—the outrageous fellow bowed low—"and particularly a young and beautiful woman—with a pistol—always makes me nervous. If you will be good enough to open your garage door, Miss Lanning, we will go out, come up your front stairs, ring the bell like gentlemen, and ask if we can't come in and have a little chat with you. Is that satisfactory?"

"Eminently so." Lanny was as polite as the speaker now. She felt for the bolt in back of her, slid it back and kicked the door open without taking her eyes or her pistol off the pair. They went out, closed both doors behind her and held them closed until she had shot the bolt home again. Then she went upstairs and let herself in just as her doorbell rang; so she switched on the lights, removed her hat and coat, went to the door and opened it. Instantly two large hands thrust two cards at her; whereupon she was aware that she was about to entertain Detective Sergeant P. Flynn and Detective Sergeant A. Angelloti.

"Good evening, gentlemen," Lanny hailed them cordially. "Come in and rest your big flat feet."

P. Flynn nodded wisely to A. Angelloti. "She resents us, Amadeo," said he.

"Oh, I hope not, Pat. Let us hope it is not us she resents but our honorable profession." The wretch bowed again. "Thank you, Miss Lanning." And both gentlemen entered.

Lanny led them down the hall to her tiny drawing room. Angelloti, like a hound, followed close behind her, but Flynn was in no hurry. He swept the runner in the hall with a flashlight first, then followed his partner into the drawing room, and sat down heavily on a divan.

"Is this to be a long interview?" Lanny asked cheerfully.

P. Flynn shook his head. "A minute or two."

"Then I'll not bother giving you anything to drink."

"Well, it might take ten minutes, at that," Flynn countered.

"At least that," Angelloti agreed. "Besides, Pat, she works for a doctor and her stuff is probably good old prescription goods."

"We been hours out in the cold," Flynn added sadly.

Lanny mixed her guests each a highball. P. Flynn drank half of his at a gulp, set down his glass and said: "Well, where's Nance Belden?"

"I see by the papers she escaped from San Quentin about six hours ago."

"She came here," Flynn charged.

"Prove it," Lanny challenged tartly; whereupon Flynn went out into the entrance hall and returned, dragging the end of the hall runner with him. He turned it over and revealed a large dark red spot. "Blood!" he announced.

Angelloti touched the spot. "Fresh blood!"

"Human blood," Flynn went on. "Quite a clot of it. She must have fainted after Miss Lanning let her in. Undoubtedly she lay several minutes in the hall bleeding while Miss Lanning was fixing a bed for her."

"We know she came here," Angelloti charged. "We found two spots of blood on the sidewalk."

"That settles it," Flynn declared with ponderous finality. "Miss Lanning, you have this female convict secreted in your house and I advise you to give her up. Come now, give her up," he wheedled, "and we'll just give it out that we caught her trying to get into your house during your absence. We'll protect you."

"Search my house," Lanny offered in a queer, choked voice. She loathed herself for having overlooked that large blood stain on her hall runner.

TO BE CONTINUED.

Then Lanny Almost Screamed. Instantly She Switched Off the Light, Got Her Little Pistol Out of Her Bag and Switched the Light on Again.

Thymus Extract Hailed as Growth Regulator

Two glands of the ductless type, the thymus lying high in the chest near the base of the neck and the pineal located in the head, have recently given medical science some rather startling information regarding their nature. Their existence has been known for years, but aside from a few readily apparent characteristics nothing has been learned about them. Their duties assigned by nature have remained a secret. Now, however, Dr. L. G. Rowntree, of the Philadelphia Institute for Medical Research, has uncovered some surprising facts. He found that when injections of thymus gland extract were administered to rats for three generations the newly born rodents exhibited surprising increases in the rate of growth and development. Rats of the fifth generation after the beginning of the injections of thymus cut teeth in one day instead of the normal nine, grew hair in two days instead of 14, reached adolescence in from four to 18 days as compared to the normal 40 to 90 days, and otherwise showed remarkable increases in physical and mental strength. When extracts of the pineal gland were administered dwarfs were produced. From these findings it is easily concluded that the thymus regulates early growth and the pineal gland acts as a check on the former to keep it from overdoing its job. Since the thymus extract only increases the rate of early growth and does not produce giants there is considerable speculation as to what its effects would be on humans.—Pathfinder Magazine.

City Still Spanish

Most travelers who have visited both Spain and South America assert that Cartagena, in Colombia, is more Spanish in atmosphere than the cities of old Spain. The oldest living city of South America is as medieval as ever in its narrow cobbled streets winding about between old Moorish-Spanish houses, in its Sixteenth century monasteries, old dungeons and moats, and the same grim fortresses which were attacked by Drake and Morgan and the buccaneers of the Spanish main.

EDUCATED PRISONERS

In the last 20 years the number of inmates of San Quentin prison voluntarily taking educational courses has increased from a score to more than 2,030 convicts out of a population of 6,000.

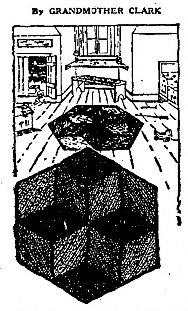
Crocheted Rug in "Cubes and Stars"

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



This is another rug design that our readers will recognize as taken from the "Cubes and Stars" quilt design that is possibly a hundred years old. This rug measures thirty inches and requires about two pounds of material to crochet. It is made up of 12 diamonds and slip stitched together to form a star or blocks, depending on the way the color scheme is worked out. It is always an interesting rug to study (count the cubes) and well adapted for a child's room.

This is one of the twenty beautiful crocheted rugs shown in colors with directions in rug book No. 24. If this rug interests you send 15c to our Rug Department and get the instructions for making this rug and nineteen others.

Anthony Eden

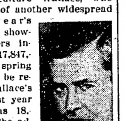
CHANCELLOR HITLER'S virtual threats of war, though coupled with protestations of peaceful intention, are having their effect in almost every nation on earth. In his own land the result is probably one of his main objectives, for the Germans, in their loud rejoicings over the military rebirth of the reich and regaining of its old position, are losing sight of the grave economic problems which the reichsfuehrer has not yet been able to solve.

France, having decreed the enlarging of its army and the increase in the term of conscription, began moving fully half of the troops heretofore placed along the Italian frontier to the Rhine area. Premier Mussolini of Italy, as minister of war, ordered the recall of the entire military class of 1911, estimated at 220,000 men. These additions bring the strength of the army up to approximately 675,000, and when the more than 400,000 Fascist militia are included, the Italian forces number more than a million. The class of 1913, due to be dismissed soon, is being kept under arms. Mussolini made a hot speech to the nation in which he said Italy was ready "for any threat of war" and that "our desire for peace and European collaboration is based upon some millions of bayonets."

According to a Rome paper that usually speaks with authority, there will soon be held an Anglo-Franco-Italian conference to discuss the re-armament of Austria, Bulgaria, and Hungary. This has heretofore been opposed by the countries of the little entente, but it is supposed their views have been altered by recent developments.

Even in the United States the sentiment for at least adequate defense has been spurred. The senate and house conferees reached an agreement on the $400,000,000 War department appropriation bill. The house conferees receded from a proposal to give the President discretionary authority as to the rate of increasing the army's strength to 165,000 men. The senate plan providing that the increase shall begin at once was adopted. The proposed increase, recommended by the War department as necessary to bring the army up to the "least allowable minimum" was the major new provision of the bill but it represented a gain in total appropriations of more than $70,000,000 above last year.

As a preliminary to this meeting there was an important conference in Paris participated in by Capt. Anthony Eden, British lord privy seal; Fulvio Suvich, Italian under-secretary of foreign affairs; and Foreign Minister Laval of France. Laval sought to stiffen the British attitude toward Hitler, but Eden tried to turn him from his determination not to deal with Germany until the League of Nations has passed on France's protest of German violation of the Versailles treaty. It is understood France proposed to impose severe economic penalties on Germany but that Eden persuaded Laval that such measures should be delayed until they had been debated at the coming meeting of the powers at Como, Italy. This conference was postponed for some days to give Eden time to go to Moscow.

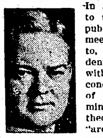


Sec'y Wallace

RESTRICTIONS on planting spring wheat have been removed by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, who fears the effect of another widespread drouth. The year's first crop report showing that farmers intend to plant 17,847,000 acres of spring wheat is said to be responsible for Wallace's about face. Last year the acreage was 18,521,000 acres. The administration is convinced that the government and farmers have a duty to protect consumers against a wheat shortage, he said. Farmers will plan an additional 900,000 to 2,300,000 acres as a result of the new order, and will harvest between ten and thirty million bushels more, Wallace estimates. Spring wheat normally constitutes about one-fourth of the nation's crop. He denied that the European situation pointing to a possibility of increased sales had anything to do with the new decision. Farmers under contract who plant their full spring wheat acreage will receive full benefit payments, but in return will be required to agree to reduce production in 1936 by the amount asked in next year's contract plus the amount they would have reduced this year. There is no indication that the corn acreage control program for 1935 will be altered.

THE Belcher case, regarded as the government's strongest test of NRA'S constitutionality, will be dropped, according to reports from Washington. It will be recalled that William E. Belcher, Alabama lumber mill owner, was alleged to have paid employees less than the lumber code minimum wage, and to have kept them employed eight hours a week more than the code maximum. Belcher did not deny the charges, but attacked the constitutionality of NRA legislation. He was sustained in a demurrer by Judge William Grubb, whose recent ruling that TVA may not sell power in competition with private utilities gave scant comfort to the administration. The Supreme court's decision in the Belcher case has been regarded as very important since it would go directly to the question of NRA's validity, and would make or break government control of industry.

JAPAN steps out of the League of Nations and flanked by her single avowed ally, Manchukuo, she faces the world as the self-chosen preserver of peace in the Orient. Japan's action is the culmination of a series of events started February 24, 1933, when Yosuke Matsuoka led the entire Japanese delegation in a walkout from the league assembly. Shortly after, Japan gave formal notice of her withdrawal from the league because the assembly had censured Japanese aggression in Manchuria. She has advised other powers that she considers herself guardian of peace in eastern Asia, and that outside assistance is neither desired nor invited. In addition, Japan has embarked on an armament policy marked by denunciation of the Washington naval treaty, demands for naval parity with Great Britain and the United States, and armed forces "sufficient to defend, but inadequate to attack."



Herbert Hoover

HERBERT HOOVER suddenly projected himself into the political picture, and set wagging the tongues of countless politicians and observers. In a letter addressed to the California Republican assembly, meeting in Sacramento, the former President spoke his mind with utmost freedom concerning the doings of the Roosevelt administration whose theories, he asserted, "are no longer a propagandized millennium; they are self-exposed." The Republican party, said Mr. Hoover, has today the greatest responsibility that has come to it since the days of Abraham Lincoln—to raise the standard in defense of fundamental American principles; and he called for a rejuvenated and vigorous Republican organization.

Here are some of the things Mr. Hoover said in arraigning the present administration:

"The most solemn government obligations have been repudiated.

"The nation is faced with the greatest debt ever known to our country.

"The currency has been rendered uncertain.

"The government has been centralized under an enormous bureaucracy in Washington . . . small business men have been disabled and crushed. Class conflicts have been created and embittered.

"The cost of living is steadily advancing.

"More people are dependent upon the government for relief than ever before.

"Recovery is still delayed."

Leaders of the regular Reublicans in Washington were quick to declare their approval of Mr. Hoover's attack on the New Deal. Most of them scouted the idea that he was tentatively looking toward another nomination, but the general impression was that he was in the way of becoming the leader of his party in fact as well as in name.

CONSIDERABLY mutilated, the administration's $4,880,000,000 work relief bill finally got through the senate by a vote of 68 to 16, and was returned to the house later, to be adjusted in conference. The senators accepted an amendment by Senator Thomas of Oklahoma for a currency expansion of $375,000,000 through the issuance of silver certificates at the $1.29 an ounce monetary value of the treasury's silver stocks instead of the present practice of using the purchase value of the silver. However, it was confidently expected this would be stricken out in the conference. Previously the senate rejected Senator's Wheeler's amendment for $4,000,000,000 of new currency to finance the works program.

Another amendment which was adopted was that offered by McCarran of Nevada requiring senate confirmation of all officials receiving $5,000 or more who would have charge of expenditure of the fund.

One of the efforts to specify the use of part of the huge work fund was given the approval of the flood control committee of the house. It is a bill to earmark $600,000,000 of the money for flood projects in all parts of the country, and under it about 400 projects which have been recommended by army engineers would be started.

The committee was told the list of projects called for expenditure of approximately $100,000,000 in the lower Mississippi river valley and that expenditure of $181,000,000 would "prevent the devastating floods" in that area.

BY A vote of 202 to 191, the house voted to substitute the Patman currency expansion bill for payment of the soldiers' bonus for the "sound money" plan of Representative Vinson. A boisterous house thus defied President Roosevelt's warning that he will veto immediate payment of the adjusted compensation certificates. The administration is counting on the senate sustaining the veto.

French Women Wield Power Without Votes

DOROTHY DUNBAR BROMLEY, in the New York World-Telegram.

French women are still fighting for the vote today because Napoleon believed our sex should be treated as minors. You can read that set mind of his between the lines of his gallant letters to Empress Marie Louise. He talks to her as if she were even younger than her years.

She is to be generous in her gifts to the people he designates, she is not to give gold snuff boxes, she is to be pleasant to her family and she is "never to allow anything ambiguous to be said in her presence about France and politics."

Obviously Napoleon gave his "bonne Louise" very little credit for judgment of her own or for any common sense.

Napoleon had one willful wife, and that was enough for him. Josephine had carried on her intrigues under his nose. But when he paid her in the same coin she had raised the roof.

So it came about that Napoleon wrote into his famous Code Civil, "the wife must learn that she owes obedience to her husband." And "the wife shall follow her husband wherever she goes." This was a dig at Josephine.

The Code Napoleon has been slightly modified in the course of the years. But even now a French wife can't leave the country without her husband's permission. She can't open a bank account without his o. k., unless she has a business or profession of her own. She can't visit friends or places of which he disapproves. And he has absolute authority over their children and property, unless the marriage contract calls for a separation of their estates.

American women in some of our states are no better off than French women, except for the fact they have the vote. As for that, the French woman would have had the ballot some time ago if the senators of the radical party had not feared that the female vote might strengthen the clerical party.

Since the married French woman is a chattel and since no French woman can go to the polls, American women have been in the habit of condescending to her. But we needn't waste our pity. Ask a Frenchman to make an important business decision and he is as likely as not to put off until tomorrow. He wouldn't admit it, but he will wait to find out what his wife thinks about it.

During the war any number of French women ran their husbands' businesses and factories without a hitch. A Parisian woman of my acquaintance managed her husband's tin factory. When she heard that his outfit at the front could not communicate with headquarters for lack of telegraph wire she got hold of the proper machinery and turned to making telegraph wire.

Napoleon left a lasting imprint on the laws and customs of France. But it would have taken a greater force than the Little Corporal to stay the course of the French woman.

The French woman knows how vain men are. So she never makes a show of power. While she pretends to defer to her husband, she will let fall a suggestion which he will adopt as his own. And if she deceives him she is usually more subtle in her technic than was the willful Josephine. With all her legal disabilities she is happier than the American woman. For she is important in her husband's scheme of things 24 hours of the day.

In the final analysis the French woman makes a business of understanding men. Man is her metier.

Would Seem This Horse Used His "Think Tank"

On the farm we once had a horse that developed the habit of getting out of the stable unassisted. After having been tied securely to the manger with a halter strap and with the stable door latched, he would free himself, and later we would find him prowling about the yard with the halter strap dangling loose from the halter. This occurred several times.

One day I decided to find out how he accomplished this feat. Concealing myself in the stable I watched long and patiently, but to no avail. He was a sly old rogue and never attempted to free himself while I was there, probably having sensed my presence in the stable.

I tried again. This time I stealthily approached the stable from the outside and peered through a crack.

We usually tied the halter strap in a half bow-knot, leaving the end of the strap hanging loose.

Before long I saw the horse seize the end of the strap with his teeth and pull out the loop. Thus free, he walked around to the stable door where he fumbled with the latch until he slid it back, then walked out.

Unknown to us he had probably watched us tie and untie the strap many times as well as latch and unlatch the door. And while such things as knots and latches present no problem to the human mind, they are so decidedly outside the province of a horse's mind, that it seemed a bit of clever equestrian thinking on his part to be able to extricate himself unassisted.—R. G. Sebring in "Our Dumb Animals."

Good Deeds

We ought not to speak of the benefits which we have conferred; to remind men of them is to ask them to return them. We should not obtrude them or recall the memory of them; we should only remind a man of what we have given him, by giving him something else. We ought not even to tell others of our good deeds.—Seneca.

COMPLETE LINES OF TRUCK TIRES FOR EVERY TRUCKING SERVICE AT LOWEST PRICES—GIVING LONG MILEAGE AND GREATEST ECONOMY

FIRESTONE pioneered the ship-by-truck movement in 1918, and ever since has consistently led in anticipating every requirement in the design and construction of truck and bus tires for every transportation condition. To accomplish this, Firestone has consistently followed the fundamental principle of its founder and active head, Harvey S. Firestone, "Always to find the way to build tires better than anyone else."

• While there are many reasons why Firestone Tires are safer and more economical, there are two reasons that stand out above all others. One is Gum-Dipping; and the other is two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread.

By Gum-Dipping, every strand in every cord is soaked in liquid rubber, preventing friction—adding extra strength and long mileage. By having two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords placed between the tread and cord body, it is practical to use a tread with higher, more rugged shoulders and a deeper non-skid with flatter contour.

All this provides more rubber on the road, giving longer wear, greater traction and quicker stops. These two extra construction features are patented and used only in Firestone Tires. Take a forward step in maintaining schedules and reducing operating costs. Call on the Firestone Service Store or Firestone Service Dealer today.

Do You Know?

According to local statistics there are actually only 240 acres of land in the Township of Holt that is not being farmed. One parcel of this is in the extreme southeast corner and the other piece is in the northwest corner of the township. This shows that our land in this community is well taken up.

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

While I like to write mostly on accident prevention and safe driving, nevertheless a word now and then on what to do when you have an accident is important.

If an accident happens, keep your head and do not leave the scene of the accident until you are justified in doing so. The driver who runs away after a person has been killed or injured commits a serious offense. Drive the injured person to the nearest doctors office or hospital, and report at once to an officer of the law. An attempt to evade the law is usually construed as an admission of guilt.

No matter how trivial or how serious it may be, get the facts about every accident in which your car is involved. These facts should be written on paper at once for they may be of great value to you later on.

Keep cool - - keep your temper - - nobody wants it.

One fellow comes along this week and brings up that old story of what cur little town needs to become a metropolis. He says that if we had paved streets, a couple thousand more people, a white way, water and sewer system, all taxes paid up, more business places, and a few millionares, that we would stand in the front lines for a rating as a small metropolis. Well we do not want to say right out that he is so crazy but as far as we know this same man has never contributed a dollar towards the making of this town nor paid a nickel in any kind of a tax for the up-keep of what we have here.

Scout Troop Organized Here

R. Kirkconnel of Thief River Falls was here last Thursday evening and met with the Holt Commercial Club to talk over the possibility of organizing a Boy Scout troop here. After outlining a program which must be followed in order to have a scout troop, Mr. Kirkconnel gave a short talk on the value of troop work among boys.

A vote was taken among the members of the local commercia club to see how they stood on this proposition and it was found that they were all in favor of having a scout troop organized and that they would back it up financially.

C. A. Larson, local agent for the Great Northern, was chosen as the Scout Leader and Harold Nohre and Hartley Peterson were named as assistant leaders.

On Monday afternoon the boys met with Mr. Larson and were enrolled for the scout troop. Ten boys were present for the first enrollment and it is expected that about three or four more will join the troop.

Named 4-H Club Leader

Miss Beryl Mossman of Monticello, has been named as the Marshall County 4-H clud leader to be in charge of club work throughout the county. Dust Storms Do Big Damage

With an accompaniment of whistling gales, black dust storms and a temperature fall of 46 degrees, winter pounced back on the Northwest and the nation on Monday with many thousands of dollars of damage.

In Minnesota the mercury went as low as 10 above at Bemidji while in St. Paul it fell to 18 above.

Freezing temperatures far to the south of Kansas City, St. Louis and Indianapolis were reported.

The prarie states, particularly in the Southwest, already denuded by the monotonous attacks of wind, suffered the blackest and worst dust storm in history. Dust clouds around the Twin Cities obscured the sky in the wort dust storm of the season while dirt seeped thru closed windows and doors.

The sudden cold has done Minnesota crops no harm, Univesity Farm experts said, and added that a slight delay in planting is the worst damage done by it.

Much snow fell Sunday in the southern part of the state and melted as it fell but as much as two inches were reported covering portions of the northern part of the state.

Down through western Kansas and eastern Colorado across Oklahoma and Texas the storm swept into what all observers reported as the worst dust storm in history with black clouds billowing thousands of feet high as the 60-mile blast laid the earth's ribs bare.

The Associated Press reported that the storm was so intense that motorists in some localities who would not stop because of the blinding storm had to stop because static electricity generated by the flying dust particles disrupted their ignition system.

The Weather bureau explained that "a disturbance of great intensity" moved across the Mississippi valley Sunday.

Bought Improved Farm

F. K. Fredrickson closed a deal last week with Gust Kirby at Viking in which he became the owner of the well built up farm that Mr. Kirby had a mile and a half northeast of Viking. The farm is one of the best improved in that community and Mr. Fredrickson is to be congratulated upon making such a fine deal.

100 Families Go North

Vangaurd of what is expected to be a government-fostered colonization of the rich agricultural lands in the Matanuska valley, near Anchorage, Alaska, 100 Minnesota families packed their household effects early this week, preparatory to the land and water trip to their new farm homes.

Weary of eking out a scant livelihood on submarginal lands in competition with farmers more happily situated, family heads explained to government agents their chief reason for the move is the desire to "start over with a clean slate" and carve out homes for themselves and children.

Their last few weeks in Minnesota have been marked by feverish activity. There were the grocer bills to be paid and other debts and liens to be cleared, for the government has insisted financial affairs be in order before contracts are issued.

Selection of personal goods to be transported to their new homes had to be made, for each family is allowed transportation for only 2,000 pounds. Many a family heirloom, brought across the plains in covered wagons by pioneer ancestors was tossed aside to make room for newer and more useful equipment. All livestock and machinery were disposed of.

Each family will be given a drawing account of $3,000 to be repaid in 30 years with 3 per cent interest.

The families averaging four persons, are of rugged stock, the men and women in the prime of life, for the government specified a 35-year age limit.

Today the families will be on their way to San Francisco, where the boat trip North is to start April 23.

The families' environment in Alaska, said Charles St. Denis, government rehabilitation worker in this state, will be much the same as in their old homes. Already there are 117 families in the valley, with a wealth of experience on which the newcomers may draw. A United States agricultural experiment station also is in operation there. Four hundred single men will aid in clearing land and building new homes.

A market for the farm produce grown is at hand, for the valley is surrounded by famous gold fields as well as one of Alaska's most productive coal fields.

Auto License Fee Is Set

A bill providing for higher automobile license fees in Minnesota was passed on Thursday of last week by the Senate and now awaits only the governor's signature to become a law. The vote was 39 to 14.

The deadline for paying license fees without penalty is set for May 1, After the deadline the penalty will be 25 cents a day for the first two days. If this penalty is paid for both days the total of 50 cents will cover the motorist for the first month after the deadline. The penalty thereafter will be 50 cents a month for the next four months. There is no penalty after that period, the total maximum penalties totaling $2.50. The increased tax will put additional $300,000 in the state coffers.

License fees for new-model automobiles will be 2.2 per cent of the list prices of the cars. For older cars, depreciation will be figured at the rate of 10 per cent for the first year and 15 per cent a year thereafter.

The lowest possible license fees will be $5 and $7.50 for Class A and B cars, respectively. Virtually the only cars in class A are Model T Fords. The B class includes all new Fords and other so-called light cars, as well as the larger and heavier automobiles.

Compared with the new schedule, the 1933-34 schedule was based on 1.2 per cent of the list prices of cars, with depreciation at 20 per cent a year. The minimum fees were the same, $5 and $7.50. The 1932 schedule was based on 2.4 per cent of list prices, with depreciation figured at 10 per cent a year and minimum fees of $10 and $12.50.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, "Penelope," in an effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. At a baseball game a ball strikes ten-year-old Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for her when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is also won over. Nance's criminal record outweighs Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary. Lanny visits her and Nance persuades her to smuggle out a letter, which a confederate of Nance steals. Nance escapes, although shot, and goes to Lanny's apartment. From one of the men in the boat on which the girl escaped McNamara learns that Nance's real name is Penelope Gatlin.

—12—

Flynn and Angelloti needed no second invitation. They searched the house thoroughly and returned to the little drawing room to finish their drinks.

"You've taken her away," Flynn charged. "Where did you take her?"

"If you're such good detectives, go find her." Lanny was getting her courage back again. "She did come here, but I wasn't fool enough to receive her. She came in a car with two men and she did faint in my hallway and lie there for a little while. Of course she expected—why, I can't imagine—that I'd hide her and nurse her. But she's neither a friend nor a relative of mine; she met me once in Doctor Burt's office where I am employed and took a liking to me—in her funny way. She's a psycho-neurotic personality. She wrote me, asking me to call upon her, and I did—like a fool—because I felt sorry for her. She should be in a sanitarium, not a jail."

"Who brought her to Doctor Burt's office?"

"Chief McNamara."

Messrs. Flynn and Angelloti sat up. They glanced slowly at each other. "The old man's been up to his old tricks again," said Flynn. "What became of Nance Belden after you refused to receive her?"

"She left in the automobile." Lanny was careful not to state which automobile or whose.

"You're an accessory to her escape. It was your duty, as a citizen, to hold her here, telephone police headquarters and have her taken down to the emergency hospital for treatment. You can go to the pen for this."

"Get out of my house," Lanny commanded fiercely.

"Sure, but you come with us." Thus Angelloti.

"You can't arrest me without a warrant."

"I said before, you ain't such a good lawyer. We can always pick up anybody that carries a gun without a permit. Into your hat and coat, Miss Lanning, and come with us."

"I'll telephone my lawyer and then go with you," said Lanny with dignity.

"Nothing doing," Flynn declared firmly.

"You two dare lay hands on me and I'll have you both broke, understand. Be careful. Call up Chief McNamara before you get fresh with me. The telephone is in the kitchen."

Flynn went into the kitchen and called up Dan McNamara. He was much subdued upon his return, and Lanny smiled. "We'll get you yet," he growled. "You must have a drag with the chief. He's pulled us off the case. Good night."

When they had gone, Lanny put out the hall light and watched them from behind the door curtain. They crossed the street to their car, climbed in and settled down for an all-night vigil—at least so Lanny decided.

So she dragged the hall runner into the kitchen, scrubbed the bloody spot thoroughly and dried it over the gas stove, reviling herself the while.

* * * * * * *

To the surprise of the machine gunner, Chief Dan McNamara did not ask him a single personal question—not even his name. Nor did he question him regarding his wounded friend. He and the chief partook of a breakfast which the Tommy man prepared, and discussed marksmanship, wounds, battles and sudden death. As the chief was leaving, he gave the machine gunner a list of tradesmen who supplied his house, and told him to telephone his orders; when delivery was made, they were to be left on a table in the basement.

"And don't you answer the telephone and don't show yourself outside or near the front windows," he warned.

The fellow nodded. "By the way, Chief, what's going to become of that speed boat? It belongs to Nance. She bought it for forty-five hundred dollars."

McNamara sat down and looked his amazement. "She paid forty-five hundred dollars for that boat—and yet she was doing time for pinching silk stockings? I don't like to ask you any questions you might be embarrassed to answer, boy, but today will be a total loss to me unless I find out where she keeps her bank roll."

"That's Nance's business an' I'll not discuss it. She sent the check out in the letter outlinin' her plan of escape."

"Who received the letter?"

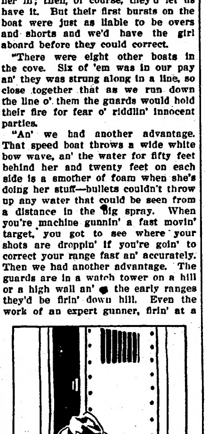
"A friend who showed it to us—and we decided to help Nance out. We both owed her a debt we couldn't see no other way of payin'."

"But didn't you figure out the risks?"

"Sure—an' discounted 'em. Machine-gun fire ain't no new thing to us. We figured them guards wasn't top-notch machine gunners anyhow—that is, at long ranges. They never expect to have to do anything but close-range work; they know how to handle their guns, but they don't have their regular periods of target practice on the range, like a soldier does. In our boat, headed straight away from the fire at forty-five miles an hour, it would take an expert to get on us. An' they wouldn't know for sure whether we were accomplices or not until Nance reached the boat and we started pullin' her in; then, of course, they'd let us have it. But their first bursts on the boat were just as liable to be overs and shorts and we'd have the girl aboard before they could correct.

"There were eight other boats in the cove. Six of 'em was in our pay an' they was strung along in a line, so close together that as we run down the line o' them the guards would hold their fire for fear o' riddlin' innocent parties.

"An' we had another advantage. That speed boat throws a wide white bow wave, an' the water for fifty feet behind her and twenty feet on each side is a smother of foam when she's doing her stuff—bullets couldn't throw up any water that could be seen from a distance in the big spray. When you're machine gunnin' a fast movin' target, you got to see where your shots are droppin' if you're goin' to correct your range fast an' accurately. Then we had another advantage. The guards are in a watch tower on a hill or a high wall an' the early ranges they'd be firin' down hill. Even the work of an expert gunner, firin' at a down angle, goes off considerable. The cockpit was lined with steel, so after the boy friend got Nance aboard, they flopped and were safe. The only trouble was that the edge of one burst got Cates before he could flop. The front cockpit was steel lined, too."



This Tag Bore the Initials "N. B."

The man grinned sheepishly. "I wouldn't take that chance again, Chief. Those gunners were better than we figured them."

"You're both men after my own heart. Well, take good care of your friends. I've got to be on the job till midnight tonight."

"How long you goin' to keep us here?"

"You can bet your sweet life it won't be very long. You're too dangerous to me."

In his official car, driven by a policeman chauffeur, McNamara motored down to central station, where he immediately sent upstairs for Nance Belden's record and photographs and proceeded to San Quentin.

"Did that Belden girl who escaped yesterday leave anything in her cell? Letters, photographs?" he asked the warden.

"I've been in such a stew over her escape I haven't thought of investigating that angle," the warden confessed.

Ten minutes later he was in the cell, carefully looking over the clothing Nance Belden had left behind her. On a slip he found a small, cloth-covered metal tag, such as dry cleaners clamp on garments to identify them. This tag bore the initials "N. B." Inside and just below the collar of a worn tailored suit he found the silk tag which tailors sew into the garments they manufacture. This tag carried the name of "I. Abrahams, Ladies' Tailor, 314 San Fernando avenue, San Jose."

He snipped this tag out of the coat and rummaged through a suitcase under the bed. It contained a deck of playing cards, some clothing which yielded no clues and a blank check of the Security Trust company, of San Jose.

"Nothing of interest in the girl's abandoned effects," he reported to the warden. "By the way, I want to have a chin-chin with one of your prisoners—Benny Beetle, Number 41,322."

"Will you do me a favor, Benny?" the chief asked him when he came in.

"Only one, Dan? I owe you three."

"We'll forget the other two and collect on one. Do you know the good conduct prisoner who works in the identification bureau?"

The Beetle nodded.

"Know anybody whose time is up shortly?"

"My cell-mate."

"If he could bring me word that the photographs, fingerprints and Bertillon measurements of Nance Belden—remember that name?—have mysteriously disappeared, I'd be inclined to be his friend if he got into a jam later on and it wasn't too serious."

"I'll do what I can for you, Chief. I'll ask Bender. He's assistant to the file clerk."

"See him in the mess-hall at noon. And see somebody in the prison print shop. They're probably running off placards to send to all the postmasters in the state. That's where they advertise for escaped prisoners—in post office lobbies. Can't let those placards with the halftone photos and Bertillion measurements get out, you know. Good-by, Benny and thanks a lot."

From San Quentin Dan McNamara motored down to San Jose and called upon I. Abrahams, ladies' tailor.

"Mr. Abrahams, have you ever made a tailored suit for a girl with a nose that something has smashed flat in the middle?"

"Sure I have," Abrahams replied. "You mean Miss Penelope Gatlin, don't you?"

Abrahams looked in his card index cabinet, then opened a large book in which he kept his customers' measurements recorded, together with a sample of the cloth from which each order has been cut. Dan McNamara unhesitatingly placed his finger on one of these samples. "That was the cloth."

"Sure, that was the suit I made for Miss Gatlin two years ago."

"Did Miss Gatlin live in this city? If so, I'd like to have her address."

Ten minutes later, McNamara was pressing the bell at the door of the house in South Mariposa street.

"Does Miss Gatlin live here?" he queried.

"Not any more. She used to live here with her mother, but she disappeared about two years ago, and her mother sold this house to the lady I work for."

"Where is Mrs. Gatlin now?"

"We don't know."

"Thank you," and McNamara directed his driver to go to the Security Trust company, where he sent his card in to the president. He was received promptly.

CHAPTER VI

"Do you happen to have an account in the name of Penelope Gatlin?" Chief McNamara asked the banker.

"Both a trust account and a checking account, Chief. We had her father's account for years before he was unfortunately killed in an automobile accident some eight years ago. We had the account of his divorced wife for quite a while, too, but she has closed that."

"Do you know where she lives at present?"

"I do not." He was interested. "But I remember her quite well—a very beautiful woman. Her first husband was a splendid chap—retail shoe dealer in this city, and very prosperous. He and his wife had a row and she divorced him and got the child. Gatlin was permitted by the court to have the child on two Sunday afternoons a month, and one day he took her to a ball game and they sat in the bleachers. A long hard ball flew into the bleachers and flattened the little girl's nose; Gatlin rushed the unconscious child to a hospital and his ex-wife came and took her home before anything but emergency treatment could be given. Gatlin suspected she was going to try to cure that ruined nose by prayer—so he kidnaped the child, was caught, arrested, and did sixty days in the county jail.

"While he was in jail Mrs. Gatlin fled to Europe with the little girl, and Gatlin was desolated. Subsequently Gatlin sold out his business, made most of his estate liquid and established a trust with us in favor of himself and his daughter. He had made a settlement with Mrs. Gatlin.

"When his wife fled to Europe with the child, Gatlin ceased to deposit the monthly check to her credit, in the belief that she'd write to know why. She didn't, but in some other manner he located her, and started for Europe with the intention of stealing the little girl from her. On the way to the station, an automobile hit the taxi he was in and Gatlin was killed."

"Did he leave a will?"

"He did. His daughter was his sole beneficiary. We were the executors and probated it. There was the ten thousand dollar letter of credit he had purchased just before starting on his fatal trip, and half a dozen pieces of city realty, which has since increased enormously in value. We advertised for the heir but received no answer, so the estate was closed and we handle it now, as trustee."

"How do you know Mrs. Gatlin has become Mrs. Merton?"

TO BE CONTINUED.

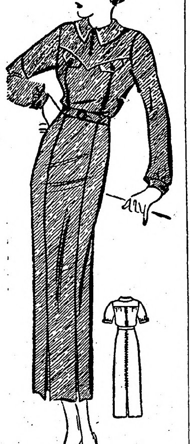
Smart for School or Work in Office

PATTERN 2085



When a girl leaves the house before nine every morning, whether she's off to school or to work, she needs at least one well-tailored frock in her wardrobe, one that will take her smartly through long busy hours and bring her home at night looking as freshly dressed as when she started. Designed along tailored lines, this frock adds a becoming "little boy" collar to its youthful yoke and tops its smart front bodice pleats with buttoned-down tabs that look for all the world like two perky little pockets. The skirt boasts a panel in front which ends in two inverted pleats, and there is another inverted pleat at the back. The full back gathered to the yoke is the last word in chic.

Pattern 2085 is available only in sizes 10, 12, 14, 16 and 18. Size 16 takes 2⅞ yards 54 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS 15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

CURRENT EVENTS PASS IN REVIEW

RUSSIA APPROVES THE SECURITY PACT PLAN BUT POLAND REMAINS ALOOF.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

SOVIET Russia is ready to line up with Great Britain, France and Italy in promoting the general European security pact which is the basis of England's plan for peace. This was brought out by the visit to Moscow of Capt. Anthony Eden, British lord privy seal, and his conferences with Dictator Josef Stalin and Maxim Litvinov, Soviet foreign commissar. According to the joint communique given the press, these statesmen "were of the opinion that in the present international situation it is more than ever necessary to pursue the endeavor to promote the building up of a system of collective security in Europe as contemplated in the Anglo-French communique of the third of February, and in conformity with the principles of the League of Nations."

M. Litvinov

It was made clear that Germany and Poland would be welcome to enter the arrangement, but that it would go ahead even without them.

Captain Eden then went on to Warsaw to talk things over with the Poles; and even as he was departing from Moscow the Soviet press launched another fierce attack on Germany. Michael Tukhachevsky, vice commissar for defense, in an article in the newspaper Pravda, declared Germany would have an army of 849,000 by the summer, exceeding the French army by 40 per cent and almost equaling the Soviet army in size.

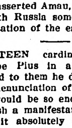
He charged Hitler with "lulling France to sleep" with anti-Soviet war talk in the hope France would not realize her own peril.

Tukhachevsky's view that Germany contemplates attacking France was supported by an authorized article in the weekly Journal de Moscou which asserted the leaders of the reich realized "the exceptional risk to which Germany would subject herself by invasion of the tremendous territories of the U. S. S. R.—a country possessing powerful armaments and unlimited opportunities for improving and increasing these armaments."

"It is almost probable," the Journal said, "that under certain circumstances Hitler will prefer other fields of aggression, and an intensified revision of the map of Europe will be started not in the east but in the west."

POLAND appears to have decided to play a lone hand in the European embroglio, though she remains friendly to Germany. It is reported that Captain Eden's visit to Warsaw was as disappointing as was that of Sir John Simon to Berlin. The Polish government is determined to sign no pact that would commit the nation to fight for Russia against Germany or for Germany against Russia and France, nor will it permit either German or Russian troops to be transported across Poland. The Polish statesmen say they will sign a series of bilateral pacts, and will go as far as any other nation in parallel disarmament. They assert that they have no alliance with Germany, though their mutual troubles have been settled for the next ten years, and that the alliance with France still holds good.

FROM Tokyo there came a statement indicating that Japan would give at least moral support to the European powers that are seeking agreements to counteract Hitler's move for the re-armament of Germany. It was given out by Eiji Amau, the frequently quoted spokesman for the foreign office. He said Japan will hold aloof from the European crisis and that there would be no far eastern Locarno pact, but that "we cannot think of any alliance with Germany." Tokyo, asserted Amau, is ready to discuss with Russia some degree of demilitarization of the eastern frontiers.



Eiji Amau

NINETEEN cardinals met with Pope Pius in a secret consistory, and to them he delivered an emphatic denunciation of war, which, he said, "would be so enormous a crime, so foolish a manifestation of fury, we believe it absolutely impossible." If, however, there is someone who wishes to commit "this nefarious crime," then, the holy father said, he could do nothing else than pray to God to "destroy those people who desire war." At this moment, he continued, the "clamor of war is universally diffused and the cause of agitation to all and arouses in everyone the greatest fear."

The consistory approved the canonization of Blessed Thomas More, King Henry VIII's chancellor, and Bishop John Fisher of England, who lost their heads for opposing Henry's marriage to Anne Boleyn.

OBEYING alleged directions from the yacht on which President Roosevelt was fishing in Florida waters, the majority in the house refused to accept the restrictions injected in the work relief bill and sent it back to conference to have these removed.

The restrictions objectionable to the administration were those requiring senate confirmation of administrative officers of the program and that in loans and grants to states at least one-third of the money should be expended for direct labor. The latter requirement, according to Secretary Ickes and others, would result in the exclusion of rural electrification, slum clearance and similar projects.

Defending the move to send the bill back to conference, Buchanan of Georgia said: "The President is assuming responsibility. All we ask is to give him a bill that he can work on in shifting from dole to employment."

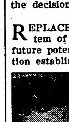
In replying to Buchanan, Representative Robert Bacon (Rep., N. Y.) contended that the labor provision was needed in order to "kick out pet local projects" and afford as much direct relief of unemployment as possible.

"Congress has reached a pretty low ebb," declared Minority Leader Bertrand Snell (Rep., N. Y.), "when it can't even pass on a conference report without receiving orders from the Chief Executive."

STANLEY REED, the new solicitor general, obtained from the Supreme court permission to dismiss the government's appeal in the Belcher lumber code case. Therefore there probably will be no decision as to the constitutionality of the national industrial recovery act by the chief tribunal before congress takes action on the bill to extend the recovery law.

Belcher was indicted for violating the hour and wage provisions of the lumber code but Judge W. I. Grubb of the Federal District court in Birmingham held against the government. The indictment was dismissed. Grubb ruled the NRA law unconstitutional. The government appealed to the Supreme court in an effort to expedite the decision.

REPLACEMENT of the AAA's system of crop control is seen as a future potentiality of a new organization established at the Department of Agriculture under Rexford G. Tugwell. The organization consolidates federal agencies dealing with soil erosion, and Tugwell is expected to direct the expenditure of about a billion dollars in public works funds on the public land program. At present plans call for retirement of millions of acres of marginal lands now contributing to surpluses, which experts contend will prove a more effective way of dealing with overproduction than AAA's policy of taxing commodities for acreage slashes. The latter is meeting increased opposition, due to rising living costs and increasing competition from foreign powers. There will probably be little immediate change in crop control plans, since the Tugwell program will require considerable time before it can be operated effectively.



R. G. Tugwell

FOR the second time the United States Supreme court reversed the convictions and death sentences of two of the Scottsboro negroes who were accused of assault on two white girls. The court held that since negroes in Alabama are not permitted to serve on juries, they are denied "equal protection of the laws" in violation of the Fourteenth amendment. It declared the state court erred in not quashing the indictments.

This was a big victory for the colored race, but in another decision by the Supreme court the negroes were the losers. The tribunal ruled that the Democratic party in Texas is a voluntary association, not subject to control by the state legislature, and as such may exclude colored persons from voting in its primaries.

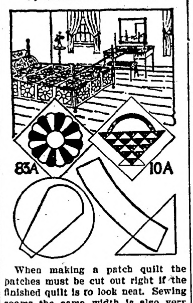
THROUGH the efforts of Donald Richberg, chairman of the NIRB, an agreement was reached by the bituminous coal operators and the United Mine Workers, whereby the prevailing coal code is extended to June 16 and a threatened strike of about half a million miners averted. The present wages and hours of work are continued. President Lewis of the miners insisted the union had not yielded to the operators; but the fact remained that if it had not consented to the agreement Mr. Richberg could and would have extended the code by executive order. This would have placed the union in the undesired position of opposing and defying the administration, and would have weakened the effect of its advocacy of the Wagner labor disputes bill, the Black-Connery bill and the Guffy bill which would virtually convert the bituminous coal industry into a public utility.

THERE were further dust storms in the already severely afflicted plateau district of southwest Kansas, southeast Colorado and parts of New Mexico, Texas and Oklahoma. In western Kansas the farmers began the construction of earthen breastworks against the wind, and a federal appropriation of $250,000,000 for this work was received. Fears that the dust storms would cause an epidemic of pneumonia were allayed when it was found that there were no germs of that disease on laboratory plates exposed in the dust-filled atmosphere by aviators.

Tornadoes in Mississippi and Texas resulted in the deaths of at least half a dozen persons and the injury of many others

CUTTING PATCHES FOR QUILTS

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



When making a patch quilt the patches must be cut out right if the finished quilt is to look neat. Sewing seams the same width is also very important. These two points should always be watched as work progresses, to obtain good results, and not have trouble after work is well under way. Cut the patches from accurate cut-out diagrams. The cut-out diagrams shown here are a set for the "Dresden Plate" and "Basket" quilts, and include allowance for seams. Any width for seams may be used but always use the same width in one quilt, to come out right. Directions for use are very simple. Place cut-out on material so the longest dimension follows the weave. Mark outline with pencil and cut out material carefully.

Send 10 cents to our quilt dept. and we mail you both of these fiber cut-outs set No. 83a and 10a.

SHOT OF THYROID TO RESTORE PEP OF BUSINESS MAN

Business men are advised to get a dose of "brain oil" when they begin to slow down and lose their grip. They can get it from horses, pigs, lambs or other animals, and it will do just as much good as though it came from their own thyroid gland, Dr. George Crile, head of the famous Cleveland clinic explained.

Doctor Crile, in Kansas City for a regional meeting of the American College of Surgeons, gave the advice at a chamber of commerce luncheon.

The decrease in chemical and physical activity sets in at birth, Doctor Crile explained, and the activity of the brain depends on activity of the thyroid gland.

"When a deficient amount of this glandular product is secreted, and this is common in the second half of a business man's life, his brain begins to slow up and his associates notice a letting down in his work," Doctor Crile said. "He feels drowsy and dull in the afternoon. His business fails to hold its dominance among competitors. The activity of his essential organs is letting down.

"Then the man can take thyroid extract and his brain will be sharpened, just as it formerly was sharpened by his own thyroid hormone. It doesn't matter whose thyroid gland makes the extract given to him; it is exactly the same whether it comes from a pig, a lamb, a sheep, a horse, an ox or another man. Thus the lagging individual can be placed back in the saddle again."

Pigs and Patronage

"How do you stand on the hog-slaughtering program?"

"It has been of no use to me," answered Senator Sorghum. "I haven't sufficient sophistry at command to make it look to my constituents like an excuse for not bringing home the bacon."

Acknowledge The Corn

THERE is an old expression for admitting that you are sensitive on some subject—"acknowledge the corn." If, however, we speak of corn that grows in the fields it is impossible to be too sensitive to its benefits. In the case of edible corn we must acknowledge that it is one of our most important foods because it provides energy—that important factor of modern living. It behooves us to eat plenty of delicious corn and to have on hand recipes which offer a variety of uses for canned corn, because canners have succeeded in retaining the wholesome goodness of corn picked at the moment when it is ripest.

To Please Sensitive Taste

Indian Corn: Dice one green pepper and saute with two tablespoons butter until golden brown. Cut sausages from one No. 4½-ounce can of Vienna sausages, in slices. Add to the sauted green pepper and saute a few minutes more. Add one teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper, the contents of a No. 2 can of corn, one-half cup milk and two slightly-beaten eggs. Pour into a buttered baking dish and bake about thirty minutes in a moderate oven—350 degrees. This serves six persons.

Southern Creamed Chicken and Corn: Slice the contents of one 4-ounce can of mushrooms and cook them and one-half cup of chopped blanched almonds in three tablespoons butter for five minutes, being careful not to brown them. Add three tablespoons of flour, and stir until smooth. Add the mushroom liquor and two cups of milk, slowly, stirring constantly until smooth and creamy. Add salt and paprika to taste, the contents of one 6-ounce can of chicken, one cup of canned corn and one slightly-beaten egg yolk. Have mixture very hot. Serves eight.*

Winter Salads

SING a song of salads—cold and crisp and good. But don't sing your song only of summertime salads. Salads in winter are most important because wintertime meals need just that lightening and brightening which salads lend to the setting.

Cheerful Colors

Get plenty of color into these delightful winter salads. Think of your color scheme in terms of flaming bits of pimiento, carrots, green peppers, cherries and other warm colors. Make use of such nourishing ingredients as canned chicken, and other canned meats, and such fish as canned shrimps, lobster, crabmeat and tuna. Vary your dressings, according to the ingredients in the salad, remembering that roquefort cheese dressing is particularly good with a salad of greens, and that lime juice is a delicious addition to a French dressing when used with a fruit salad.

Here are two gay winter salads and a seasonable dressing:

Posy Salad: Arrange alternate slices of orange and canned peaches in petal form in a bed of lettuce. Combine equal quantities of chopped dates and chopped salted peanuts. Moisten with mayonnaise, form into balls and place in the center of each posy. Chop candied ginger fine and make a thin border around the date ball. Serve with cream mayonnaise to which a little chopped pimiento and green pepper has been added.

Chicken and Fruit Salad: Marinate two 6-ounce cans of chicken in French dressing for an hour. Add two-thirds cup canned grapefruit pulp, two-thirds cup canned diced pineapple and one-half cup nuts. Moisten with mayonnaise. Serve in popover or cream puff shells. This serves eight persons.*

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

Good citizenship requires safe driving. As a good citizen of your city, you should help to solve the traffic problem for two reasons. One is that you can never know how soon some personal friend, or perhaps some member of your own family may meet with injury or death in a preventable accident.

And the other is that, as a citizen, perhaps a leader in industry, it is your job to assist in making both industry and public life more efficient and less wasteful. Accidents are one of the biggest leaks in every large city, town, village, hamlet, and community today.

Improper speed, driving on the wrong side of the road, "cutting in" and making left turns without signaling were primary factors in automobile accidents studied by the state highway patrol in 1934, according to an analysis of patrol records just published.

The analysis shows that 86 percent of the drivers involved in accidents were physically fit to drive, and that 85 per cent of the automobiles were mechanically fit to be driven. Intoxicating liquor figured as a contributing cause in about 8 per cent of all accidents studied.

Auto License Bill Signed

With the signing of the motor vehicle license fee bill last week by Governor Olson, refunding of approximately $500,000 to 200,000 motorists who already had obtained their license will begin after May 1.

May 1 is set in the law as the final date on which licenses may be paid without penalty.

The average overpayment by the 200,000 auto owners who on the basis of the 1932 fees is about $2.50, Mike Holm, secretary of the state, said.

"Please urge the 500,000 motorist who have yet to get their 1935 license tags to do it right now," Holm said. "There are only a few business days left to do this, and it means superhuman work on the part of the license bureau staff."

New rate books were sent out throughout the state when the bill was signed.

Livestock Grading Law

The weighing and grading bill, providing for state supervision and regulation of weighing and grading livesock at all concentrated points, stockyards and slaughtering houses, became law Saturday with the signature of Governer Floyd B. Olson. The act in addition provides for the licensing and bonding of all livestock buyers, under the new law, are required to file bonds of $2,000 with the secretary of state.

Plant Shade Trees Now

Cities and towns througout the Red River Valley are being urged by T. M. McCall, Northwest School and Station horticulturist, to formulate definite long time civic beautification programs with a view, not only of obtaining the greatest returns from temporary relief labor, but to insure maximum beautification results. Such projects may include street tree planting and maintenance, improvement of parks and waterfronts.

Many of the fast growing tress, such as box elder, cottonwood and willow, which were used as street trees in the original planting of town sites are now past maturity and should be replaced with more permanent species. These should include the American elm, green ash, hackberry, baswood or tree type Chinese elm. Evergreens do not make desireable street trees. Since but few cities have ordinances regarding species to use, it is highly desirable for property owners to cooperate with city officials.

Let us plant a few trees in Holt this year.

Bought Local Milk Business

Gilbert Sanoden has bought out the city milk route and dairy business from Thorval Kolden and started on Sunday to deliver milk to his customers. Included in the deal were the equipment used by Kolden and two good milch cows.

Walter H. Quist, state game warden from Thief River Falls states that the deer are moving down thru the farm community from their winter feeding grounds in the eastern timbered country He says the deer and game birds came through the winter in excellent condition.

Mr. and Mrs. Christ Engen attended a silver wedding on Good Friday given for Mr. and Mrs. William Engen at Argyle. It was a surprise party and was attended by all of Mr. and Mrs. Engens' children. Rev. E. Anderson of Viking gave a talk and Mrs. Anderson played the wedding march.

The honored couple were presented with a very beautiful set of silver from their friends and pieces to match from their children.

Change Train Schedule

Assessors Hold Meeting

Marshall county assessors convened at the court house in Warren yesterday forenoon for the annual school of instruction given by the Minnesota Tax Commission. There are 60 assessors in the county. The purpose of the school is to help make assessment more uniform in all parts of the state.

Pioneer Woman Called

Mrs. Izaak Garfve, pioneer farm woman of the community west of Holt, passed away at her home on Tuesday evening. Funeral services were held for her from the Free Mission church at Newfolden yesterday afternoon. Rev. Thv. Myhrer officiated.

Attended Conference

Rev. and Mrs. L. M. Redal left on Wednesday for Crookston to attend the Northern Minnesota District Pastors conference held there yesterday and today. They also visited relatives at Grand Forks.

The Weather

The weather here the past week has been sort of dark and gloomy. Easter Sunday was nice and warm and Monday and Tues day winds were drying up the ground so that it was getting ready for seeding. Wednesday it clouded over and started to rain and kept drizzling all day. Early yesterday morning it set in to rain steady and soaked up everything in general.

Wm. Mehrkens reports that he has bought the farm on which he lives and that he has rented a quarter section from Arthur and Paul Hoffman.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Carlson of Crookston spent Sunday at the Mrs. L. Wegge and Edgar Wegge home. Mrs. L. Wegge accompanied them to Crookston to stay for a while.

Farms Increase In County

Marshall County has 680 more farms this year than in 1930, according to preliminary figures for the recent census of agirculture issued by C. W. Bouvette of Hallock, supervisor of the Census for the Ninth Congressional district.

In 1930 Marshall county was reported to have 2,308 farms while the recent census lists Marshall county as having 2,988 farms. The figures clearly show "the back to the land" movement which has been in progress during the depression.

Only one township in Marshall county is listed as having less farms in 1935 than in 1930, this township being Moose River, which dropped from 33 farms in 1930 to 32 farms in 1935. Three villages also showed decreases in the number of farms, these being Holt, Alvarado and Oslo. Warren with four farms within its boundaries, remained stationary, there also being four farms listed in 1930.

Vega township has the largest number of farms of any township in the county with 115 farms listed. In 1930 Vega had an even 90 farms, this making a gain of 25 farms in five years. Oak Park township is the only other township in the county with more than 100 farms, this township having 109 farms in 1935 while five years ago there were 101 farms in operation in the township.

Holt township has 78 farms in the 1935 listing. Holt village has 10 farms within its boundaries. The number of farms in the following townships are: Excell, 88 farms; East Valley, 42; Mud Lake 24; Newfolden 93; New Solum, 95 and Agdar, 54.

Concerning Cookies

A COOKY, every child agrees,
Is best when eaten as you please—
At four o'clock, or half past ten—
It really doesn't matter when.
A cooky, too, should overflow
With plums and cherries in a row,
And never plain—though grown-ups say
They're better for a child that way.
But grown-up folks were seldom small;
They do not understand at all,
For if they were as children are,
They'd know about a cooky jar!
—Susan Adger Williams.

And now that the school season is in full swing again, it's important to know about a cooky jar. They needn't be plain, these cookies, when they can be filled with delicious canned fruits which are healthful and enticing.

Two Good Kinds

Scotch Peach Cookies: Cream one-half cup shortening and one-half cup sugar, then add one well-beaten egg. Make one-third cup peach puree by pressing canned peaches, fruit and syrup, through a sieve. Add to the first mixture. Add the following ingredients: one teaspoon baking powder, one-fourth teaspoon soda and a few grains of salt. Then add one cup of quick-cooking oatmeal. Chill. Drop by small spoonfuls on a greased baking sheet. Leave two inches between cookies. Bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees, for about ten minutes. This makes about four dozen cookies.

Mincemeat Cookies: Cream one cup shortening and one and one-half cups sugar; then add two well-beaten eggs. Add one cup canned mincemeat, then add the following sifted, dry ingredients: three cups pastry flour, three teaspoons baking powder and a few grains of salt. Drop by small spoonfuls on a greased sheet, leaving plenty of space between cookies. Bake in a moderate oven, 375 degrees, for about twenty minutes. This makes seven dozen cookies.*

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, "Penelope," in an effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. At a baseball game a ball strikes ten-year-old Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for her when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is also won over. Nance's criminal record outweighs Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary. Lanny visits her and Nance persuades her to smuggle out a letter, which a confederate of Nance steals. Nance escapes, although shot, and goes to Lanny's apartment. From one of the men in the boat on which the girl escaped McNamara learns that Nance's real name is Penelope Gatlin. He also discovers that Penelope Gatlin is heiress to $750,000.

"She had leased the house Gatlin gave her in the divorce settlement, and about two years ago, when the lease expired and the old tenants departed, she come down here to have the place renovated and secure a new tenant. It was only then that she heard of Gatlin's death. She came to this bank, with her husband, making inquiries about Gatlin's estate, and tried hard to get control of it, but she was out of luck. That's how we located the heir."

"What were the conditions of the trust?"

"The income was to be permitted to accumulate and be reinvested and the child was to have two hundred and fifty dollars a month until her eighteenth birthday, when the total income from the trust was to be turned over to her. She can never touch the principal, however, although Gatlin did provide that she might have up to ten thousand dollars of it at any one time if, in the judgment of the trustee, the emergency requiring such withdrawal was deemed good and sufficient. Gatlin had faith that the real estate, if held long enough, would appreciate tremendously—and it has. The trust is now worth three-quarters of a million and the income is close to twenty thousand a year."

"You say Penelope Gatlin has a checking account also?"

"Yes. We deposit the income from the trust semi-annually, in her account."

"Has she ever asked for an emergency withdrawal of ten thousand dollars?"

"No."

"Is her checking account active?"

"Not very. The cashier was speaking to me about it less than two weeks ago. She draws checks sporadically. Her checking account has interested us considerably for the past two years, because her monthly statement and dead checks have all been returned by the post office. With the exception of about a dozen checks made out to local merchants and probably in payment of her bills, Miss Gatlin's checks have all been in favor of one Ella Cates, of San Francisco. We traced the Cates woman down through the indorsements on the checks, but she stated she didn't know Miss Gatlin's address; that Miss Gatlin visited her occasionally, wrote out checks and asked her to cash them for her at the local grocery store or drug store. These people stated that Ella Cates never received the money at once, but that they collected the checks for her and then gave her the money. I don't like the looks of this, Chief."

"I'll soon find out all about it," McNamara promised. "And I know where Penelope Gatlin is—only I'm not going to tell you now. Would you mind letting me look over her old bank statements and the dead checks?"

The banker readily granted him the privilege, and McNamara went through the checks carefully, noting those drawn in favor of Ella Cates. The last one drawn was in favor of a man named Hugh P. Taylor, in sum of five thousand dollars, and deposited by him to the credit of his account in the Federal Trust company of San Francisco.

"I have all the information I want, with this exception." He drew forth one of the rogue's gallery photographs made at the central station by the police photographer. "Is that Penelope Gatlin?"

"That's the girl, Chief. Is she in trouble with the police?"

Dan McNamara laughed. "Not at all. She's the sweetest little thing on earth. The only trouble she's been in is that she's been lost. Amnesia. Can't remember who she is or anything about her past life. Has several aliases she uses at will."

"How interesting—and how sad."

"Neither interesting nor sad—to me. We handle lots of cases like this. They're curable. You'll be good enough to regard this interview as strictly confidential, of course. It would be very embarrassing for the girl if news of her unfortunate predicament should leak out, for, of course, after her mind has been restored to its normal functions, she will have no memory of the period in which she has been lost. I know a doctor that will fix her up in jig time."

"And after he's done that," the banker suggested, "have a plastic surgeon fix up her nose. She used to be as lovely as a violet."

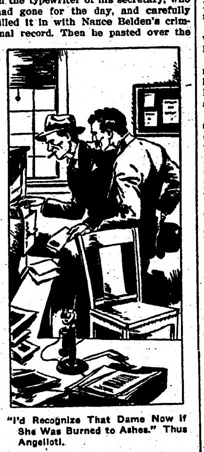
"Sorry about the nose," McNamara lied, "but I've had the best plastic surgeons in town examine it and there's no hope." He held out his hand. "Thanks for your courtesy. You've been a great help. Meanwhile, don't send out any more of those bank statements and dead checks. Mum's the word."

Back in San Francisco, McNamara went directly to the city prison and looked over the blotter to see what strange fish his men had brought in during his absence.

He found a woman, an old offender, booked for drunkenness, and ordered her sent to his office. When she arrived he locked the door, and fingerprinted her on the appropriate card, after which he lectured her on the error of her ways. Then he went upstairs to the identification bureau and asked the filing clerk to have pointed out to him the filing cabinets containing criminal records for the years 1914-15 and 1916.

He was searching for a face that was photographed on his remarkable memory, and at last he found it. It was that of a young woman, black-haired and with a "saddle" nose, but not quite so badly deformed as Nance Belden's nor did the contour of the face resemble Nance Belden's. However, since the original of that photograph had, to the chief's knowledge, been dead six months, he decided it would do. He slipped this record into his breast pocket and went back to his office. Here he carefully removed the three photographs from the card to which they were pasted in a row across the top. Below the row of photographs appeared the typewritten criminal history of the subject and in appropriate spaces on the reverse of the card appeared the subject's fingerprints.

McNamara picked up the fresh card, upon the reverse of which he had fingerprinted the woman who at times drank too much. He placed this card in the typewriter of his secretary, who had gone for the day, and carefully filled it in with Nance Belden's criminal record. Then he pasted over the top of this record the three photographs of the dead woman he had taken from the old files, carefully burned all the evidence of the substitution, went upstairs and handed the record to the clerk, who replaced it in the files.



"I'd Recognize That Dame Now If She Was Burned to Ashes." Thus Angelloti.

Promptly at six-thirty a knock sounded on his door, and to his hearty "come," Messrs. P. Flynn and A. Angelloti entered.

"I sent for you two boys to tell you in no uncertain terms to lay off Miss Rebecca Lanning," the chief began. "However, I owe it to you to tell you why. Miss Lanning is a friend of mine of long standing, and I know she is a worthy and dependable woman and absolutely truthful. She isn't interested in this girl, Nance Belden. It happened this way. I regarded that girl as a nut, see—and I haven't any confidence in the bone that does our medico-legal work. So I took Nance up to see Dr. Stephen Burt. Miss Lanning is his nurse. She was very kind to the girl—very understanding—and the Belden brat got stuck on her. She has an affection complex, understand."

Flynn and Angelloti had had to listen, many a time and oft, to Dan McNamara's dissertations on complexes in prisoners. They nodded languidly now.

"Apparently," the chief continued, "Nance hasn't any friends. The poor lonely kid remembered Miss Lanning, so she wrote and asked her to visit her in the pen—and now the warden swears she smuggled out of San Quentin a letter with Nance's plan of escape. Well, maybe she did, but if she did, Miss Lanning didn't know it.

"Now, when the Belden girl came to Miss Lanning's home she realized she couldn't harbor her. Within a minute after the girl entered, Miss Lanning had me on the phone.

"'I've just heard a thump out in the hall,' says she. 'I think the girl's fainted. Better let me put her to bed, Chief, and have Doctor Burt come over to bandage her wound; then the ambulance can call for her in the morning.'

"I thought that was a good idea. When she came back Nance was just going out of the door. Miss Lanning tried to stop her, but her boy friends were still waiting, and grabbed her and beat it. The trouble was that Miss Lanning thought the girl was unconscious but Nance heard her and beat it. Now it's up to you two to find her."

"How long have you known Miss Lanning?"

"Quite a while," McNamara lied.

"Well, even if she is a friend of yours, Chief, she's no clinging vine."

"Well, leave her alone from now on and don't waste your time watching her house. The Belden devil won't come back there again. Another thing. We have criminals loose in our midst who are more important than a poor nut of a girl that only swiped a mess of silk stockings, so don't get excited and waste much time. That will be all, boys."

Outside of Chief McNamara's office door, Detective Sergeants Flynn and Angelloti looked at each other meaningly.

"He's up to his old tricks, Amadeo."

"Always feeling sorry for the under dog, Pat. He makes me sick."

"I'll bet a month's salary he knows where the Belden girl is this minute."

"I'm not quitting such a hot scent, Pat."

"We'll just split that two hundred and fifty-dollar reward—and see how the chief likes it. That old Lanny girl warned us to step softly or she'd have us broke, didn't she? Well, where does she get her drag with the old man?"

A. Angelloti jumped to the natural conclusion of his kind. "She's got something on him, I suppose."

"Sure she has. She knows he knows where she's hid the body."

"We've got to see the Belden girl's photograph and thumb prints and Bertillon measurements. They're in the upper office."

They went up to the identification bureau, called for the record of Nance Belden and studied it for a couple of minutes.

"I'd recognize that dame now if she was burned to ashes." Thus Angelloti.

Flynn drew his partner into a corner. "The girl was wounded. We know that from the guard that shot her and we're sure of it after looking at the blood in that speedboat."

"If she'd bled that much all by herself she'd never have gotten ashore under her own power, Pat. I'm inclined to think one of the crew got hit, too."

"There's hope for the dagoes yet, my boy. You're right. It stands to reason some doctor fixed them up. Now, then, what doctor?"

"Dr. Stephen Burt," Angelloti decided.

"It stands to reason that if this Doctor Burt dressed their wounds last night he'll call on his patients every day until they're out of danger. If we catch him at his dirty work there ought to be a little something in this on the side, Amadeo."

P. Flynn thought that a thousand each would be a very modest sum to charge Stephen Burt for their silence—very modest.

An hour later they pulled up in front of Stephen's house, and behind a coupe parked at the curb. Flynn, circling around it, noticed a red cross on the radiator.

They circled the block and returned, to park at the lower edge of the block. At a quarter past eight they saw Stephen come out, bag in hand, enter his coupe, and drive away. So they followed him and came, in time, to Dan McNamara's house, into which they saw him enter, as they rolled slowly past.

"He had a latch key. He didn't ring the bell. An' no lights in the front o' the house," Angelloti cried excitedly. "Drive back, Pat, and I'll get the number."

"That house," Flynn informed him dramatically, "is the habitat of His Royal Highness, Daniel McNamara, Chief of Police of San Francisco. I always knew he was a fox, but I never suspected he was fool enough to hide an escaped convict in his own house."

Angelloti was excited, but like all smart Italians he was not impulsive except when he was in a fight, or angry. "This pinch will keep several nights, because some o' these birds ain't in no condition to be moved. This situation is ticklish an' requires calm an' mature deliberation."

"Maybe you're right at that, Amadeo. Well, we'll stick round a while."

They stuck around half an hour before Doctor Burt came out, and drove away. "Drop off an' watch the house," Flynn suggested to his partner, "an' I'll follow his nibs. I'll be back later."

He trailed Stephen Burt to the latter's home and saw him pull up across the sidewalk, preparatory to opening the door of his garage. So Flynn rolled past, circled, picked up Angelloti at the end of the block.

"After you an' the doc left, I went up to the corner drug store and phoned the chief's house, but nobody answered," Angelloti confided. "The gang's in there, all right."

"I'm as nervous as an old woman," Flynn confessed. "I wish I had a drink."

TO BE CONTINUED.

Dinosaurs Suffered Injuries

The dinosaurs that lived millions of years ago sometimes suffered broken bones, as scientists point out from skeletal remains.

Leave It to Plastic Surgeon

Modern Science Makes It Easy to Escape Disfigurement; Literal Truth in the Statement, "They're Building Faces These Days."

When a man sustains injuries to his face, the result of an accident on the road or at his job, there is now no need for him to be constantly reminded of his misfortune. The skill of the plastic surgeon offers a way of escape from disfigurement. Ten months ago a twelve-year-old Buckinghamshire girl received terrible facial injuries in an accident, but today she is well and happy, for modern surgery has given her, literally, a new face.

In another case a young society girl, dragged unconscious from a blazing car, was so severely burned about the face that to her nearest friends she was unrecognizable. After recuperation, she was treated by a plastic surgeon. He began by making her new eyelids, nostrils, and ears from grafts taken from her legs. Then he removed a portion of her scalp and fashioned a new pair of eyebrows; while to her back he went for a skin flap to build a new upper lip. Finally, he filled in the gaps in her face with grafts from her arms.

Today this girl, as a result of twenty-five separate grafts, is considered even better looking than before her accident.

Besides offering a release from the scars of industry and accident, plastic surgery is taking its place in the treatment of disease. When Dr. Vilray Blair, a leading practitioner, was confronted with a case of cancer centered in a man's jaw he boldly removed the malignant tumor. His next step was to transplant flesh from the man's chest and restore his features in their entirety. A plaster cast of the patient's face, modeled before the original operation, was used as a guide.

No damage is suffered by the parts of the body whence the raw material for such operations is taken. The chest, most prolific source of supply in a man, will yield a continual harvest, until he reaches his dotage, and actually grows stronger with each transference. The secret of successful graftings consists in replanting the material at a pressure consistent with that which normally encircles the face. Otherwise, with air pressure on the chest lower than on the face, the perfect fit may be lacking.

Condemned, it seemed, to a lifelong term of poker-face despair, the nerve controlling his facial muscles having been shattered, another man was set free by a plastic surgeon's skill in replanting a nerve from his thigh on the site of the old one in his face. It began to function after thirty days, and now he is able again to laugh with the best.

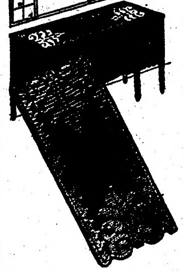
There is practically no form of body-juggling too intricate for these experts. With exquisite precision, the plastic surgeon takes a rib and remoulds it into a jaw-bone, or "waltzes" off a roll of skin of the thickness of tissue from his patient's back, or borrows a cartilage from a leg to rebuild a nose.

His latest triumph is to regraft a fingernail, taking the middle third of a good one, and planting it in the nailless finger, where it soon grows to full size. Meantime, the old nail regains its shape.

Through the first practical treatise on plastic surgery appeared so long ago as 1597, written by Tagliacozzi, modern applications of the science owe their origin to the World war. On behalf of the thousands who were shot in the face, many of the nation's greatest surgeons set to work to heal their scars. At the Hospital for Facial Injuries at Sidcup, famed for the pioneering work of Sir Harold Gillies, 19,000 men have been given new faces.—London Tit-Bits.

MANY USES FOR CROCHET SCARF

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



Here is a very practical scarf that is easy to make and costs so little. It's made with the large filet stitch, is very lacy and can be used as a decorative cover on many articles in the home. When using a number 5 steel crochet hook and number 15 cotton, the scarf will measure about 12 by 34 inches when finished. Buffet set and chair set to match this scarf were shown a few weeks ago.

This package, No. 707, contains sufficient cream color Mountain Craft crochet cotton to complete the scarf, also instructions, black and white diagram for easy counting of meshes. and a crochet hook. Write our crochet department inclosing 40 cents for the complete package, No. 707, or send 10 cents if you want the instruction sheet with diagram only.

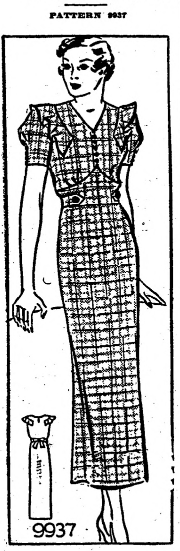
RUFFLES CONFER CHARM ON DRESS

PATTERN 9937



When you want to look particularly appealing, above your morning cup of coffee, slip into a gay little house frock like the one sketched. Piquant little ruffles climb over the shoulders of its nicely modeled bodice and emphasize its cunning, slightly puffed sleeves. The skirt, slim as a reed, sweeps up to a chic point in the bodice and there's a pert little bow at the back that adjusts the waistline to your figure. The dress may be made sleeveless, if you prefer, with the ruffles forming pretty caps over the tops of the arms. But whichever way you make it, choose a nice cotton fabric—checked, flowered, or plain.

Pattern 9937 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 16 requires 3⅜ yards 36-inch fabric.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth street, New York.

WORK RELIEF ACT SIGNED BY PRESIDENT—A. F. OF L. BACKS THE TIRE STRIKE.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, deeply tanned and in good physical condition, was landed at Jacksonville, Fla., by the destroyer Farragut and started immediately for New York, to attend the funeral of his cousin, Warren Delano Robbins, after which he returned to Washington. Aboard his special train the President read through the $4,880,000,000 work relief bill as it was finally passed by both houses of congress, called for pen and ink and appended his signature to the largest appropriation measure ever enacted by congress. There were some features of it, agreed upon in the senate and house conference, which he did not like, but he said those who had studied it recommended its approval.

Harry Hopkins

The President at once signed two allocations from the amount appropriated. The first was $125,000,000 to the administrator of the Federal Emergency Relief administratoin, in order that relief might not stop. The second was $30,000,000 for continuation of the emergency conservation work.

In Washington the Republicans and some others discussed with dissatisfaction the probability that Harry L. Hopkins, relief administrator, would be the President's chief assistant in carrying out the vast work relief program.

"It is extremely fortunate for Mr. Hopkins that, if he is going to be the lord high distributor of the money, the bill is so drawn that he won't have to be confirmed by the senate," said Senator Vandenberg of Michigan.

Representative Snell of New York, the Republican leader in the house, declared it was "a sad commentary that a man like Hopkins," who had termed critics of work-relief methods "d—n dumb," should "appear to be in line to be clothed with extraordinary grants of power over the greatest sum of money ever appropriated."

As fixed up in conference, the act does not require senate confirmation of administrators already in the employ of the government. That includes Hopkins, Secretary Ickes, and Rexford G. Tugwell, all considered probabilities as members of the board that will administer the work relief fund.

Work for a total of 3,500,000 destitute persons is contemplated under the relief bill. Officials estimate 2,500,000 of these already are working for relief payments. According to plans, these are to be absorbed by the new work program on July 1, leaving jobs to be found for 1,000,000 more. It was said that soil erosion control projects and rural electrification would be relied on heavily at the outset of the drive to increase the number at work. Later, officials said, the present work-relief program will be "pruned" to provide labor for other projects.

Robert C. Fechner, director of the civilian conservation corps, announced that his organization hoped to increase its strength from 370,000 to 600,000 men under the terms of the bill. He said this would call for the establishment of about 900 camps and the assignment of 10,000 corps commanders.

SOCIALISTS and Catholics of Danzig combined to give Chancellor Hitler of Germany his first big setback. In the free city's parliamentary election the Nazis polled 60.6 per cent of the total vote, but failed to get the two-thirds majority of the seats that would give them complete control of parliament. Hitler and his followers had hoped Danzig would follow the lead of the Saar and return to the reich, and this may yet be the result, for the population of the city is more than 90 per cent German. But the Nazis were defeated in their attempt to lay the groundwork for the suppression of all other political parties and the establishment of a dictatorship. Presumably their next step will be to vote for a change in the Free City's constitution and to ask the League of Nations, which administers the city through a commissioner, to permit a plebiscite on return to the reich. This was openly discussed by Paul Joseph Goebbels, German propaganda minister, during the hot campaign in Danzig carried on by the Nazis. Poland was enraged by the violent methods of the Hitlerites in the campaign and demanded an apology from Berlin. The whole affair endangered the new friendship between Poland and Germany, and probably this was not mourned by the other nations of Europe.

WITH the rubber workers in the tire plants of Akron, Ohio, ready to quit their jobs, the American Federation of Labor pledged itself to finance the strike, which President Green declared would be a crucial attempt by organized labor to force on industry the collective bargaining provisions of the NRA. He announced his organization would "support the rubber workers of Akron for as long a time as may be necessary."

Green definitely marked out the tire strike as a test of labor's ability to make good on the promises held out to it by the New Deal. The national labor relations board, he pointed out, had ordered the big tire companies, Goodyear, Goodrich, and Firestone, to allow their workers to elect representatives for collective bargaining. The companies have refused and labor now takes into its own hands the enforcement of the NLRB decision, Green argued.

Tire manufacturers, on the other side, recognize the threatened strike as a key move in the New Deal program for regimentation of labor and industry and are fighting back. Firestone expected to go before the District of Columbia Supreme court and ask a permanent injunction against the NLRB and NRA meddling in its labor situation.

FOLLOWING the example set by Hitler, Austria has decided to disregard the limitations on its military strength set by the treaty of St. Germain and to increase its armed forces immediately. The official communique issued by Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg did not say how big the army would be or whether conscription would be restored. The annual spring parade of the army at the Ringstrasse in Vienna was revived, and the troops appeared in fine new uniforms.

HIS health broken down by his strenuous tour of European capitals to induce the various nations to line up with Great Britain's peace plan, Captain Anthony Eden has been sent to bed by his physicians for some weeks. This is disconcerting to Sir John Simon and the other statesmen, for they are deprived of the company of the young lord privy seal at the tri-power conference at Stresa, Italy, in which Britain, France and Italy hope to agree on a security system for the continent. Eden was not able to make a personal report on his trip at the cabinet meeting but did tell Simon in detail what he had learned. Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald was directed by the cabinet to accompany Sir John to the Stresa conference when word was received that Premier Flandin of France and Premier Mussolini of Italy would be there. The great music hall in the Villa Borromeo on Isola Bella, half a mile out in Lake Maggiore was prepared for the statesmen, and they were to be completely isolated there with their experts and secretaries, no one else being allowed to approach the island.

Important decisions regarding Britain's scheme for a general collective security system for Europe, the league's attitude toward German rearmament, the proposed revision of treaties affecting Austria, Hungary and Bulgaria, and the possibility of getting Germany to return to the league were expected to be made at Stresa.
